The baptismal rite thus symbolizes the highest and most essential revelations of Christianity, those which exhibit God and Christ in the most winning and endearing relations, those which are adapted to conciliate the soul to the most grateful and affectionate faith. The solemn and lofty words, the beautiful symbolic element, and the impressive symbolic action, combine with the preached word to write the Gospel on the heart more effectually than words alone could do.

It is perhaps not too much to say that as the missionary is said to turn the nations from heathens or godless sinners to disciples, so he may be said by baptism to introduce them to the realization of the benefits of those unspeakable relations which are indicated by the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. But neither in the one case nor the other, must we understand the words to contradict that other utterance of sacred writ that, "Paul planteth, and Apollos watereth, but God giveth the increase," or that other scripture in which Paul tells us that he abstained from baptizing lest he should be accused of baptizing into his own name.

(3.) To make disciples of the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, does not complete the work of the missionary; nor would his commission be so complete as it now is, were its terms to stop here. "Teaching them," the Saviour adds, "to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The missionary is not, for prudential or any other reasons, to presume to adulterate or dilute the inculcations of his Master, by the omission or distortion of a single precept. The commands of Christ must be taught, and obedience to them insisted on in all their length and breadth and height, and in all the amplitude of their proportions. The Gospel system is a perfect whole from which nothing can be spared without marring its symmetry and completeness, and impairing its adaptation to secure the full well-being of man, illumination in his mind, rectitude in his heart, and piety, righteousness, and beneficence in his life. It is true that there is a gradation among the doctrines and precepts of Christianity, and that therefore the well-instructed missionary will have scope for wisdom, with respect to the relative frequency and fullness with which he will dwell on the various parts of the grand system, and he may employ a wise discretion with regard to the order in which he brings forward, both the truths to be believed, and the duties to be practiced. But never may he dare to treat any part of the Gospel inculcations as obsolete or inapplicable to mankind, either in form or spirit, in any circumstances or in any state of society. The commission absolutely requires that the missionary should teach all the nations to observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded.

For convenience sake, I have considered the missionary's commission much as if it presented discipling the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Sacred Three, and teaching them to observe all the Redeemer's commands, as not only distinct, but separable duties. But the form of the commission is not favorable to such a view of the matter. The whole commission is given as a unity, the component parts of which must not be torn as under. The Master does not say, disciple the nations—then baptize them—and then teach them my precepts; but the form of his command is, Disciple the nations, baptizing, teaching them. This, if I mistake not, represents that the work of discipling the nations is completed, only when baptism with adapted doctrinal instruction has committed them to the Father, Son, and Spirit, and the teaching of the precepts of Christ has made them scholars in the Christian virtues. The commission does nothing less than to enjoin it upon the missionary to get the Gospel in its substantial entireness into the mind, heart, and whole character of all the nations.

(3.) I will now pass to the consideration of the precious promise which forms the close of the Saviour's charge to the eleven: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The great missionary charge of our Lord was fitly introduced by the solemn announcement of his omnipotent authority in heaven and on earth. And when he ascended to the right hand of God, they could think of him enthroned there as reigning with absolute sway, and superintending from his throne of divine majesty the work committed to them of evangelizing the world. Thus to conceive of their Master must have been to the eleven and must still be to their successors a source of unspeakable encouragement. But this concluding precious promise is of still more encouraging import. It tells them that the actual presence of their dear Lord, with his transcendent might, was not to be confined to the heavens-that as while on earth he was still in heaven, so now while enthroned in heaven, he was to be still on earth-still with them, his apostles, his missionaries, during the whole progress of their labors from the first conversion of a sinner by their ministry, to the grand consummation at the judgmentday. The uniform doctrine of the Scriptures respecting the Saviour's person, requires us to understand this promise literally, of a presence of Christ with his disciples on earth as real as his presence in heaven, or his corporeal presence on earth when all their senses assured them that he was with them.

This presence of Christ was and is to be without intermission. "I am with you alway," (all the days is the strict version of the original.) These are words which plainly promise a perpetual presence. There would be no day of darkness and gloom, which his presence would not irradiate and cheer.

This presence, too, is to continue to the end of the world, that is, to the end of the whole period of duration in which there may be trials, and dangers, and difficulties. At the close of that period the missionary work—the regeneration—will be completed; this earth's probation will be at an end, and the faithful servants will all enter into the joy of their Lord in his consummated kingdom. That in the coming state of glory they would enjoy the presence of Christ, it was not necessary to promise them. They needed to be told, and by his own blessed lips, that amid all the evils, and toils, and conflicts of the present state, his benignant presence would be with them.

The eleven must have felt that the promise was a most gracious one, full of sweetest comfort. Even if the promise had not been intended to assure them of ample aid, they would expect to be cheered by the sympathizing presence of Him that loved them and loved the world, even to the death of the cross. But beyond all question, the promise carried with it the assurance that in their stupendous enterprise they were not to labor alone, but to enjoy the cooperation of the almighty energies of their Lord. They could, then, go to their work with the certainty of success, and the certainty of a cheer, and courage, and refreshing from the presence of Christ, which no earthly or satanic violence or terror could overcome. The gracious promise and the more gracious fulfillment was the exceeding great treasure and strength of their souls—and must be the same to all on whom their mantle falls, to the end of time.

Indulge me now in some concluding remarks:

1. The risen Saviour's charge to the eleven and their successors, exhibits the missionary work as the grandest and most stupendous enterprise ever proposed to man. It contemplates nothing less sublime than a universal and complete moral revolution in the hearts and lives of all the nations of mankind. Compared with this, an enterprise for the political enfranchisement of all men of all countries would be as nothing-as nothing in importance, and as nothing in difficulty. In comparison with the missionary enterprise, a plan for the disenthrallment of all the slaves on earth-worthily as such a scheme for liberty exalts the mind and swells the heart-dwindles into insignificance. Could there be an enterprise which would bring relief from all the physical evil, the inconceivable mass of suffering which crushes mankind and fills the world with wailing, compared with the enterprise enjoined on his disciples by Jesus Christ in this charge, that beneficent enterprise, though disburthening and gladdening so many woe-begone sufferers, would not be worthy of mention. And-if I may be allowed an impossible supposition-could missionary toil succeed in the universal conversion of mankind, all the physical woe of the world remaining unalleviated, the supreme good of the race would be achieved. Assuredly so; for the universal regeneration and sanctification of the race is for it a good by the side of which all other good is infinitely small. But in truth all other good follows in the train of moral good, as a magnificent retinue of nobles follow in the train of a mighty king.

The deliberations of a missionary society are, therefore, of greater importance and of higher dignity than the deliberations of a parliament or congress, or the cabinet of a king or president. The deliberations ations of such a society, however humble in this world's estimation, have a more immediate bearing on the highest well-being of man. In this light, it is no presumption for a missionary board to regard its functions; nor can we perceive how we can worthily plan and act for the world's conversion unless we duly appreciate the greatness, the awfulness, and the transcendent majesty of the work committed to us.

2. The charge of our Lord does not present the conversion of the nations as a consummation devoutly to be wished, but of doubtful accomplishment. Commanding it to be done, he contemplates the result as certain. He therefore requires us to expect it with unfaltering confidence. And though missionaries may have frequent occasion to exclaim, Who bath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? ultimately, and in the long run, they, as well as their Master, will see of the travail of their souls and be satisfied. If we witness ever so sad reverses, we ought to regard them as only eddies in the current of the river that still flows on, or at worst, as but turns in which the stream only seems to be rushing backward towards its source; while in truth neither eddy nor regressive turn hinders at all the safe progress of the river to the ocean in which it is to spread into a boundless expanse.

3. The certainty of success in the missionary enterprise does not nullify or abate the necessity for the use of the utmost diligence and wisdom in the prosecution of the work. Since "God has still wrought by means e'er since he made the world," the enterprise will succeed only because diligence and wisdom will be employed; but if these should fail, then the hope of success would be blasted. We must, then, find in the certainty of success, not an argument for remissness, nor rash folly of any kind, but encouragement to engage all our mental powers and active energies in the work under the genial and inspiring light and warmth of heaven-authorized assurance.

(4. It must be of great importance for us all to study the divine record in all that it has to say of the missionary enterprise and the topics connected with it.

It is not enough for us to read the record in the mere cursory way which leaves no definite knowledge in the mind, but we should seek to ascertain precisely the import of the promises and commands of the sacred word. We shall, then, have in our minds a firm foundation for our plans, our doings, and our expectations. We shall, then, too, stand ready to give to all inquirers, a reason satisfactory at least to our own minds, for prosecuting an enterprise which is so apt to appear to the sages of this world wild and chimerical!

In this study of the Scriptures, we shall not only find satisfaction for the cool understanding, but a mighty impulse for the heart, the most inspiring imagery for the imagination, and a divine fire for the sensibilities of the soul. The whole inward being in all its departments will here find its appropriate food and stimulus. It will be, of course, true of devout students of God's word, who enter into the missionary work, impelled by God's promises and Christ's commands, that on all fit occasions the "Spirit of the Lord will come upon them," and they will realize the strength which the occasion demands. They may be the least self-reliant of men, but they will feel within them the potency of a divine call and mission.

5. As the different generations of missionaries appear upon the stage of action, they will naturally feel interested, not only to study the sacred record of commands and promises, but to survey the history of the progress which their predecessors have under God's providential control made in the work. Such a survey will tend in a very high degree to invigorate their faith. We sometimes think that if like the original eleven, we could have contemplated the person of the Redeemer, could have witnessed his miracles and heard his discourses from his own lips, we should possess advantages far superior to any which we at this day enjoy. These thoughts are natural, but though they contain a fragment of truth, they are as a whole delusive. The advantage in very important respects is altogether on our side. When the disciples were, all told, an insignificant handful, an insignificance aggravated by their social unimportance, what an astounding task was imposed on them when they were ordered to go convert the world! It was as if they had been told to go to all the graveyards of earth and call upon all the dead to come forth to life. For mankind in their countless millions were, as to their moral condition, like Ezekiel's valley of dry bones, very many and very dry. It is truly marvellous that they had the faith and courage even to begin the work. But we now behold before us Christendom as the fruit of the labors of those eleven humble men and their humble successors. We know as certain matter of fact, that in a few centuries their labors revolutionized the professed religion of the vast Roman Empire, and placed a succession of professed Christians on the throne of the Cæsars. We know that as a result of the labors of humble missionaries, millions in Asia and Africa, and Europe, embraced the Christian name and transmitted it as an inheritance to their children. We know that now, however many and great may be the corruptions of Christianity, it is the professed religion of the dominant nations of the globe. The history of Christianity, its origin, its revolutions, its progress, its influence, now claims the attention of the learned as constituting the mightiest and most curious mass of important facts that the records of the past contain. Instead of a handful of unschooled peasants, the ministers of Christianity now count by armies of learned men, many of them eloquent orators, or celebrated writers. Christian missions are now achieving revolutions in various parts of the earth. In Burmah, in Hindustan, in China, in the Turkish Empire, they are loosening the foundations of Paganism and Mohammedanism. In the islands of the Pacific, nations have been born in a day. Africa is almost surrounded by a cordon of mission stations, and missionary zeal is braving the dangers of its central recesses to prepare the way for an invasion of Christian faith. Cheering signs foretoken the reformation of corrupted Christian sects. It seems as if the walls which shut in the nations round about from the incursion of Christian missionaries, were all over the earth crumbling down, and that in the night visions the Christian Church might behold representatives of all the nations, like the man of Macedonia, each crying, Come over into our land and help us.

Had a benignant angel, like the Michael of Milton, purged the eyes of the eleven "with euphrasy and rue," and exhibited in a visioned future what is now authentic history, and especially presented to their anointed sight the innumerous hosts of genuine saints, who, regenerated through their labors, have blessed the earth, and are now ornaments of heaven, no words could tell the inspiration they would have felt firing their hearts from such a prophetic spectacle. No doubt they would naturally have felt a mightier courage to toil, to suffer, and to die in the enterprise committed to them. They would, then, have had the prophetic words they already knew made more sure, and have enjoyed the double experience and power of prophets and evangelists. But the visioned future is always more or less shadowy, and does not place us in so favorable a stand-point as the recorded facts of history and the well-known facts of the present living world. The position we occupy is a position of high privilege and of corresponding obligation. The original missionaries and the primitive Church grasped the prophetic promises and the Saviour's command, and gloriously inaugurated the great work to be done. They have handed down to us their responsibility, and we see that the light which beams from the historic past and the luminous present, greatly enhances our obligations to prosecute the work with our utmost energies. Missionary boards ought to be actuated by a holy zeal, "eating them up," in this transcendent enterprise. They should not hesitate to press into the service all the resources of the Church. The conversion of the world is the great duty of Christendom, and we should all hold ourselves, our friends, and all our possessions at the command of Christ for this great work, whether we remain at home, or, like Paul, traverse the globe. Deep and expansive pity for the nations still overwhelmed with moral ruin, would cause no home interest to suffer, while it would speedily make the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose, and earth resemble heaven in character and glory.

6. In the wars of ancient Israel, while some were called to go forth to encounter the dangers of the battle-field, others were to stay by the stuff, or to remain at home. But those who were exempted from the warrior's perils, were to give their brethren their cordial sympathy and all possible aid. It would have been mean and base for them to shrink from any toil, self-sacrifice, or contribution, by which they might succor or cheer their brethren, in arms in the common cause. So, in the great missionary enterprise, while missionaries go forth, to disciple the nations, braving all hardships and perils, the great mass of the church remain at home. The Holy Ghost sends missionaries forth, as he sent forth Barnabas and Saul-the Church, too, like the church of Antioch, should send them forth with prayers, benedictions, and loving pledges of sympathy and support. The missionary ought to feel assured that the great united heart of the Church beats in unison with the strong pulsations of his own heart, and that no aid will be lacking which fraternal love can supply. It was beautiful when some of Dr. Kane's men, perishing in one of their excursions from the ship, felt certain that their brave captain would send or bring them-all possible succor, and beautiful, too, that the event justified their confidence, that the sympathy of the faithful, noble heart never faltered, that it defied all dangers, conquered impossibilities, and brought the succor they were sure would come. The Serampore missionaries, going forth to the then untried toils and hazards of the Indian mission, with playful seriousness alluding to a descent into one of the deep mines of their native Britain, said: "Brethren, if we go down into the shaft, you must hold the rope." These simple words proved words of power, and there was in word and action a cordial response. Let us all cherish such a spirit, so that the idea of our proper part in the conversion of the world, the sense of the ties that connect us with our missionary brethren, shall flow right out of the burning, melting love of our hearts. Let it show itself in fervent prayer, liberal contributions, and the constant marching into the field of well-appointed reinforcements of zealous missionaries. The felt responsibility, the zeal, the toil, the self-sacrifice should be equal of those who go down into the shaft, and those who hold the rope. So only, the heart of the Church will be in harmony with the risen Saviour's final charge.

7. Permit me, brethren, to say that as an association we are bound by special obligations to ardent zeal and strenuous labors in this great enterprise. It is our professed aim to keep ourselves clear of all possible suspicion of complicity with any form of iniquity. For a circle of Christian men to be zealous against connivance with caste and polygamy and slavery—and at the same time lukewarm laggards in the general onslaught on the kingdom of Satan, sluggish in the holy war for the abolition of the grievous bondage in which that grim despot holds countless millions of mankind-this-abhorrent as in the heart's just estimation, caste and polygamy, and slavery are-this, I say, were to strain out a gnat and swallow a camel. Only such selfsacrificing love to God and souls as actuated Christ can embalm and sanctify reformatory zeal, and give it the stamp of genuine gold, or the fragrance of a heavenly origin. Claiming to be earnest Christian abolitionists, if we should be cold of heart and slack of hand in missionary effort, we ought in all reason to conclude that, compared with ourselves, the Pharisees whom Christ so sternly denounced were good saints. Genuine Christian abolitionists love the oppressed and their cause more than any other class of men can do; but they must and will assign to the work of the world's conversion the paramount importance. And the chief horror of slavery to them must be that it is a terrific whirlpool that swallows up and destroys immortal souls. The special obligation that rests on us as anti-slavery men, I trust we shall accept and welcome with our whole hearts, and bend our energies to the work with a will, and in a manner worthy of the position we occupy.

8. Finally, my brethren, let us refresh and strengthen our souls and invigorate our faith and courage by ever and anon calling to mind the gracious promise of our ascended Lord: Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world. He himself has emphasized this promise. He meant that we should remember it. He meant that its divine light should illuminate our pathway and make it shine more and more unto the perfect day. We may glory even in our weakness that the strength of Christ may rest upon us. In him the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty to God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. "The little one shall become a thousand, and the small one a strong nation. I the Lord will hasten it in its time."

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

(MAGAZINE.)

This Magazine will be sent, gratuitously, to the Missionaries of the Association. And—if they shall request—to Life Members; to all Clergymen who take up collections for the Association, or present its claims to their people, through the Monthly Concert or otherwise; to Superintendents of Sabbath Schools; to College Libraries; to Theological Seminaries; to Societies of Inquiry on Missions; and to every donor who does not prefer to take it as a subscriber, and contributes, in a year, not less than ten dollars.

APPLICATIONS.

By feeble congregations, for aid in supporting the Gospel, should contain the following particulars, namely:

The name of the Church; its evangelical character; whether slaveholders and persons engaged in the manufacture, sale, or use of intoxicating drinks, are excluded from its communion; the number of communicants, and the average number of attendants on public worship; its prospects of early ability to sustain the ministry of the Gospel, without foreign aid : whether it has been aided by any other missionary society, and if it has been, for what length of time; the denomination and size of congregations immediately contiguous, with the distance to their places of worship; the total amount of salary which the applicants propose to make up; the portion of that salary which they pledge for the given time, and the arrangements that are made for scouring it; whether aid is expected from any other source; and the least amount that will suffice from this Society; whether the minister, for whom a commission is desired, is the pastor of the Church, or, if not, whether any arrangements are made or contemplated in the course of the year, for his becoming such. These statements should be signed by the trustees and deacons or elders, or by a commit tee of the congregation, and confirmed by the certificates of two or more clergymen acquainted with the facts. Also,

The name and post-office address of the minister whose services they desire to secure; whether he is a resident of the place in which he preaches, and is engaged in any other calling than that of the ministry; his credentials; and the certificates of two or more ministers of known standing, as to his general character for piety, zeal, and acceptableness as a minister of the Gospel.

Where the ecclesiastical body with which a church is connected has a "Committee of Missions," to act in their behalf, this Committee are suitable persons to certify the statements of the Church, the standing of the minister, and his prospects of usefulness in the place where his services are desired; and the application may be sent to them for their endorsement and recommendation.

Applications, after being properly endorsed and recommended, should be addressed to this office.

As a general rule, the appropriations of the American Missionary Association are for twelve months from the date of the application; at the end of which, if further aid be needed, a new application must be made, containing all the particulars above stated, and endorsed and recommended in like manner. And each congregation applying for renewed aid, should furnish, in addition to other testimonials, the certificate of the missionary, that they have fulfilled their previous pledges for his support.

THE Fifteenth Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association, convened in the Broadway Congregational Church, Norwich, Ct., Wednesday, October 23d, 1861, at 3 o'clock P.M.

The President, Rev. David Thurston, of Maine, called the meeting to order. The exercises were opened by reading the 72d Psalm, and part of the 22d chapter of Jeremiah, and prayer by the President.

Rev. J. A. R. Rogers was appointed Assistant Recording Secretary, The minutes of the last annual meeting were read by the Secretary, Rev. Henry Belden, and approved.

Mr. Lewis Tappan, Treasurer, read his Annual Report, with the Auditor's Certificate. The report was accepted.

Rev. Geo. Whipple, Secretary of the Foreign Department, read an abstract of the Report of the Executive Committee for that department, and Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, an abstract of the Report of the Home Department; these were accepted and laid on the table.

The Treasurer, Lewis Tappan, presented a letter from Mr. Amos Townsend, of New-Haven, expressing his interest and continued confidence in the Association, and regret at his inability to attend its Annual Meeting.

The hymn commencing - 1 State State Commencing of A small

"Blow ye the trumpet, blow was then sung.

A Business Committee was appointed, consisting of Rev. J. C. Webster, of Hopkinton, Mass.; Mr. S. Higgins, of Norwich, Ct.; Rev. J. Brewer, of Stockbridge, Mass.; Mr. Lewis Tappan, of New-York; and Mr. Samuel Deming, of Farmington, Ct.

The following Committee on Nominations was appointed, namely, Mr. Arthur Tappan, of New-Haven, Ct. : Mr. D. Huntington, of Norwich, Ct.: Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, of New-York: Dr. John R. Lee, of Yonkers, N. Y.: and Mr. Isaac Hutchins, of West-Killingly, Ct.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The Association assembled in the church at half-past seven o'clock, and listened to a sermon from Rev. Dr. Boynton, of Cincinnati, from Luke 4:18: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised "

Adjourned till half-past eight o'clock to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY MORNING.

At half-past eight o'clock the Association assembled and engaged in devotional exercises for one hour, after which they proceeded to business.

The minutes of Wednesday were read and approved.

The President read a letter from Rev. David Root, D.D., expressing his deep interest in the Association and its principles, and regretting his inability to be present at this meeting.

The Chairman of the Business Committee presented a Report contained in a series of Resolutions.

The Report was accepted and laid upon the table, to be taken up for discussion.

The Committee on Nominations reported as follows:

J. O. Bennett and R. R. Graves, of New-York, were appointed an Auditing Committee for the coming year.

Rev. Mr. Whipple stated that the committees appointed at the last Annual Meeting "to bring before the churches the desirableness of their adopting Missionaries in the Home and Foreign fields," and "to report as to the propriety and possibility of sending families into different parts of the unevangelized world, etc.," had not deemed it judicious to urge the matter on the attention of the churches, in the peculiar state of things, during the past year, and recommended that the committees be continued.

Rev. Mr. Brewer, Rev. Mr. Starbuck, Rev. Mr. Foster, Rev. Mr. Whipple, Mr. L. Tappan, Dr. Peters, of Tennessee, Rev. Mr. Rogers, and Rev. Mr. Jocelyn, discussed the subject at length.

The subjects were again referred to the same committees, as folto bring before the churches the desirableness of their adopting Missionaries in the Home and Foreign field, communicating directly with them, and pledging to give them a support, through the agency of this Association.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to investigate and report at the next Annual Meeting, as to the propriety and possibility of sending families into different parts of the unevangelized world, in the expectation that, by their own labors, they will support themselves, while, by their words and lives, they may do much to elevate and Christianize the people.

Rev. W. B. Brown, Rev. E. H. Fairchild, and Rev. George Whipple constituted the Committee. The first of the series of the Resolutions offered by the Committee was then taken up and passed, as follows:

Resolved, That every revolving year since the formation of this Association has strengthened the conviction that the distinctive principles upon which it was founded are in accordance with the Holy Scriptures, our national Declaration of Independence, and the wants of a dying world.

Mr. Lewis Tappan moved that the thanks of the American Missionary Association be presented to the Rev. Dr. C. B. Boynton, of Cincinnati, for the sermon preached before the Annual Meeting, and that a copy of it be requested for publication. The motion was carried.

The two following resolutions were then adopted:

Resolved, That the events of the past year give striking evidence of the propriety of the stand early taken by the Association, and undersatingly adhered to, with respect to American slavery, which has been truly and emphatically denominated our country's sin," and which is now, as it has been from the foundation of the government, one of the greatest obstacles to the conversion of men, both in this country and in heathen lands.

Resolved, That we render most heartfelt and grateful thanks to God for the continued favor He has bestowed upon our various missions, and the schools connected with them, for the revivals of religion that have taken place, for the souls that have been converted, and for the present prosperity of so many of these missions, both Home and

Rev. C. C. Starbuck, of Jamaica, W. I., Rev. Henry Belden, Rev. Mr. Foster, and Rev. Mr. Whipple discussed the next resolution, which was adopted.

Resolved, That we particularly and gratefully recognize the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the Island of Jamaica, of which our mission has been a participant, and the large accessions made to the churches connected with the mission, while we devoutly implore that the dews of heavenly grace may descend in still greater abundance upon all our missions and missionary schools.

AFTERNOON SESSION, (THURSDAY.)

Mr. Arthur Tappan, Vice-President, called the Association to order. Prayer by Rev. J. C. Webster.

The President then took the chair.

The Secretary for the Foreign Department presented a report on resolutions, adopted by the Executive Committee, in relation to the relinquishment of its general operations in the North-West. Report approved.

The Secretary of the Home Department read a letter from Rev. J. E. Roy, Secretary of the Western Agency.

The following resolution was read and passed.

Resolved, That we thankfully acknowledge the aid furnished by the friends of the Association, in their contributions to the treasury during the last year, when so many calls have been made by the country, and so much pecuniary distress has been experienced in many parts of the land; and we earnestly implore the friends of missions, while so much is done to overthrow the rebellion now raging in our land against the government, the rights of mas, and the cause of civil and religious liberty, to do all in their power, by sustaining missions planted under God by their offerings, and watered by their prayers to abate and overcome the rebellion of men against God their Maker.

The next resolution was read, amended, and passed, as follows:

Resolved. That we have just cause to mourn over the sins of this whole nation, which have provoked the Almighty to permit the existing rebellion against the government; and pray that by our timely repentance, and bringing forth fruits meet for repentance, his just displeasure may be averted, and peace, founded upon righteousness, justice, and equity, may soon be restored to this afflicted people.

The next resolution was read and discussed, until the business meeting adjourned, to meet after public services in the church.

At three o'clock, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated. The President and Rev. Dr. Boynton officiated.

A collection was taken up, in aid of Mrs. Peake, who is teaching the colored people at Fortress Monroe.

At the close of the sacramental services, the Association again proceeded to business.

The resolutions were again under discussion, and the following were

Resolved, That we cordially sympathize with our national government in its determination to put down the rebellion, a rebellion that imperils the missionary cause, our civil and religious liberties, and the precious rights of four millions of enslaved countrymen; that we carnestly hope that the government may have the wisdom and the intepidity to end the war humanely and economically by the speedy destruction of the real rebel—slavery; that we believe that a permanent and beneficent peace can not be reasonably expected, or the favor of God insured, until the cause of the war is removed, and liberty be proclaimed throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof; and that it behoves us to pray that the country may be thus safely and triumphantly carried through this crisis, and, to use the language of His Excellency the Governor of Connecticut, "in such a manner as shall forever check the spirit of anarchy, bring peace to a distracted people, and preserve, strengthen, and perpetuate our National Union."

Resolved, That we recognize the overruling providence of God, in opening to the Association a new field of Missionary labor, in the State of Virginia, among the eighteen hundred colored brethren rescued from slavery, and now entitled to, if not fully ejoying the advantages of, compensated labor, intellectual and religious instruction, and the protection of government; and that, if the means shall be furnished, it is the purpose of the Association to follow the armies of the United States with faithful missionaries and teachers, until the light of knowledge and revelation shall be poured upon the darkened minds of the emancipated, and they become the freemen of the Lord.

and teachers, until the light of knowledge and revelation shall be poured upon me darkened minds of the emancipated, and they become the freemen of the Lord.

Resolved, That we deem it essential to the prosperity of the missionary cause, and of all institutions for the promotion of education, true religion, and general intelligence and virtue, that the pulpit and the press should do all they can to purify and elevate public sentiment, inculcate national and universal liberty, and bring the truths of the Gospel to bear upon the legislature, judiciary, and people of the States and nation, until they shall be universally recognized and obeyed.

Resolved, That we recommend to all the friends of missions, and of their country, to pray without ceasing, that the cause of Missions may be prospered, and the blessings of good government, of universal liberty, of sound knowledge, and of pure Christianity, may be the happy portion of the people of this and all lands.

Resolved, That among the most alarming features of the times is, the atheistic sentiment, far too prevalent both in Church and State, that slavery, the admitted cause of our present war, and the great curse of our land, is to be abolished, not so much by appealing to man on the ground of its hostility to God and his own deepest moral convictions, as by leaving it to the operation of commercial, selfish interests, and prudential considerations.

Resolved, That as the permanence of our government depends upon the sound morality of the people of our country, and as our political as well as commercial and social morality can not reasonably be expected to take upon itself a higher type than our ecclesiastical, while eschewing all political union between Church and State, we, nevertheless, believe it to be a most sacred duty, which the Church owes the State, to treat slaveholding like all other sin, as a disciplinable offense, and utterly incompatible with

The reports of the Secretaries and Treasurer were referred to the Executive Committee, to be published with the proceedings of the annual meeting.

The Association adjourned to meet in the evening, in the body of the house.

EVENING SESSION.

The Association met in the Broadway Church in the evening, where, after devotional exercises, addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Boynton, Rev. Mr. Foster, Rev. Mr. Gulliver, Rev. Mr. Starbuck, from Jamaica, and Rev. Mr. Rogers, from Kentucky.

Rev. Mr. Gulliver said, that although his church, as well as himself, indorsed the American Board, and did not agree in all points with this Association, yet they were happy to welcome them here as men and Christians. The speaker then described his own feelings on slavery and the war. Especially was he opposed to the practice of using our army and navy as slave-hunters.

The following resolutions were then passed:

Resolved. That the blessing of God, granted to the labors of our missionaries at home and abroad, calls upon us for renewed and increased efforts to give the Gospel to all, in all parts of the world, who are destitute of it.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be given to the choir, for their valuable aid in the meetings of the Association.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be given to the Trustees of the Broadway Church, to the Committee of Arrangements, and to the people of Norwich, for their hospitality in entertaining the members and friends of the Association.

The Association then resolved to adjourn, to meet next year, at the call of the Executive Committee.

The President made a few remarks, and closed the meeting with prayer and the benediction.

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

In presenting their Fifteenth Annual Report, the Executive Committee think they may congratulate the Association on the fact that the necessity of a labored vindication of its peculiar position on the subject of slavery is continually diminishing. The providence of God is developing the importance of that position, and the indispensable necessity of an impartial application of its underlying principles, with a rapidity and power heretofore hardly conceived of. The spirit of slavery, its innate and inextinguishable hostility to the precepts of the Gospel, and to every thing partaking of the spirit of Christ, is fast becoming so manifest, that every right-minded Christian must see that to baptize it with the name of Christian is to call darkness light; and every attempt to fraternize with it in Christian organization, is an effort to unite good with evil, Christ and Belial.

The doctrine that slaveholding, the holding of men in slavery, is sinful, and should be treated as any and every other sin, in proportion to its enormity, seems destined soon to be received, and acted on, by the American churches, as it already is by Christendom elsewhere. The danger now is, that in the straits into which we have been driven, the revulsion may be so great, that Christians will forget the true missionary spirit with which they should labor for its overthrow. We shall all now need, more than ever, to be largely imbued with the spirit of Christ, who died for those whose sins he condemned—the spirit of every true missionary who labors with sacrifice, that the heathen, whose superstitions and debasements he hates, may be redeemed from their iniquities, and prepared for communion with God here, and for heaven hereafter.

From the report of the Treasurer, it will be seen that the close of the financial year finds the Society heavily in debt. The occasion of this should be fully understood. The receipts for the previous year had been $56,000. The Executive Committee arranged their appropriations for the several missions at a time when the country seemed to be entering upon a career of unusual prosperity. The harvests of the previous season had generally been abundant, business was prosperous, and confidence in the future was almost universal. Encouraged by the action of the Annual Meeting at Syracuse, last year, and believing that the best interest of the work demanded it, the Committee made their appropriations for the year larger than they have been able to meet.

The causes that have so disastrously affected our income need not now be enumerated. The Committee feel it to be due, however, to the friends of the Association to express their confidence that the result has not arisen from any considerable loss of interest in the missionary work, nor any diminution whatever in attachment to the principles of the Association. If one cause may be named as more influential than any other, the Committee think it is that the friends of the Association being every where the friends of the enslaved, and feeling confident that the rebellion of the slaveholding States would be overruled by Providence for the overthrow of slavery, have felt called upon to contribute to the utmost of their ability for the vigorous support of the Government.

The Committee have to report the death of two persons connected with the labors in the Foreign field—Rev. E. P. Rogers, who died at Cape Palmas, West-Africa, and Mrs. Douglass, of the Jamaica Mission.

During the year, two hundred and twenty life-members have been added to the Association, making the present aggregate three thousand and twenty. Six missionaries and assistant missionaries have joined their missions for the first time, seven have returned to them after a short absence. One newly-appointed missionary is waiting for the means of being sent out, and six have left their mission, generally by direction of their physician, and for the recovery of health, four of whom are now in this country. One has resigned.

The number of Foreign Missions is six, and the number of stations and out-stations is twenty-eight, beside nine native towns, where the Gospel is preached statedly. The number of laborers connected with the Foreign field within the year has been fifty-nine.

Rev. H. H. Hinman, M.D., for a number of years a pastor in Illinois, and Mrs. S. Hinman, formerly a teacher in the Ojibue Mission, sailed from New-York for the Mendi Mission, November 1st, and arrived there in December. Rev. John White, formerly connected with the Mission, returned there in January, and Mr. and Mrs. Burton, who arrived in this country just before our last Annual Meeting, having left Africa on account of ill-health, returned there in Angust.

December 6th, 1860, Mr. Classin wrote from Good Hope, that in the opinion of the Mission, the condition of Mrs. Dodge's health demanded such a change as could be obtained only by visiting America. The case was thought to be too urgent to admit of their waiting to consult the Executive Committee. They were therefore advised to come by the first opportunity, which they did, arriving at Boston March 13th. The health of both improved during their passage home, and has continued to do so since. Mr. Dodge, with the approval of the Executive Committee, has accepted the invitation of the Church at Wendell, Mass., and assumed the charge of it for a year.

There has been for some time one missionary under appointment for this mission; but though much needed there, he must be retained in this country until the financial condition of the Association is improved. It does not appear to the Committee wise to increase the expenditure of the Association, by sending out new laborers, when it is so difficult to provide for the support of those already in the field.

Good Hope Station.

The little church at this station was organized with five members, December 24th, 1858. God has smiled upon and blessed it. But few communion-seasons have since passed without additions to it of those making profession of their faith in Christ. It now numbers thirty-two members, six more than last year, one having died, and four been dismissed. Mr. Dodge had the pastoral charge of the church until he left the mission. During this time he wrote that there was a good state of feeling in the church relative to individual duty, and a desire to see God's work revive more and more, until sinners could be heard crying out: "What must I do to be saved?" Mr. Hinman acted as pastor to the church for a short time after Mr. Dodge's return to this country. One native member was added to the church during this time, and several were inquiring what they should do to be saved, some of whom were thought to have very correct ideas of Christianity. Mr. Hinman was much pleased with the good attention and apparent interest of the people in religious instruction. The prayer-meetings, Sunday and Tuesday evenings, were well attended. Since Mr. Hinman's removal to Salem Hill, Mr. White has been its acting pastor.

In February, Mr. White wrote:

"The influence of the church is most blessed and extensive in a community where vice and wickedness are fearfully prevalent. From the earnest, humble spirit of prayer which seems to be poured out upon the members, we have reason to hope that God designs to make it a still greater blessing to the community, and to Africa."

The members were at that time trying to raise money enough to support, unaided, a missionary teacher among their neighbors. In May, after reporting the addition of two native members, at their last previous communion season, he said there was considerable seriousness among the people, and he thought two or three were almost persuaded to become Christians. "Thus," he adds, "we have some things to encourage us, yet there are other things to discourage. There is a great deal of worldliness, indifference, and superstition, and rum continues to exert its baleful influence." It is sad to be obliged to record the fact that influences sent out from this Christian land are among those most potent for evil in Africa. Almost every vessel that goes from this country to Africa, even though carrying missionaries, goes more or less laden with rum.

The monthly concert of prayer for the conversion of the world, and a weekly prayer meeting, were constantly kept up, and public prayer was daily offered in the chapel. The members of the church have continually before them the duty of giving according to their ability to promote the cause of Christ, and of engaging in personal efforts for the salvation of sinners and the spread of the Gospel over their own country.

The School at Good Hope has been the greater part of the time under the care of Mrs. Winship, formerly Miss McIntosh. The number of scholars is limited to twenty-five. Their improvement is satisfactory. A few of them are connected with the church, and some others profess faith in Christ. One of the number, a lovely Christian girl of about fourteen years, has gone to her heavenly rest. She had been in the mission-school about seven years. "In her prayers," said Mr. Burton, "she seemed to feel that she was talking with God." "She was a living Christian."

The remarkable acquaintance of some of these scholars, with the sacred Scriptures, combined with the fact that they appear to love God, furnishes ground for the hope that they may become useful in spreading the light of divine truth over Africa.

A theological class of three members was formed by Mr. White in April, in which he was greatly interested. An additional member was afterward added from the Boom Falls station. The young men were much interested in the study, and seemed to be improving rapidly. He had confidence in their piety and much hope of their future usefulness. The young men were employed in missionary labor, and a system of itinerating was established, by which Christ was preached in most of the neighboring towns around.*

Never, said Mr. White, have I seen greater interest manifested to hear the Gospel than at present.

The Sabbath-school at Good Hope has numbered about seventy scholars. The out-school, under the charge of a native, was prospering. The out-station at Victoria has continued under the charge of Rev. Geo. N. Jowett, a native African. He preaches to a small congregation, and has a school of seventeen scholars, and a Sunday-school under his care.

Avery Station.

But little has been done toward the permanent organization of this station. Mr. Winship, under whose immediate supervision it was commenced, has visited it occasionally from Good Hope, but the care of the latter station, and the duties of business agent, that have devolved on him in consequence of the absence of Mr. Burton, have been so great as to prevent his doing much at Avery. The views expressed by the Mission last year in relation to the attack made on this station have been confirmed. The desire of the chiefs for its speedy and permanent establishment does not appear to have diminished, and there is no likelihood of its being again disturbed. Soon after his return to the mission last winter, Mr. White wrote:

"The new station has already accomplished a great amount of good. Its influence in favor of peace is the most manifest and extensive. The people of Mahno (the noarest town to the station) say to those who would persuade them to continue the war: 'We can't will for war now. The mission lives here, and we must will for peace.' This is gratifying, and leads us to anticipate what will be the blessed results, when the holy and peaceful spirit of Christianity shall prevail, among all these rude and barbarous tribes."

At the latest advices, Mr. Winship, who had been so dangerously sick that his life was despaired of, was recovering. Mr. Burton has returned to Good Hope, and we hope soon to hear that Mr. Winship has recommenced his labor at Avery station.

Boom Falls Station. Mo Tappan.

Assuitable dwelling-house has been completed at this station during the year, for the use of Mr. Claffin, who continues his efforts to systematize the Mendi language, the euphonic changes of which, he says, are very numerous. He preaches Sabbath morning in a native town to a Mendi congregation; at the mission at 11 o'clock; and in the P.M. to an English audience.

At the meeting of the Mendi Mission Association held at Mo Tappan in January, Mr. Miles was examined and approved as a preacher of the Gospel. He conducts the Sabbath morning exercises at the station.

The statistics of the church at Mo Tappan have not been reported. At the close of the last year, the number of members was twenty-four. Some, we believe, have been dismissed to unite in a new church to be organized at Salem Hill. During a part of the year the native members of the church, by their monthly contributions, have sustained a young man, educated at the mission, as a teacher in one of the neighboring native towns.

Nineteen children are sustained at Mo Tappan, by the contributions of the friends of missions. Some others are connected with the school. The reports concerning the school, and the Sabbath-school are favorable.

Mrs. Mair returned to the station in May, after an absence of more than a year. The improvement of the scholars connected with the mission seemed to her marked and gratifying. Mrs. Cooper had taught a school for a short time in a native town, Mo Bungo. Its king or chief has always appeared friendly to the mission and gave a very comfortable house in his own yard, for the school. Another school was commenced about the same time, at Tissana, taught by Mr. Leigh, a native teacher, examined and approved by the mission. Mr. D. W. During, of Sierra Leone, has also been accepted by the mission, and stationed at Gbap, on the Boom river.

Salem Hill.

The location of this station is regarded by some as the finest in the Mission, and the opportunities which it affords for preaching the Gospel in a large number of native towns are rarely surpassed. Rev. J. S. Brooks, under whose labors it was commenced, resigned his connection with the Mission in February, and Dr. Hinman took charge of the station in April. The Committee regret that, owing to the straitened condition of our treesury, they were constrained to arrest the completion of the Mission-House, after having expended a large sum upon it, and it now stands unfinished. The station suffers great inconvenience from want of a good mission-building.

Dr. Hinman commenced labor at Salem Hill, through an interpreter, immediately after his arrival. He is much pleased with his location. On the Sabbath, besides preaching once through an interpreter, and once in English, with other exercises, at the station, he usually preaches once in a neighboring native town, and as often as possible, through the week, visits and preaches in other native towns. The people, he says, often listen with deep and eager attention, and occasionally utter exclamations of astonishment, as they hear, for the first time, of the Saviour's love, and of what he has done and suffered for them.

ENLARGEMENT DEMANDED.

One of the purposes of the Mission this year has been the location of Christian native teachers, who could be sustained by small salaries in native towns, in many of which schools are desired by the chiefs. These, it was thought, would furnish nuclei for Sabbath congregations, and be an economical and efficient way of enlarging the operation of the Mission. Religious instruction was to predominate in the schools, and the teacher be an evangelist in the town and among the people. A commencement was made in this direction, when the Committee were constrained, by the state of our funds, to arrest it. There were several towns in which efforts of this kind were desired, in some of which the chiefs had avowed their readiness to erect all needed buildings; and to require of the people the observance of the Sabbath, if the Mission would furnish them a teacher. The plan seems to have been favorable to the employment of native Christian talent in the missionary work. Its failure diminishes the confidence of the natives in the desire of Christians to do them good.

The meeting of the Mendi Mission Association in January, in view of the great importance of enlarging the work in the interior, resolved, subject to the approval of the Executive Committee, to locate a new station, fifty or one hundred miles eastward of Mo Tappan. In their letter to the Committee, they said:

"We all regard this as a movement in the right direction. It becomes more and more evident, that if we can reach the high lands of the interior, we shall find the climate more healthful, and the people more hopeful subjects of missionary labor than the people near the coast. The time has evidently come to make the effort, and it is for the churches at home to say whether we shall go on, pushing our way into the country, and preaching the Gospel to its untold millions, or whether we shall remain where we are, among the mangroves of the coast, where the difficulties in the way of missionary labor are, and eyer must be, greater than they are in the interior."

The same letter brought the following resolution, passed also by the Mendi Mission Association, and the accompanying appeal:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this Association, we regard this whole country, in which we labor, as open and as inviting, for missionary effort, as we can ever expect it will be, without the direct influence of the Gospel, and that present indications are such as to loudly call for increased means to carry on the work of the Lord among this people.

"Now, in the name of my associates, and by their authority, I would appeal to the friends of this Mission in America, and ask that increased means may be placed at our disposal, that we may carry the word of life to all the perishing thousands by whom we are surrounded. The time has evidently come for enlarging this work. The minds of the people are prepared now to welcome missionaries, and listen with attention to the word of God. Besides, the circumstances of the country are such, that if means are withheld, and we neglect to supply existing openings, the door so providentially opened may be closed. In almost every important place in the country the traders are establishing factories. The comparative security of life and property—the result of missionary influence—encourages them to go forward. It is important that the Gospel should go before trade, not follow it, so that its blessed influence shall form and lead public sentiment, and exercise a restraining power upon the trade which is sure to follow."

The Mission desire much to enlist the native Christians in labor for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. The following resolution was passed at the meeting just referred to, and a committee was appointed to devise some simple plan for carrying out among the churches the objects therein set forth:

"Resolved, That we fully recognize the fact that the Church of Christ is intrusted with the great work of evangelizing the world, and that we believe each member, however humble, to be under the most solemn obligations to make known 'the unsearchable riches of Christ' to dying men; and furthermore, that we, as pastors and ministers, regard it as among our chief duties to press this truth oftener and more fully upon the attention of the members of our churches, and to devise the best means whereby the whole Church may become a band of missionaries, laboring individually, and as a whole, for the advancement of the Redeemer's glory and the salvation of souls."

It can hardly be necessary for the Committee to add any thing to these arguments and appeals for Africa. That the people, in their ignorance, superstition, and guilt, need the blessed influences of the Gospel of peace and love is admitted by all; that the field is every where open to the missionary of the cross must be believed on the unanimous testimony of missionaries and travelers; that that country has peculiar claims on the Christians of the United States, such as no other heathen nation has-claims grown strong in the blood of her children-Christian abolitionists can have no heart to deny. To them, and to all, she appeals, by the wrongs she has endured, that, for the love of Christ and the honor of the Christian religion, they would send her the messengers of Christ and the institutions of religion, in obedience to his command, and as a feeble effort to compensate her for injuries received from those who have borne the Christian name. Surely this is no time to withhold our hand or slacken our efforts in behalf of Africa.

"Who will engage with heart and hand?

"Then let not the friends of Christ at home forget his interests in this part of his vineyard, and the work to which they have put their hand, for soon the night cometh when no man can work."

Rev. E. P. Rogers, whose death has been alluded to, always felt a lively interest in the Association, especially in its work in Africa; and at several different times communicated to us his earnest desire to be permitted to labor as a missionary there. For many years this cherished wish of his heart was providentially defeated. At length, however, in 1860, the difficulties that had lain in his way began to be removed, and he informed us that he thought he saw the way open, at least to visit the long desired land, and spend a limited time in labor as a Christian missionary among its inhabitants. A correspondence was immediately commenced with him with a view to secure his services while there, in behalf of the Association. We wished him to explore for us, the Yoruba country, and report relative to its climate, the number and character of its people, and their readiness to welcome Christian missionaries and the institutions of the Gospel. The Executive Committee of the Association regarded themselves as favored in being able to secure for their service a brother so well qualified and in whom such confidence was justly reposed. We expected his aid in establishing a mission in the Yoruba country.

He embarked for Africa Nov. 1, 1860, leaving behind him many warm friends, who hoped that his going was the harbinger of many blessings for Africa. Short as his life there was, these hopes were not vain.

He landed at Freetown, West-Africa, December 1. His first letters showed the joy of his heart in being permitted to visit that land, and his Christian yearnings over its people.

His second letter was dated at Liberia, Jan. 10, 1861. He had then visited the most important places of that colony, and expected soon to leave for Lagos. His letter shows a just appreciation of the missionary labor performed there, and correct views of what is needed. His soul was filled with longings in behalf of the sons and daughters of Africa. He thus wrote:

"Oh! that some of the hundreds of our people, who can well be spared from America, could teel it their duty to come here and labor in the missionary work; and in the end God will plentifully reward them. True they may fall at their post, as hundreds of Christian men and women have already done, but they may derive consolation from the thought that, if they loss their lives, they shall find them again."

Our next intelligence was, that this well-beloved brother had laid down his life that he might find it again, find it in Christ, a life eternal. He died, as he had lived, a Christian, in the full hope of a blissful immortality, and rejoicing that he had been permitted to labor for and in Africa.

* Work four hours per day for board and tuition.

This Mission suffered a severe affliction in the early part of the year, in the death of Mrs. Douglass. Mrs. Douglass joined the Mission in the summer of 1859, and died Oct. 10, 1860, after a short illness. She was a woman of rare excellence of character, and admirably adapted to the position she occupied at the Richmond school and station. She had greatly endeared herself to the pupils under her care, and done much for their spiritual improvement. Her loss is greatly felt at the mission. Her last words were: "Christ is with me; all is well."

Miss Julia E. Treat joined the Mission about the first of January. Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott returned to it in April. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. McDonald, who were newly appointed.

An interesting work of grace has been enjoyed in the island of Jamaica, of which our missions have partaken. It was preceded in many instances by an increased spirit of prayer, and an earnest seeking for the revival of God's work, and the conversion of souls. Its more marked developments first appeared in the western part of the Island, whence it spread southward and eastward. The places for religious worship were crowded; the rum-shops were closed; confessions of sin, accompanied by the most agonizing convictions, were common; lives of sin were abandoned; goods obtained unlawfully were restored; property used for wicked purposes only was destroyed; marriages among those who had been living in sinful connections were numerous; and many gave good evidence of repentance, and of belief in the Saviour.

There was mingled with the excitement that attended this work much of evil, which sometimes obscured or obliterated all favorable results; and at others was overcome by the powerful manifestations of the Spirit's influence. Some of the peculiar features of the work will appear in the reports of the stations.

Brainerd.

Rev. Mr. Starbuck took charge of this station in October last. His report is for seven months' labor. During the week of united prayer in January, the tokens of a reviving religious interest were very encouraging. The morning prayer-meetings were largely attended, and became in fact inquiring classes. In February Mr. Starbuck wrote that the revival previously prevailing in the western parishes had reached Brainerd, in both its good and its evil aspects. The churches and chapels were crowded as never before since emancipation, with no assignable cause except an increased interest in religion itself. The reformation of sinners in many of the things already alluded to, gave evidence that the work had a direct relation to practical righteousness. A few persons had suffered violent prostrations, in great bodily and mental distress, from which they were not relieved for hours. About twenty persons had professed conversion. The more intelligent and strong-minded of the congregation had been first affected, but without prostrations; and the work was then spreading among the less intelligent.

But here the work suffered interruption from influences growing out of so unusual and powerful an excitement. Bands of men and women calling themselves converters, composed in some instances of those who were themselves unconverted, went about doing good or evil, according as they were controlled by the Spirit of God or led by the spirit of superstition. One of these "bands" broke tumultuously into the chapel at Brainerd, and did much evil. The ridiculousness, and almost blasphemous nonsense of some of these orgies, reacted, however, and the apprehended evil results were in a measure prevented.

Mr. Starbuck returned to New-York with the permission of the Executive Committee, July 16th. In his report written here, he states that the condition of the churches there is very much like that of the churches in this country; that there is a proportion, as great as in most churches here, whose piety is undoubted, and whose spiritual development and excellence of life are as much above the common tone of character as that of our better Christians here. In itself, he says, their religious and mental development is exceedingly imperfect, but relatively, it will allow as favorable a judgment, perhaps, as we pass on our better church members in America.

The school at Brainerd has been under the charge of Mr. Fisher. The aggregate number of pupils is put down at 112, though the average attendance has been less than one half that number. The same causes that usually prevail where the parents are not themselves educated have prevented a more constant attendance.

For the present, Mr. Fisher will take charge of the Brainerd church; the ordained missionaries from the other stations rendering such assistance as may be needed.

Eliot.

The influence of the revival in Jamaica was more marked at Eliot than at Brainerd. Forty have been added to the church on profession, and two by letter.

A deep seriousness was manifest among the people early in January, and the religious meetings were attended with marked solemnity. The second week in January a daily morning prayer-meeting was commenced, with good results. February 20th Mr. Thompson wrote:

"The Lord is indeed with us. The prayers of God's people are being answered—such a work of grace we have never had—so universal and thorough. The most hardened and desperate cases have been reached, and they are now, like persons out for whom devils have been cast, clothed and in their right minds. They are new creatures surely, wonders of grace. The change is so great, and their ideas of religion so different from what they formerly were, they call it a new religion. One man, in the earnestness of his heart, cries out fir a new Gospel, meaning a religion that in its effects is as new as though it sprang from a new Gospel. You may judge of our great joy at such developments. The gisce of God alone has wrought the change, and to him be all the glory."

Here, as in many parts other of the island, the most agonizing confession of sin, and conviction so great as to take away bodily strength, constituted a marked feature of the work. Numerous conversions had taken place. Mr. Thompson said:

"As many as fifty, at Eliot, already think they have found pardon. God is now working in the church, so that we may expect to see greater triumphs still.

"The work among the children is most cheering. Last Sabbath there were one hundred and twenty-five in our Sunday-echool, and a most solemo day. All the children in our family, five in number, are giving pleasing evidence of a change,"

At the communion season in May, twenty-seven were received into the church. Twenty-four of these were young, and most of them connected with the Sabbath-school. Four months before, the church had solemnly renewed its covenant with God; and here were the rich fruits of the Holy Spirit's presence.

In his August report, Mr. Thompson wrote:

"We have been at Eliot nearly seventeen years. During this time we have witnessed among our people great and important changes, but nothing to equal what we have experienced the past year. It has been truly a harvest time. So great and general have been the changes that we scarcely seem the same people.

eral have been the changes that we scarcely seem the same people.

"The work of grace has spread among all classes. The openly profane and licentious have been hopefully converted, as well as those whose moral character stood much fairer. Men in middle life, and a few with gray hairs, have come, trembling and afraid, confessed their sins, and professed repentance; beside them sat children of tender years, all bathed in tears, confessing that they too were great sinners, and asking what they should do to be saved.

"Not only many of our young people, but quite a number of small children, are among those who rejoice in the hope of pardon. I have formed a class of over fitty for weekly instruction, and nearly one half of them are giving evidence of being Christians, while all have expressed themselves anxious about their spicitual state, with apparent earnestness and conviction for sin. Six of the older children have been received into the church.

"There are now twelve persons propounded to be received at the next communion, two of them are children.

"The revival has been general in its influences. The whole community has been affected more or less. The most hardened of the unconverted feel a restraint. Gross sine are not so openly indulged in. There is not that boldness in iniquity now, that was so common before.

"We have connected with the congregation about three hundred, one hundred and thirty of whom are in the Sunday-school, besides the adult class which Mrs. Thompson has, of forty or fifty. We have twelve classes, and what is most interesting, is the fact that in all the classes, except one,* there are some 'new-born souls:' to feed them with the sincere milk of the word, is most delightful work."

This station has been given up. The church there was founded by the late Rev. Charles S. Renshaw, at a time when the people were very unsettled in their religious relations; many old societies were breaking up, and new ones being formed in every part of the Island. It was then thought that Oberlin would become a center of permanent influence. After the failure of Mr. Renshaw's health, and his removal from the Mission, this station suffered frequently from the want of a resident missionary, while neighboring parishes and congregations were increasing in importance. During the vacancy that occurred just previous to the time when Mr. Penfield joined the Mission, the question of relinquishing operations there was indulged. It was thought best, however, to make another effort, under a settled pastor, and Mr. Penfield was stationed there. For a time the congregations increased; but the trial resulted in the Mission suggesting to the church and congregation to unite with other congregations, in which it was thought that all could be well accommodated. This they declined to do.

When, in the progress of the recent revival, very little fruit was witnessed here, and there was an increasing demand for labor at Providence, also under Mr. P.'s charge, the Mission unanimously approved of his removing his family to the latter place, and giving to it the greater share of his labors. It was, therefore, proposed to the church and congregation at Oberlin that they should either unite with stations under the charge of an excellent evangelical missionary near them, or retain their connection with our Mission, and receive such attention as a missionary located at a more important station could give them. They declined to take either of those courses, and soon after Mr. Penfield's removal, placed themselves under the care of a minister not in sympathy with our Mission. A portion of the church and congregation regret this movement, but their number is not large enough to control the action of the church, or to warant the expenditure that would be necessary if we should continue our operations there. The station has therefore been given up.

Providence.

On Mr. Starbuck's removal to Brainerd, this station passed under the care of Mr. Penfield. The favorable influences following the week of prayer in January were very manifest here. In February Mr. Penfield wrote that the fruits of missionary labor were being seen. Between thirty and forty had then promised to serve the Lord. The greater part of these were the children of church members.

In his report of the year's labors, August 1st, Mr. Penfield said:

"Since the first of May, forty-six have joined upon profession of their faith in Christ as their only Saviour. Several who were under the censure of the church have been restored. The experience of almost all these dear young people (for most of our recruits have been received from among the ranks of the young) was full of interest, and still continues to be.

"When I assumed the pastoral oversight of the church, the members were mainly elderly persons, many of them parents of large families. They were aroused in some manner to see their own state, and moved to earnest prayer for themselves and their unconverted children. "Many of the children agon afterward expressed their determination to serve the Lord.

"These tokens of the Lord's presence were enjoyed by us long before the first onward move of the excitement had reached this side of the Island. When at last it came, it was like a hurricane, prostrating every thing before it. Several of our young people, merely out of curiosity, went some three or four miles to the nearest meeting of 'the bands,' who were going from place to place spreading the excitement, and fell to the ground (as they alterward said) in great agony for their sins, which they now saw, as if for the first time. "They returned to Providence, scarcely knowing what had been done to them, but determined to confess their sins, both privately and publicly. These confessions implicated many in the church; and then commenced such a pouring out of their own corruption by the members of the church, as one after another arose and with strong crying and tears and deep agony of soul, confessed their heart-wanderings from God, and, in many cases, gross immorality.

wanderings from God, and, in many cases, gross immorality.

"We listened and wept hour after hour as they continued to expose their corruption and hypocrisy, until it almost seemed as if we should be obliged to disband the church. Many crimes confessed, however, were committed years before, and had been confessed to God and put away, but concealed from the church. The confession seemed at last to lift a heavy burden from off their soulir.

"All the confessions too were so full and free, and accompanied with such evident marks of true repentance and ravived love to Christ, that we could but thank God and take courage. From this time, old and young have taken hold together, and the blessing of the Lord our God has been upon us. We are still atriving to gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.

"At the communion season, in May, thirty-one were added to our number, and since then quite a number more have been received. There are about twenty still in the inquiry-class."

Chesterfield.

The additions to the church at this station have been—by letter, 1; on profession of faith, 28; and 4 were restored who had been in former years cut of—making in all 33.

Here, as elsewhere in the Mission, an unusual religious interest began to be manifest immediately after the week of prayer in January, and the congregation increased so that the chapel failed to afford it accommodation. In March, Mr. Venning wrote that the meetings continued to increase in interest until many began to give good evidence of being new creatures in Christ Jesus.

At this time the progress of the work was much hindered by the influence of native teachers, who encouraged, as if essential to religion, the extravagances which marred the work of revival. In April he wrote with more encouragement. These trials had been in a manner overruled. God was making his word effectual to the turning of some from the error of their ways.

Mr. Venning's labors at Hermitage had been much interfered with by the teaching of errorists, and many had been turned aside from the truth, seeming to regard the form of baptism, and a verbal confession of their belief in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as sufficient for salvation. A few, however, remained faithful, and at latest dates the influence of the persons alluded to seemed to be waning.

Brandon Hill.

The church at this station is under the pastoral care of Mr. Venning. The annual statement has, however, been furnished by Mr. Wilson, the teacher. Nineteen have been added to the church on profession of faith, making the whole number of members sixty. There were others in the inquiring class waiting to be received to the church. The number received was less than was at one time expected. When the number of inquirers was large, and the chapel overflowing, the "bands" coming into a neighboring parish, by means of a wild excitement drew away many who had been for only a short time attendants on religious instruction. Those who had been for a longer time in the inquiring class remained, and some of them gave evidence of a radical change.

In the American Missionary for November, a letter from Mr. Wilson, dated September 3d, was published, giving an account of the revival at Brandon Hill. Much of it is of more general application, and copious extracts are here given.

"The work is manifesting itself to have been truly of God. Now that the excitement has passed away, and the results, purged of the dross, are seen, we can judge better what kind of a work has been done. At the time when there seemed a strange mixture of good and evil, with sometimes a predominance of good, sometimes of evil; when there was such a commingling of noise and folly with prayer and devotion; when the people sometimes seemed to be seeking something higher and better, any thing to lead them nearer to God, and sometimes the most foolish things imaginable; when sometimes it appeared like a work of God, and sometimes as if Satan were let loose to use his utmost power in deluding and deceiving, we were not able to determine what the issue would be—whether it would tend to elevate the general state of religion by instilling into it more of earnestness, energy, and zeal, elements greatly wanting in the religion of Jamaica, or would displace all the sound instruction the people had ever received, by inserting worse than heathenish rites, and insisting upon the observance of the most foolish practices.

"As the excitement passed away the follies and superstitions also passed away, but not the true work of the Spirit. The fruit of that is still visible, and manifesting itself more and more. It is not strange when an ignorant becople are greatly aroused on account of their sins, and are seeking after God with all their heart, that in their blindness they should fall into crores and look for salvation in all kinds of super-titions and foolish notions. Doubtless there were many that were syakened by fear, many that were greatly frightened, thinking the 'end was at hand, but there were many, very many, really anxious about their souls, who wanted the Saviour, who deeply longed after God, and wanted to know the way to eternal life, but they knew not the way, and, groping about in the darkness, they grasped every thing they thought would do them any good; hence they ran into many errors and extravagances. But they were in earnest and honest; they were humble yet determined; they intended, if possible, to escape from destruction and gain eternal life, and God, who loves to be gracious, did not deal with them according to their folly. He was willing to bless them, to do them good and save them. He led them out of their superstitions and errors, which seem to have been swept away.

It has introduced more thought, life, ca nesures and power into their religion. The standard of religion is greatly changed. The people will not be satisfied with haptism and church connection alone. They have learned that they can be pure, that God requires it, that they may have the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and they will and do seek it; they have learned more of the efficacy and power of prayer, and they will pray more. They know more the value of a righteous life, and they will strive more to stain it.

"That the work was the work of God is manifest. The people are serving God with more earnestness and whole-heartedness, and, since the excitement passed away, we can safely say, more wisely. It is also manifest in the great change of the state of society. The people are more sober, and, as far as my observation extends, much more industrious. They are interested in higher and better pursuits. The change is a happy one in every respect, and one for which we praise God."

Richmond.

The absence of Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott from this station, and the death of Mrs. Douglass already referred to, caused a suspension of the school at Richmond during a part of the year. Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott arrived in New-York in October, 1860, in very feeble health. Their physician had instructed them that it was imperatively necessary for Mr. Wolcott's health that he should leave Jamaica for a short time, and the Mission had judged the case too pressing to warrant their waiting for the action of the Executive Committee. The Committee at once approved of their coming. They left New-York on their return to the Mission, in much improved health, April 20th. The same month Mr. Douglass wrote that the industrial school had reöpened with twenty scholars, quite a number of whom give good evidence of having been born again. The pupils of this school work four hours per day, in payment of their expenses. A dwelling-house for the teacher has been erected at Richmond.

This station has shared in the spiritual blessing bestowed on the island. The converts are connected with the church at Eliot. Mr. Douglass superintends the large Sabbath-school there, a number of the members of which have been added to the church.

Schools.

Much interest is felt by the Mission in the Christian education of the young. So important do they feel it to be, that they would prefer retrenchment in almost any other department than this. Pleas in their behalf have been sent from several of the stations. They say: "We must still depend largely on our friends at home for the support of the schools. The Mission are unanimously of the opinion that all the best interests, spiritual and temporal, of the people are so inseparably connected with the maintanance of Christian education, that I am sure they could feel very little heart to labor if the schools could not be continued."

In concluding the report of the Jamaica Mission, the Committee present the views of the Mission, given by Mr. Starbuck, believing then to be wholly just.

"The relations of Christian labor in Jamaica to the general kingdom of God are very important. A prosperous and Christian negro commonwealth in Jamaica, protected by the British crown and directed by European intelligence, will be a central force to work good results to the African race in every direction. Already, when I am asked whether emancipation has succeeded in Jamaica, I cast my eye back in thought upon the extending fields and multiplying cottages visible from the beautiful eminence of Brainerd, and knowing that this is not a singular scene, I unbesitatingly answer, Ohl yes. But the people of Jamaica are far from being secure from the retrograde tendencies to which their low moral and social development exposes them. A long course of uninterrupted Christian labor, from that race which has long cursed them, and which owes them now an ample atonement of repentant beneficence, can alone assure their future destiny. For this reason missionary labors vigorously sustained in the West-Indies were never more important than now."

OJIBUE AND OTTAWA MISSION.

GRAND TRAVERSE BAY, MICHIGAN.

Missionary.-Rev. GEO. N. SMITH.

No marked change has taken place in this Mission during the year. Mr. Smith continues to labor at the three points mentioned in our last report, namely: Northport, the Indian village of Onumuneseville, and the Head of the Harbor. The church under his care contains fifty-two members, among whom are a few whites.

At several times Mr. Smith has spoken of the deep and solemn attention given to the preached word. The presence of the Holy Spirit seems to have been felt, and a few have applied for admission to the church, but there has been no special revival of the work of God. Occasionally he has had in his Indian congregations those who never before heard the word of life, and at times they have been deeply affected. Among the people of his charge, he says he can see a moderate but steady advance. He is encouraged to continue on in his labors, in the assurance that good is being done. From other sources we have the assurance that the Indians are constantly improving under his care.

Great good would result to these Indians if Government would enforce the treaty stipulations for the exclusion of intoxicating spirits from their country.

CANADA MISSION.

Missionaries—Rev. D. Hotuntiss, Rochesier, Canada West; Rev. L. C. Chambers, London, Canada West. Under appointment, Robbert A. Lowest, Teacher.

For the purpose of making inquiry into the condition of the fugitives in Canada, for whom our missionaries are laboring, the Secretary for the Foreign Department made a brief visit among them last winter; the results of his observations were published in the American Missionary for March, April, and May.

The most reliable estimates of the number of these fugitives from oppression, place them at about 40,000. There is much that is deplorable in their condition and prospects. As was stated in that report, they reach Canada almost literally naked, hungry, destitute, and in want of all things. Some goaded to madness by the wrongs they had endured, are ready to curse the whole of the hated race of their oppressors, and to seek redress on all whom they meet, even those who would do them good. But there are those among them who seem to themselves and others, to have been divinely guided, in answer to prayer, in all their flight; and these are ever ready to welcome the efforts of those who would do good to them or their neighbors. These form the nuclei of the Christian missions and churches established among them. The sad experience of these fugitives is not all gained in the South, as the following extracts will show. The first is from the Congregational Herald, of May 13th, and relates to events that took place in Chicago. The cause was the cruel arrest of several colored persons by the United States Marshal in Chicago:

"Such an alarm has been given to our colored population, that over one hundred of them, fugitives from slavery, left on a single train upon the last Sabbath. It reminded us of our Saviour's words to his disciples, when he told them to ask God to mitigate the bitter necessity of a flight from Jerusalem: 'But pray ye, that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the Sabbath-day,' No such exemption was allowed our colored brethren under the rigorous search of our new Republican Marshal. It was not safe for the Sabbath sun to go down upon them in their city homes. Sorrowfully they were brought together by friends at the hour agreed upon for a special train, and under the belief that 'the Sabbath was made for man, and nor man for the Sabbath,' the hours of sacred rest were devoted to escape from the oppressor."

The next is from Rev. C. C. Foote, at Detroit, and relates to the same company, and others, from Illinois:

"Could a few days have been given them to prepare for their journey it were not so bad. But no! some of them had seen their prowling masters; delay might be fatal—the homes, the goods, the comforts gathered by years of toil must all be forsaken in a moment. Many had no time to bid adieu to their friends, and some in extreme terror left their families. Of course many reached Canada destitute of every thing except the clothes on their back. Could you see the streaming tears that I have seen; could you hear the wails that I have heard, the longings for death; strong men bowed with agony; your heart would bleed as mine has bled. Most of these people have left comfortable situations. But it would be next to impossible for such a multitude to find a present livelihood in Canada. There must, therefore, of necessity, be much suffering awaiting these doubly-wronged ones. Will not the humane deem this a providential call to send aid for the relief of these sufferings?"

While it must be conceded that missionary labor in Canada, among the fugitives, meets with many discouragements, it is also true that the faithful missionary has had, and still has, that which should cheer him on to perseverance. Some of the seed sown has fallen on good ground, and is bearing fruit to the honor of God.

There are among them those who appreciate and profit by religious privileges, and some mature and consistent Christians. Considering their previous circumstances, the adverse influences to which they were subjected, and the smallness of effort in their behalf, their improvement is encouraging.

They need, however, many more missionaries to labor with and for them, in the sanctuary, in the school-room, and by the fire-side. They need schools, for in many parts of Canada they are shut out from the public-schools; and they need, especially the newly-arrived, material aid, in the shape of bedding and clothing for winter, and whatever may fit the children and youth to attend school in comfort.

Rev. Mr. Hotchkiss continues to labor with the congregations gathered by him at the Puce River, Little River, and Pike Creek. The additions to the three churches, on profession of faith, have been eight, and the whole number of members is now forty-four. Mrs. Hotchkiss teaches a school at the Puce, for which she received last year a moderate compensation from the Refugee Home Society. Her school is of the first order for children in their stage of advancement.

Rev. Mr. Chambers, London, has under his charge a church at London, and one at Ingersoll. He had much encouragement during the year, though often meeting with much that was embarrassing and depressing. Thirty have been added to the church at London, which now numbers one hundred. Sixteen have been added to the church at Ingersoll, and it now numbers sixty-one.

Although our mission at the Sandwich Islands has enjoyed a precious season of refreshing from on high, in the progress of which there have been many hopeful conversions, and the recovery of many backsliders, yet in the absence of the Pastor, Rev. J. S. Green, the fruits of this revival have not been gathered into the Church; the applicants for admission will await Mr. Green's return to the mission. Rev. C. B. Andrews, assisted by J. Porter Green, has taken charge of the station.

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The special presence of the Holy Spirit began to be manifest in October, and some interesting cases of conversion occurred. In February the evidences of the Spirit's presence had increased. The meeting houses began to be crowded to excess, Romanists and Mormons attended the ministrations of the Gospel, and the fruits of the Spirit were being witnessed. J. Porter Green left the Islands while this work was in progress.

Mr. Green made up a report of missions from the several sources within his reach, from which we derive the following summary:

The habits of industry in the people are slowly but surely improving, commendable progress having been made last year. They are improving their buildings and the roads, increasing their home comforts, enlarging their school-buildings, and completing their houses of worship. The four stone meeting houses in his field are now all finished and seated: this has been done without seeking aid elsewhere; and the character of the instruction in the schools has improved.

"Our schools," says Mr. Green, "though not all we desire, nor all that we hope to see, are nevertheless the source of great benefit; they are fountains of influence enriching the land."

Of the spiritual improvement Mr. Green thus writes:

"Not far from the commencement of the year, (1861,) indications of a work of grace were seen at our station. The house of God was thronged with attentive worshipers, and meetings were multiplied in other neighborhoods, and well attended. There was the hearing ear and the feeling heart. Brethren of the Church were aroused, backsliders were reclaimed, confessions of sin were heard at meetings for prayer, and brotherly love was restored. Qui e a number in my neighborhood, who had been leading immoral lives, and who had seldom visited the house of God, became deeply sensible of their sin and danger, and at once sought instruction in the sanctuary. At the last advices the attendance on the preached Gospel continued to be good, and the solicitude of the people remained. How many have professed hopes of pardon through Jesus Christ, I have no means of knowing, as Mr. Andrews prefers that the applications for church-membership should wait for the return of the Pastor."

Mr. Green desires to state, thus publicly, his obligations to Mr. Andrews for his care of the Mission during his absence.

J. Porter Green, and Miss Mary Green, children of Rev. J. S. Green, are yet in this country. Mr. Green is engaged in theological study at Bangor.

During the seventeen months spent by Rev. J. S. Green in this country, he performed much valuable service in the missionary cause, giving information of the wondrous change wrought by transforming grace in the Sandwich Islands; pleading in behalf of the heathen generally, preaching the Gospel, advocating the cause of the oppressed, and striving to promote the interests of the American Missionary Association. He has addressed more than one hundred and sixty churches and congregations, besides his addresses to Sunday-schools, and occasional lectures on the physical condition of the Sandwich Islands. He has preached in all the New-England States except New-Hampshire, and in New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Canada East.

He was married to Miss Asenath C. Spring, at Providence, September 11; and October 11 they sailed for their Mission-field, from which he had never before been absent, during a service of more than thirty-two years. In the good providence of God he has been permitted to receive between one and two thousand members into the Church of Christ, many of whom have already entered the kingdom above.

Mr. Green congratulates the Association that the members of his churches are contributing to sustain a Hawaiian missionary and his wife in the Marquesas Islands. Zechariah Haapuku, a member of Mr. Green's theological class in 1858 and 1859, and his wife, sailed from Honolulu about the first of March for those islands. He hopes his people will send out others, and sustain them in this work.

SIAM MISSION. BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries.-Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D., Mrs. BRADLEY.

Some encouraging results of missionary labor have been witnessed in Siam during the past year. The influences of the Spirit have been less extensively manifest, perhaps, than the previous year, yet they have been such as to encourage the missionaries, and strengthen their hopes that God will yet give them more wonderful demonstrations of his mercy in the salvation of many of that people. Most surely, says Dr. Bradley, he has an elect people here, very many we hope, whom he will in due time bring out with a high hand and an outstretched arm.

The second week in January was observed by the missionaries in Siam as a concert of prayer. The results of these meetings, though not in themselves large, were yet, in the opinion of the Mission, such as to call for devout thanksgiving. Several of the Siamese and the Siamo Chinese were apparently converted to God, and many more were made deeply solemn in view of their sin and danger, while still others were apparently convinced of the folly of worshiping idols.

At the communion season of the first Sabbath in February, two Siamese young women were admitted to the church connected with our Mission. For one of these hope had been indulged for a year, The number of native members is now six—four males and two females. One other stood propounded. Dr. Bradley wrote soon after:

"We have cheering hopes that several others connected with our congregation have been converted. While we rejoice over a few saved, as we trust in Christ, with an everlasting salvation, we mourn over the millions who are still lost, for whom there is hope if we may reach them with the Gospel of salvation; and we feel that we must have a fuller and far more powerful baptism of the Holy Ghost to qualify us for this great work."

Additions were made at the same time to the churches of the Baptist and Presbyterian Missions.

In the printing office, Dr. Bradley reports the issue of one thousand copies of the Psalms of David, and two thousand copies of the Gospel of Luke, in Siamese, one thousand copies of a Siamese Grammar, besides some printing for the Siamese and English.

Unexpected facilities have been given for labor among the Laos people. Dr. Bradley has, as heretofore, visited some of their villages near Petchabooree, and some of the Laos people visit Siam yearly. He says, that people are generally acknowledged to be more numerous than the Siamese and more teachable; that they are not Buddhists, but believe in an Almighty Creator and Ruler; that their country is salubrious, and their language easy of acquisition when compared with the Siamese. The first king of the Laos, Dr. Bradley says, has repeatedly expressed a desire that Dr. Bradley and family would go and live at his capital. The second king had himself written out for him all the Laos written characters, and taught him their power.

At another time Dr. Bradley wrote that he had printed a small edition of a little tract, "Law and Gospel," in the Laos written character, and distributed it among the people, about three hundred of whom were then in Bangkok. It was written in that character by one of the princes. Concerning the facility of reaching this people with the preached and printed word, he says:

"These Laos use essentially the same words that the Siamese do, the only difference being in the pronunciation of them, and this is so much like the Siamese that the Laos have very little difficulty in understanding us when we speak to them in the Siamese tongue. When I discovered this fact, I rejoiced as one who has found vast treasures. I saw that if we learn to write the Laos character, and learn the correspondents of each letter in the Siamese, we can write out all our portions of the Bible and our best tracts in that character, and all this without any labor of learning a new language. It is to me a very pleasing thought that we can furnish Christian tracts and the precious book of God to millions of these Laos whom we have regarded as so 'far off' from us, in their language, that we could never furnish the Bible for them until we had gone through the task of acquiring another new language."

At the time he wrote he was preparing two other of their tracts in the Laos language.

Dr. Bradley is very anxious that the American Missionary Association should plant a mission in that country. That a field of missionary labor is open in Siam and the neighboring kingdoms can not be reasonably doubted. Much preparatory work has been done: a large amount of Gospel truth has been printed and circulated; the people are many of them readers; changes for the better and temporal improvements are continually going on; and latterly God has visibly granted his blessing to missionary labor there; and on the best of testimony there is call for many more laborers. A missionary on the ground thus writes:

"A multitude of missionaries, with the command of the language which they are to use, would have no room for apprehensions that they would not find more labor than they could possibly perform. The field is one of much promise. God has shown us what he can do for his people. We have seen his stately steppings among us. Some have asked, 'What must I do to be saved?' and they have found peace and joy in believing. We ask for more missionaries. When an adequate amount of men, having a good command of the Siamese language, shall be actively engaged in the work of preaching, we know that God will pour out his Spirit."

Dr. Bradley has, more than once written to the same effect. We have suitable mission buildings there for an increased number of missionaries, and the means of sustaining them at a comparatively small expense. The Executive Committee are decidedly of the opinion that at least one additional Mission family should be sent there as soon as it can possibly be done.

HAITI.

The Executive Committee have during the year voted an appropriation of one hundred dollars in aid of Rev. John W. Lewis, in Haiti. A part of it only has yet been paid.

Mr. Lewis is a colored minister from New-England. He went to Haiti as a minister and missionary, with a company of about thirty emigrants. Most of them were exiles from South-Carolina, driven from their homes by the rebellious attitude of that State. Many of them had long been professing Christians in connection with churches in the slave States. They were organized into a distinct church in New-York just before embarking, and seemed fully purposed to carry the institutions of the Gospel into Haiti.

In the only letter yet received from Mr. Lewis, he stated that the company of emigrants was kindly received, and that he was well pleased with Haiti as a field for missionary labor and a home. The colony settled about six miles from St. Mark. They held public worship in St. Mark the first Sunday after their arrival, and found a number of Protestants among the people.

MISSIONS

THE Home field has been a scene of great trial, through the past year. The Association, and its Missionaries, have ever set forth the "irrepressible conflict" between slavery and Christianity, and have labored and prayed for the peaceful overthrow of slavery by the application of principles and forces furnished by the Gospel. But now, God having smitten the slaveholders with judicial blindness, and suffered them in the spirit of madness to rise up in a rebellion aimed at our liberties, and the life of the Government, the nation is called to a conflict of arms, and a baptism of blood. Events so stupendous and soul-stirring, calling 400,000 of our people to the field, half of them from the North-West, could not fail to affect adversely every interest of the country, and by absorbing the public and Christian mind, cause a diversion from spiritual efforts. We have, however, great occasion for renewed thankfulness to God that the results, though not as great in the conversion of souls as in some former years, are yet truly precious, and in some respects they were never more encouraging.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

THE Association has had under commission the past year ninety-three missionaries and three colporteurs, located as follows: In "States East of Ohio," 13; in Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, 30; in Illinois, 20; in Wisconsin and Minnesota, 12; in Iowa, 11; in Kansas, 5; in Missouri, 3; in Kentucky, 3.

Most of the missionaries are pastors; some of them minister to several churches; and others have extensive districts, in which they labor.

They have organized and assisted to organize several churches and Sabbath-schools.

The statistical results, as far as now ascertained, are as follows:

| Whole number of churches, | | 120 |
|--|-----|----------|
| Additions to the churches on profession of faith, . | | 225 |
| Additions by letter from other churches, | | 207 |
| Whole number of church members, | | 4182 |

The members of the churches are generally pledged to total abstinence, and are friends and supporters of the anti-slavery cause.

STATES EAST OF OHIO.

In this section we have had under commission thirteen missionaries, namely, four in the State of New-York, one in New-Jersey, and eight in Pennsylvania. Three have acted as pastors of Welsh churches in Pennsylvania, and one in New-York.

Our missionary located at Saratoga Springs has been blessed with a revival at Ballston Spa, where a church has since been organized. His church and congregation at Saratoga Springs have in them a large number of colored persons; there are also some converts from Romanism, and prayer-meetings are held for the conversion of Romanists. The missionary has labored in various ways to spread the influence of anti-slavery sentiments, and other reforms, among the people who resort to the Springs from all parts of the country.

Our German missionary in Brooklyn-is encouraged in his work Some persons have been hopefully converted to Christ, and added to the Church. Rev. J. C. Richardson, our missionary at Oramel, N. Y., is looking forward to the time when the way shall be open for his return to his former field in Whitley Co., Kentucky, where his labors were prospering, until interrupted by the influence of slavery. There has been some gain in the Welsh churches at Bridgewater and Plainfield, New-York, and the Association and churches of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist denomination in that region, aid our missions by recommending this Association and taking up collections for its support.

At Paterson, New-Jersey, where last year there was an extensive revival, under the labors of our missionary, the church and congregation to which he ministered, have been increased; the church edifice has been enlarged, and completed; a considerable debt canceled, and the entire support of the ministry assumed.

The labors of our missionaries in Pennsylvania, though not accompanied with revivals, have resulted in the hopeful conversion of some souls to God. Our Welsh missionaries there, though they have suffered in common with others, from the severity of the times, have been sustained; and in some instances they have succeeded in liquidating debts upon their church edifices.

We have one missionary colporteur in Pennsylvania. He has labored extensively in the South-Western part of the State, and some in Western Virginia, preaching and performing the usual labors of a colporteur. He has sold and circulated a large number of religious and reformatory publications, chiefly those of the Cincinnati and Boston Tract Societies.

OHIO.

Fifteen missionaries have been under commission in Ohio. There have been no important changes in the churches under their care. Their efforts for the promotion of truth and righteousness have been effectual in stirring up many Christians to duty, and in leading some souls to Christ; but there has been no general outpouring of the Spirit in any of their fields. It is doubtful whether the cause of temperance has made any advance. In some places where skepticism, and other fatal delusions have had much influence for years, special efforts to overcome them, through the power of the Gospel, have been made. It is hoped that some of these churches, though now struggling with embarrassments, may, as they get relief through the late abundant harvests, enter upon arrangements for self-support.

We have one Welsh missionary in Ohio.

Our Welsh auxiliaries in Ohio and Pennsylvania have contributed to our missions at home and abroad.

The Rev. John G. Fee, at present residing near Cincinnati, has been engaged preaching and lecturing, mostly in the southern part of the State. Before the commencement of the rebellion he labored some in Kentucky. His correspondence, and efforts through the press, to awaken the public mind to the necessity of emancipation by proclamation of the President, under the war power, have been of much importance. Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, now located as a missionary at Decatur, has an extended field of usefulness. He has recently preached at Cabin Creek, in Kentucky, without opposition, and was received by the church and congregation, with joy. These missionaries are hoping that they, and others who were forced from Kentucky by the slave-power, may soon be able to return there, their chosen field of labor. In Ohio, as in other free States near the war, the antislavery sentiment is rapidly rising, and its advocates are demanding the overthrow of slavery—the cause of the rebellion.

Rev. J. G. Brice, in Southern Ohio, has done much missionary work, in connection with his general agency.

MICHIGAN.

In this State nine missionaries have been under commission. In most of their churches there has been an increase of members, and an advance in the interests of Zion. The temperance cause has made some progress. In seventy towns, last winter, prohibitory laws were being enforced. One missionary, who labored among a skeptical population in Livonia, has reported numerous interesting facts. He was aided by Rev. S. D. Cochrane in a protracted meeting, with good results. One prominent man burned his infidel books, and purchased a Bible. A young woman who had expressed contempt for the Bible, was led to hope in Jesus.

A revival, last winter, under the labors of our missionary at Augusta greatly cheered and strengthened the church and congregation. They have assumed the entire support of their pastor.

The anti-slavery cause has advanced in the State.

The General Association of Michigan has placed the name of our Association on their list for Foreign Missions, with that of the American Board, and our Secretary for the Western Agency has been heartly welcomed in various parts of the State, in his labors for the Association.

INDIANA.

We have had four ordained missionaries in this State, and one female missionary teacher at Evansville.

Although few persons have been converted to God this year in this field, it is believed that great good has been accomplished by asserting the claims of the enslaved, and arousing the consciences of the people to the duty of seeking their emancipation. The fields occupied by some of the missionaries are large, and their efforts arduous. They are encouraged in their work, and are looking for a blessing. The Institution at Liber, of which one of our missionaries is President, gives to colored youth equal privileges with the whites. Its influence is tending to break down prejudice against the colored people.

The missionary teacher at Evansville, labors among the poorer classes of the whites, and with the colored people. She teaches a week-day school of colored children and youth. Her labors have been blessed, and her school is promising. The people of color have before had but few privileges of education, and were generally regarded with aversion.

Some of the resident ministers of the Gospel at Evansville, have lately spoken out against slavery. There was a revival of religion in that city last winter, which drew the hearts of some toward the enslaved, and their brethren among the free. Our Evangelist and missionary in the south-western section of this State, Rev. Levin Wilson, has at times met with great opposition, and not long since with threats of violence; he now finds the tide turning, and the people more willing to listen to Christian anti-slavery sentiments. We hope this border ground, a part of the Western Egypt, has known its darkest day. The new church edifice at Hopewell, though not perfectly finished, has been opened for divine service. The friends of Christ, of temperance and freedom, are calling for more missionaries in all that region, to enlighten the mass of the people, many of whom are in ignorance, and have ever been the tools of pro-slavery demagogues. Colporteurs are much needed to circulate reading matter suited to the necessities of the people, and to aid in the establishment of Sabbathschools.

ILLINOIS.

In this great central State of the North-West, we have had under commission twenty missionaries.

The year has been one of singular political interest and excitement in Illinois. Two of its citizens were candidates for the Presidency of the United States, and the election of Abraham Lincoln produced the highest excitement of joy on the one side, and disappointment on the other. This excitement was early deepened by the slaveholders' rebellion at the South, and Mr. Lincoln's departure to assume the responsibility of his office, at Washington. Unhappily, the Southern section of Illinois, its pro-slavery Egypt, sympathized with the secessionists, but the Union of the North, the army at Cairo, and better reflections have produced a marked change.

The call from Kansas, suffering from famine, awakened a deep sympathy, and was met with a hearty response. The war, with the fitting out of armies, and the loss of millions by so much of their currency as was based on Southern State Stocks, produced great embarrassment to the people, and to the churches and ministers, paralyzing benevolent institutions.

It is not surprising that the interests of religion should not advance much in this state of things. Under God it is owing to the efforts and prayers of the patient and faithful among his people and ministers, that so much good has been accomplished. As the providence of God has brought out the horrible character of slavery, our missionaries have endeavored to show his design in establishing civil government, especially for the protection of the weak and the oppressed, as set forth in his word. There are indications that manhood is rising, and Christianity is striking its roots deep into the public heart. Loyalty to good government and to God must be promoted by such labors.

In Southern Illinois, our missionaries and colporteurs met with some virulent opposition last winter, and a mob at Broad Oak, ferociously assailed James W. West, and Rev. J. S. Davis and their families, who removed to other counties, where they are laboring with increased usefulness. We were never accomplishing so much in Southern Illinois, as at present.

Several of our missionaries devote much time to colporteur work in connection with their preaching; all our colporteurs but one are ministers of the Gospel. They are doing much to scatter among the people, and in the army, the best Christian publications and tracts, mainly of the Boston and Cincinnati Tract Societies, embracing anti-slavery and other important topics. Rev. A. L. Rankin spends much time in the camps at Cairo and elsewhere, and is welcomed by the officers and soldiers. Some of our churches in this State have been quickened, some souls been converted, and in a few instances, revivals of religion have taken place. Much has been done by the extended efforts of the Rev. J. E. Roy, Secretary of the Western Agency at Chicago. He has plead the cause of the Association before the churches, General Associations, and other bodies, in this and other States, and with individuals, with increased influence. More favorable pecuniary results are confidently expected, when the bountiful harvests of the year shall bring money to the people. He has assisted in labor in revivals of religion in this State, and in Wisconsin, where his efforts under God were greatly blessed, in the conversion of souls to Christ.

WISCONSIN.

In this State we have had eleven missionaries in commission.

Causes similar to those already enumerated, have embarrassed all classes in this State; and some of the missionaries, and their families, have been in severe straits. The churches have, however, been sustained. In several of the missionary fields, conversions have been reported, and in three instances there have been revivals. The necessity for more missionaries, both stationed and itinerating, for the western and northern counties, is deeply felt.

We have had two Welsh missionaries in the State, one having four churches under his care. The Welsh church at Milwaukee has raised some $700 to liquidate a debt on its church building. The Welsh C. M. Association, auxiliary to this Association, and their churches, are endeavoring to increase the missionary spirit among their people, and are contributing to our Home and Foreign Missions.

MINNESOTA.

In Minnesota, we have had in commission two missionaries. Rev. Nelson Cook, at an early period in the year, suffered a paralysis, and was compelled to leave the field. Our other missionary was blessed in his work, in a revival of religion. We have felt much interest in the few missions we have had in Minnesota. This State is largely composed of New-England people, yet having all the varieties of Western population. As a new State, it is one of great promise, and should have all the aid that its peculiar circumstances and its large missionary field require.

IOWA.

Eleven missionaries have been in commission in this State.

There has been much effective labor, in individual churches, by our missionaries, and an advance in general interests, though there is yet very much required to "strengthen the things that remain." During the winter, and before actual war in Missouri, much was done for the interests of Zion, by protracted meetings, and the earnest labor of settled missionaries, and evangelists. In the southern section of the State, the Rev. W. H. Westervelt, an evangelist, labored with cheering results. In three instances in Iowa, and one in Indiana, his labors were connected with revivals.

In the border line of the State, there are many settlers from Missouri and other Southern States. And it is, in some respects, a hard field; but there are grounds of hope. The abolition of slavery in Missouri would give a large field of much promise, on both sides of the line; and immediate and saving results, it is hoped, would follow the preaching and labors of faithful missionaries.

KANSAS.

We have had five missionaries under commission in Kansas.

This battle-ground of freedom having, in the good providence of God, triumphantly resisted the raids of the Border Ruffians of Missouri, was called, the last winter, to suffer the most appalling famine ever known in this country. It is to the honor of the free States, that a deep sympathy pervaded the people, and drew from them the necessary relief. Our missionaries aided in distributing to the sufferers the supplies sent. Thousands who were able to leave, went to other States to reside, until the calamity was overpast. Serious derangements have been occasioned in some districts, and some of the churches have been weakened; but, as the people have been favored of the Lord with bountiful harvests, it is hoped that the population of the State will early be increased, and its institutions advanced.

The house of worship at Osawatomie has been completed and dedicated, and some others, it is hoped, will soon be.

It is matter of praise to God, that the chastisements of Kansas have been connected with spiritual blessings. Rev. J. W. Fox has been greatly favored in his work. He has visited several places by request, and participated with ministers in revival labors. The Spirit was poured out, and many souls were hopefully converted to God. In no year has there probably been so many revivals of religion in Kansas as in the present, in the midst of the severity of her afflictions. It is worthy of grateful notice that while several of the tribes of Indians South, the Choctaws, Cherokees, and others, have united with the rebel forces, those in Kansas and directly contiguous, are loyal to the Government. Kansas, but a few years since an infant, and liable to be devoured by the monster, Slavery, is now an arm of might, and is, beyond its own boundaries, in the thickest of the fight for our liberties. It must not, however, be forgotten that, amid the rushing of men to arms, the perils of those in the army, the hope and fear of the people, and the constant excitement prevailing, the institutions of religion are liable to suffer, and immoralities to prevail. While this is true in older States, it is especially so in those whose protective and sanctifying institutions and influences are not yet established. Let not, then, the friends of Kansas, and of religion, and freedom, slacken their hand in giving liberally to sustain and increase the number of missionaries, and all life-giving institutions, in that providential commonwealth.

MISSOURI.

Three of our missionaries have labored a portion of the year in Missouri, mostly in the north-western counties. Rev. Stephen Blanchard, residing at Oregon, Holt county, preached in many places, and was generally well received, though in a few instances, shut out from school-houses, where appointments had been made for him.

He published, at Oregon, several articles against American slavery, as having no support from the Bible. About the first of January, much excitement existed, and the St. Joseph Democrat, (a Republican paper,) in which his articles had formerly been published, was presented as an incendiary publication; other papers were threatened, and it was judged best for him to leave Oregon for a time. He has since labored mostly in Iowa. The peril in Holt county increased as secession rose, and much violence has taken place. Cottage Springs, his residence, and that of Rev. J. Cross, another of our missionaries, has been threatened by the rebels, but the people armed for their defense, and no attempt has yet been made. Brother Cross has had five different appointments in Missouri, and has recently filled some of them. The spirit of inquiry is abroad in the State, and many would welcome our missionaries.

Fremont's proclamation, and the presence of his army, inspired confidence, and it can not be that slavery can retain its foothold north of the Missouri River, if it does elsewhere in the State. The slaves of the rebels were, by Gen. Fremont's proclamation, on the thirty-first of August, legally declared "free men," and their free status can not be affected by the President's modification, nor by any authority thereafter.

We trust that the way will soon be open to our missionaries, and to many more, to labor and reside in Missouri. The severe sufferings of the people from the rebellion, can not long be submitted to, at the will of slaveholders, who are but a small portion of the people of the State.

KENTUCKY.

We have had three missionaries laboring in the north-eastern section of this State, principally in Jackson, Laurel, and Clay counties, and near to Madison county, from which, the year before, a mob committee expelled our loved missionaries and their families, and a large number of the members of their churches. Some of the families have returned to Berea, and as a church, are there worshiping God, in hope of the early return of their pastor and teachers. With antislavery men every where, they are loyal to the Government, and looking to it to put down slavery, the cause of the rebellion, and thus secure its termination. Those who look back to those days of mob violence and persecution, will not fail to view the hand of God in this spread of terror and anguish among the former persecutors of the missionaries and their churches.

The early part of the year was marked with favorable prospects in Jackson, Laurel, and Clay counties, and the missionaries were laboring with success. A Board of Trustees was elected for the more extended foundation of their school, in a new location, with peculiar advantages, and connected with liberal provision of lands by a wealthy proprietor. The preaching of brothers Candee and Mobley continued to be favorably received until April, when the opponents, encouraged by the progress of secession, made such demonstrations against Mr. Candee and others, that his friends there urged upon him the duty of leaving Kentucky, which he did, with his family and Miss Pratt. In a letter of fourth of May, he wrote from Green Springs, Ohio, giving an account of the occasion, feelings, and scene of his leaving, in which he stated that he preached on the Sabbath at South-Fork, on his way, and that a Judge, who once had protected him from outside pressure, had become the leader of the mob. He has since labored chiefly in Ohio, giving an account of things in Kentucky, pleading for the South as one great missionary field, and exhorting Christians to pray that it might speedily be again opened; exhorting them to remember that if they would be heard, they must lay their sons and themselves upon the altar of God, and of their country, to fight its battles, and to hold themselves and theirs in readiness to go in missionary colonies to the South, as soon as God shall prepare the way.

May 18th, brother Mobley, in Laurel county, wrote that there had been much excitement, and threats to run off abolitionists from Jackson and Laurel counties, but the enemies' plan of operations becoming known, leading abolitionists and friends banded together for the protection of all victims of mob violence. Forty or more resolute men thus united, soon quieted the mobocrats. Mr. Mobley, it was threatened, should be hung, or tarred and feathered, and expelled; and so fully was this expected, that four applications were made to him to sell out his property. Letters of later date were more encouraging, and should the rebellion be subdued, there will be a large field for missionaries. He was still preaching. The abolitionists are in the army, in common with other loyal citizens. Rev. John G. Fee, now residing at Middletown, near Cincinnati, Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, at Decatur, Ohio, and others, are doing much to awaken the public to petition the Government for the abolition of slavery.

A new field of usefulness has been providentially opened at Fortress Monroe, Va., and neighborhood, among the ex-slaves who sought refuge under the national flag. There are at the present time about 1800 men, women, and young persons, some of whom work for Government. The Executive Committee, being apprised through Chaplain Jones, in his letter to the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, that "a more interesting field of missionary work was never opened to the Christian public," sent Rev. L. C. Lockwood to the Fortress to labor among the "contrabands." Testaments have been furnished by the American Bible Society, and primers and hymnbooks have been sent on by the Committee.

MISSION AMONG THE FREED PEOPLE AT FORTRESS MONROE

AND VICINITY, VA.

Mr. Lockwood holds three services every Lord's day, at different places, besides week-day meetings. A week-day school, for children, in the morning, and adults in the evening, has been commenced. Appeals have been made by the Committee to the Christian community for funds to procure clothing, etc., for those who can not earn their own living, as well as for the support of teachers, and it is hoped the appeal will be liberally responded to.

THE ASSOCIATION AND THE NORTH-WEST.

As it required no power of divination ten or fifteen years ago, to discover that the North-west must soon decide the political power and action of this country, and that the character of its action would be determined by the religious, moral, and intellectual training of the people; so also it was apprehended by Christian abolitionists that unless the freedom of man, as his birth-right, should be made a cardinal principal of action on the part of the churches there, the North-west would be controlled by pro-slavery conservatism, and its power be exerted against freedom and true Christianity. This was an inducement for our instituting Christian missions wherever we could in this vast field. The free mission churches established or aided by this Association and its auxiliaries, were instituted to advocate a religion that not only hopes for salvation through Christ, but requires a practice toward God and man in conformity with his example.

It is pleasant to notice the advance made on this subject, and that now the anti-slavery sentiment has virtual control there, and that many ecclesiastical boards of missions and societies have relinquished. step by step, much that was conservative of slavery, and some have begun to protest against it, and against all fellowship with slaveholders. True there are multitudes who have yet but partially admitted the sin of slaveholding, and who would not make it a disciplinable offense; but the day has gone by for securing the confidence and cooperation of the people, while attempting to retard the work of reform, and the abolition of human bondage. The slaveholders' rebellion is accelerating the perfect unity of the people for the abolition of slavery, and every event transpiring shows that the North-west, whether from purely religious convictions or from the influence of the war, is in earnest for the putting down of the rebellion, and for the emancipation of the slaves. The history of true Christian missions in the North-west must convince the most prejudicial, that but for them it would have been a vast theater for sin in every form, and fit only to work out its own destruction.

We are called upon to praise God with devout gratitude for the part he has allotted us in promoting his gracious designs; and we would gladly, by an increase in the number of our missionaries, and by every means which God in his providence might allow us, press upon the North-west the principles of the Association, as having an important bearing upon the destiny of the entire nation; but the providences of God seem to indicate the necessity of some change in our home missionary operations. The consideration of the course to be pursued by the Association in its relations to the North-west, will be presented by the Secretaries in another paper, by order of the Executive Committee.

THE REBELLION-WAR AND MISSIONS.

The rebellion and war, in the providence of God, have brought new trials, and are opening new fields to be occupied, and new objects to be pursued, in our missionary work. War with its manifold evils surely does not lessen the importance of missionary labors in the destitute parts of our land. But when the whole land is convulsed, it will be only by marked providential and gracious influences, that even religious people can be kept steady to make sacrifices needed in the pursuit of the work. From the history of our own Society and of others it is clear that Home Missions will suffer first, and probably more than Foreign; still there are causes now working to create interest in departments of the work in this land, which may indicate the will of God, and draw, even in times of depression, means sufficient for its prosecution.

These causes are giving increased interest to our border missions, both by reducing the pro-slavery feeling of the masses in those Egypts, and opening the way for the circulation of Christian and anti-slavery literature. The missionaries are now treated with more consideration than formerly, and are listened to in their presentation of the Gospel of impartial love, and their discussion of the great questions which have become practical and all-absorbing.

The presence of large armies on the borders gives opportunity for a peculiar work by some of the missionaries, and the slight opening of the door of the great prison of slavery at Fortress Monroe, and the mission commenced there among the eighteen hundred freed colored people, give new interest and kindle strong desire for the prospective work throughout the Slave States, and for the millions yet to be freed.

The question of the emancipation of the slaves, on its own intrinsic merits, or as a war measure, while it occupies public attention, will, in Christian minds, be naturally connected with the great missionary work to be done, after emancipation, for the spread of the word of God, the instruction, civilization, and salvation of the freed people.

In closing the Home Report, and in view of the great work opened before us, we would call on each other, and on all the friends of Christ, by all that is precious in the history of our fathers—by the legacy of the word of God, and our free institutions—by the interests of Zion—by our country and its millions of undying souls—and, finally, by the love of Christ—to pursue, in his strength, and with increasing zeal, faith, and consecration, the high mission intrusted to us.

AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

The monthly issues of the American Missionary, in magazine form, have averaged 4500. A part of them are paid for at the rate of 50 cents per year, and others are sent to life-members who request it, to annual donors of $5 or more, and to pastors who take up monthly concert or annual collections for the Association. The Missionary, in paper form, is sent to all donors who express a wish to receive it. The monthly issue is about 20,000. The aggregate number in the two forms, during the entire year, has been 294,000.

The aim of the paper is not merely to report the condition of our missions, nor to make it the agency for the collection of funds, but also to diffuse correct principles on the subject of missions, and the proper mode of conducting them, and thus increase the spirit of true, impartial, brotherly love to all men. How far it has accomplished these objects the Committee will not say; they are, however, often assured that it is doing a good work wherever it goes.

AUXILIARY SOCIETIES.

The only auxiliary whose report we have received is the Penobscot Missionary Association in Maine.

Its fourteenth annual meeting was held at Bangor, January 6th. The report of the Treasurer, James Allen, showed that $470 had been received. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. Moses H. Tarbox. At the business meeting the next day the following officers were chosen for the year, namely: John Conant, President; O.H. Ingalls and Rev. F. Southworth, Vice-Presidents; J. S. Kimball, Recording Secretary; J. H. Perkins, Corresponding Secretary; James Allen, Treasurer; Edmund H. Fogg, Auditor; Geo. A. Thatcher, D. W. Bartlett, and Jonathan T. Hardy, Executive Committee.

Rev. Uriah Balkham, of Lewiston, was chosen to preach the next annual sermon, Rev. T. Southworth, of Holden, substitute.

The Secretary's report concludes its reference to the present state of our national affairs, as follows:

"When our fathers gave us this form of government, which has yielded the fruits of peace and unparalleled prosperity, slavery was a mere child, weakly, sick, and ready to die. But by the skill of political doctors and doctors of divinity, the puny child of eighty years ago has become a giant in the land, and threatens, to-day, with one treasonable blow, to sever the union of these States, to demolish the Constitution, and to blot out the immortal declaration that "All men are created free and equal."

What the final issue will be, we may not doubt. God will prosper the right, and freedom shall yet triumph in the land.

"Let it be the prayer of every Curistian heart, that in this hour of our nation's trial, we may hear the voice of God saying: 'I will be exalled among the nations.'

"Let us beseech him that he will inspire the people with the love of justice, that he will give courage to every friend of freedom to stand firm, doing nothing that is wrong, and yielding nothing that is right.

"And let us be sure that God will never be a party to any compromise with wrong. So let us with trusting hearts maintain our integrity; cling with unyielding purpose to the right, and the God of our fathers will be with us and guide us safely through all the darkness and perplexity of this hour, and give us at length enduring peace. Then may we never forget that 'righteousness' exal'eth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

The American Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists of Ohio and Pennsylvania, Auxiliary to the American Missionary

REV. HOWELL POWELL, of Cincinnati, Ohio, President; ROBERT R. OWENS, of Newark, Treasurer Rev. Edward T. Evans, of Newark, Secretary.

Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Missionary Society of Wisconsin and Illinois.

Rev. John Davies, -, Wisconsin, President; Rev. Rees Evans, Cambia, Wisconsin, Secretary; - Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Treasurer.

We have received no report of these two auxiliaries.

CONCLUSION.

In concluding their report, the Executive Committee would say they have endeavored to carry forward the work intrusted to them, in the full consciousness of its intimate connection and correspondence with that commenced by our Lord Jesus Christ. His mission to our earth was to make atonement for sin, and render the salvation of sinners possible. At his departure he left as a legacy to his disciples, by express commandment, the duty of making known to all the world his mission, his teaching, and his death, and to proclaim to all who will repent and believe, salvation through through his death. The scenes of his life, the transactions of Cavalry, though vast as the universe in importance, transcending every other event of earth, were to human vision local, and unknown, except to the few at Jerusalem and those to whom, through their word, they are revealed. The atoning sacrifice was made by him; during his short ministry he proclaimed the truth; all else, the proclamation of the truths of the Gospel, the facts of salvation, through all ages, to all the world, is left to his disciples. Repentance and remission of sin must be preached in his name to all men; repentance of all sin; remission only through the blood of the Redeemer.

What account can be rendered for the appalling fact that now, in the last half of the nineteenth century, a population nearly as great as the world contained when Christ died, do not know of this salvation, we know not. What account we must render, if, with our knowledge, the work is neglected, concerns us more nearly. What we are doing to carry forward Christ's work, is being daily recorded. Happy shall we be, if, as officers and members of the Association, we are found to have done what we could.

The Committee have endeavored also to remember that Christ's work must be carried on only by means of Christ's approval, proclaiming his truth against all forms of sin, having no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, neither doing such things nor taking pleasure in those that do them. Especially in relation to slavery, the Committee have labored for its removal, not exclusively, nor, as they trust, disproportionately, but because they regard it as a great sin, standing in the way of the prosperity of the Church, staining her beautiful garments, hindering the spread of the Gospel and the progress of the Redeemer's kingdom, crushing millions for whom Christ died, and provoking the just indignation and chastisements of God. If while remembering them that are in bonds as bound with them, the Committee have at any time, in the estimation of any, given an undue attention to this one sin, it has been because the events of the past year and the providences of God have made it more than any other one a living, horrid reality, ruthlessly crushing every thing that is dear to the Christian or the patriot, and involving in its practice almost every other sin. Your Committee feel, however, that there is more danger of having done too little, rather than too much, against this sin, that in common with all our people, it becomes us to lay our hands on our mouths, and our mouths in the dust, confessing that we have been verily guilty concerning our brother in bonds, and that, therefore, has this evil come upon us and on our land.

Report of the Secretaries in relation to a change in the Home Missionary Work of the Association.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee, July 17th, 1861, a subcommittee presented the following resolutions, which, after consideration, were referred to the Secretaries, to be presented to the annual meeting:

"Resolved. That while the Executive Committee acknowledge, with gratitude to God, the important work which under his guidance the Association and its missionaries have been enabled to do, for years past, in the general field and the North-west, in promoting the cause of pure religion and reform, and in exerting an influence to bring up the North-west to its present anti-slavery standing, they are deeply impressed with the necessity of increasing and concentrating their efforts on the borders near the slave States, and in the slave States also, as rapidly as the way shall be opened and the means be furnished by the friends of Christ and of freedom.

"Resolved, 2d, That the border ground of fifteen hundred miles, largely pro-slavery, preëminently needs the labors of missionaries and colporteurs, and a true type of Christian anti-slavery sentiment, to prepare the people to exert a right influence in the contiguous slave States.

"Resolved, 3d, That the providence of God, in various ways, seems to decide for us the duty of closing our general operations in the North-west as early as practicable, and of increasing our efforts in the border and slave States, assured that the friends of Christ and of freedom will become more deeply interested in the Association, from the course indicated, and will give the more freely to sustain our operations."

In connection with the above, the Secretaries presented the following paper:

The necessity of virtually suspending our general missionary work in the North-west, at least temporarily, has been increasingly indicated by the severe pressure on our treasury; and there have been but few appointments since the date of the resolutions.

The withdrawal of the N. S. General Assembly from their cooperation with the American Home Missionary Society, by leaving that Society under the control of Congregationalists, will tend to make it denominational. The organization of a Home Missionary work by the Free Presbyterian Synod, and a like action by the American Wesleyans, tend in the same general direction.

These efforts will furnish a larger supply of home missionary labor in certain directions, and the events now transpiring in our country will stimulate the application of the Gospel for the removal of slavery. Denominational interests may, however, lead the several bodies to select the more thrifty fields, to the possible neglect of a portion of the home field, in which this Association feels a deep interest, and for the cultivation of which it is peculiarly adapted, namely, the slave States and their borders. As there is there an abundant, and increasingly important field, demanding all and more than we can do, the Committee would gladly receive the approval of the Association to the concentration of their home efforts more exclusively upon it.

The Committee can not, however, wholly withdraw from the work in the North-west. The Constitution of the Association allows donors to its funds to direct the application of them, limited only by the principles upon which the Association is founded. Some donations are thus directed to the home work in the North-west. The Welsh Calvinistic Methodists fully sympathize with the Association, and have formed several auxiliaries to it. They contribute for the support of our missions at home and abroad, and having no channel of their own, wish to operate through us in aid of some of their feeble churches. A few appointments may therefore continue to be made in the North-west, but with the approval of the Association, the Executive Committee will direct their home efforts mainly to the slave States and their borders in the free States.

On motion, the course indicated in this paper of the Secretaries was approved.

APPENDIX.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CORRESPONDENCE OF MISSIONARIES AND AGENTS.

From Rev. J. E. Roy, Secretary of the Western Agency:

"THE department of your Western Agency has found, during the last year, a hearty sympathy from ecclesiastical meetings, from the local churches, and from the hearts of Christians. Although by the pressure of the times, the material returns have not been as great as could have been des red, yet there is here a wealth of affection for the Association, which will, in due time, greatly enhance the resources of its treasury.

"The origin, principles, spirit, and workings of the Association have been such, that it is now found in deep sympathy with our government in its perilous crisis.

By the principle of compensation, so noticeable in the dealings of Providence, the policy, which once subjected the Association to repreach, now becomes the source of its popularity. Not only does its course in the past find a justification, but its identification with the cause of freedom brings it now into the fore front of this battle.

It had sought to deal with slavery by moral means; but the conscience of the nation responded so slowly, that it seemed necessary for the advance-guard to be withawn, that an army might go before, to remove the great hindrance to the progress of the kingdom of God. Yet the exiles are waiting anxiously the day for their return; and even while the nation is discussing what is to be done with the freed men of the South, the Association is found administering to their moral and spiritual welfare. This organization is now found to be the only 'Southern Aid Society,' and along with the Society which lately bore that name, illustrates the Scripture: 'He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life shall lose.

"While we give to God all the glory for whatever he has accomplished through the Association thus far, it should be the humble, prayerfol inquiry of its friends how can it best fulfill the mission, for which, by past discipline and present position, it is now qualified. How grand the opening, when God, by the issues of the war, shall have set before u., a 'wide and effectual door,' in all the South, for the preaching of the Gospel, and when four millions of heathess shall be thrown upon our hands for Christianization! May God help us to enter and occupy."

From Rev. Geo. Candee, of McKee, Ky., (now at Ann Arbor, Mich.:)

"But little progress, church-wise, has been made in our field of labor during the past year. We, and all who sympathized with us, were in a constant conflict with external foes, and it seemed impossible to keep the attention of the impenitent long enough to secure their repentance. We feel sad that more were not born into the kingdom of Christ; but we also rejoice for the good done. Believers, with few exceptions, were strengthened by their trials, and friends from the world were multiplied, as never before.

"Nearly every man in Jackson county is an unconditional Union man; so are nearly all in the immediately adjacent mountain counties. We flatter ourselves that the influence of the mission has contributed much to secure this. Our endeavors to give the blessings of education to the young secured the friendship and confidence of many, while our determination not to exclude persons of color from our benefactions, enkindled a spirit of relentless hatred in the hearts of opposers. We organized a school on this principle, and hoped to have it sustained at McKee. With aid from donors at the North, we built a house at that place, and had two terms of school. Miss Pratt, the teacher, met with complete success. She secured for the school the admiration of both friends and foes. Just at this time, the war broke out and it was thought that Kentucky would seceds. This belief emboldened desperadoes to attempt acts of violence. We were in danger of being assassinated; and not only our own safety, but the security of friends, and the interests of the cause, required us to leave the field for a time.

"We had before decided to remove the school from McKee to Pond Creek. Mr. R. E. Nichols, an ardent friend, gave two hundred acres of land, for the benefit of the school, and offered inducement to Christian friends to colonize around it. The prospect was fair for a flourishing colony. It is still intended to prosecute the enterprise, and we hope to return there."

From Miss Maria C. Pratt, missionary teacher at McKee, Ky., now at Chelsea, Mass.:

"On the eve of September 1st, of last year, I arrived at my cabin-home in McKee, Ky., desting to be of some service in that harvest, the fields of which are white, but laborers few.

"The months September and October were much spent in becoming acquainted with the social manners and customs of the people, and in endeavoring to incite parents to desire better things for their children, or encouraging such desires and hopes, where they already existed.

"A Saubath-school was organized at McKee, in September, which was very well attended for a time; but the parents of some, finding their children were not required to spend the whole day in study, concluded that it would be more profitable to them to keep the children at home to draw wood and water. Others, however, attended regularly, from a sincere desire, as we trust, to be instructed in the way of life; and though insufficiently clad, the snows and sleet of winter did not deter them from walking miles to attend the Sabbath-school.

"About the middle of October, the hills began to resound with the music of the woodman's ax, felling and hewing timber for the school house, in which great hopes were centered. The new house not being finished, the school was opened November 1st, in the loft-chamber of brother Candee's house. Although nearly every accommodation was wanting, the Great Teacher blessed us. Our school prospered, our numbers doubled. In December, we entered our school-house, still unfinished, owing to the inability to procure necessary material. Here I taught, with increasing interest, until there was a great change in the mind of the people, just before our unexpected denature.

"The largest number of pupils, at any one time, was thirty, though many more were under the influence of the auti-caste, anti-topacco school, at some period of its existence. Our school, at one time, enjoyed a season of great refreshing from the Lord. Our hearts were strengthened, and even the most tr-fling were seriously impressed by the presence of the Holy Spirit. Personal religion seemed the chief topic of thought and conversation.

"There is much people in the South yet to be brought to God. May we not hope that the day is about to dawn, when those bound, morally and physically, are to be set free? . Now that we are removed from the dear people, may the Lord be their shepherd, and enable them to act well their part, in this time of trial. My heart is rejoiced, that they are now influenced by the teachings of Divine love, which it has been the privilege of a few to instill. As I review the events of the past year, I am reminded, that I have been led by a way that I knew not; that in all parila, among false brethren, by mine own countrymen, in westiness and watching, God has girded me, though often I have not known it. My heart cries out: 'Oh I praise the Lord for his great goodness.'"

From Rev. Wm. Mobley, . . . July 6, 1861:

"I have frequently visited Jackson county, and have preached there twice. One month since, I visited Madison county; staid two nights at Berea. There was great excitement there at that time. They were expecting trouble from the pro-slavery mob party. I was at Berea, again, last week, and found the brotherhood feeling entirely quiet and secure. A Union Home-Guard had been formed, and several of the autislavery men had been enrolled.

"I have also made a tour through Rockesstle county, and preached near where brother J. G. Fee was assailed by a mob, and driven off, some years since. Religion is in a very low state there. There are a few zealous persons. On the waters of Roundstone and Nigger creek, I found a large number of Republicans, who are anticipating and hoping that the present war will abolish slavery.

"Both the secessionists and pro-slavery Unionists among us, misrepresent us and others.

I have had, at different times, recently, conversations with the originator of the mob that tarred brothers Candee, Kendrick, and Jones, in 1859. He admitted that all he said about abol-tiouists being secessionists, was for effect; that they found it to be policy to throw off the abolitionists, by thus charging them with disunionism, because some Union men, who were opposed to abolitionism, refused to unite with the Union party.

with the Union party.

"I am persuaded that it is the general opinion of both pro and anti-slavery people, that the present conflict will some how or other bring about the extinction of slave-holding. I have to doubt but the pro-slavery Unionists here, are so, merely in the hope that, by assuming their present position, they may gain some advantages in the final winding up of this great national evil, either by compensation for their human chattels, or by gradual emancipation. Our prayer and hope are, that our Northern brothers will never cease to cry aloud until this evil and bitter thing is blotted out."

KANSAS

From Rev. J. Copeland, Clinton, Feb. 23, 1861.

"On the first Sabbath of the present month we commenced a protracted meeting, which has continued three weeks. The result has been favorable, although less so, as to the number of converts, than we hoped.

"The work of grace has been deepened we trust in the hearts of Christians. New views of the Gospel have been realized on the part of some, and we hope the result will be a higher Christian life.

"There have been a number of hopeful conversions from among the impenitent. Several of them were men, heads of familits, who had imbited and advocated skeptical views of the Bible and Christianity. They seem now sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in their right minds. All these individuals had at some former period been professors of religion, and for several months past, have been more or less deeply impressed with eternal things. Others were 'children of many prayers,' one of them a young man, a son of one of the deacons of our church."

In his annual report, he says:

"Our congregation and Sabbath-school in Clinton have fallen off nearly one half during the year, mainly on account of the emigration, caused by the drought. The Church has enjoyed a season of refreshing during the year, and a number of converts have been gathered in; the most of whom give good evidence of having been soundly converted, and are ready to labor in every good work. During the year we have so far completed our house of worship, that we have met in it for the past eight months.

. It still remains true that no spirituous liquors are sold as a beverage in Clinton township."

From Rev. S. L. Adair, Osawatomie:

"Our church (Congregational) in Osawatomie, completed its house of worship, and dedicated it in July. We have now a good room, capable of seating confortably one hundred and fifty persons. The drought last year, and the troubles this year, have greatly reduced our population. About one half the houses in Osawatomie now staud empty. Probably there is now not more than one hundred and fifty regular inhabitants in the place. The foreign population about us is small. The Sabbath is more and more desecrated. For three successive Sabbaths we have had runors of invaders, and the men were called to arms. Such things annihilate the Sabbath with the multitude. At Mount Gilead intemperance has received a decided check. In Osawatomie there is much of it. The slave has in all this region many very warm friends. Infidelity, in its various phases, is met with on every hand. Universalism is very common. Combellism is very active in some localities. Society is much unsettled at present. War, war, is the great theme, and many here greatly fear that they shall soon have to flee, and leave all. God is now trying us; but I rejoice that he reigns. All will be well to those who trust in him."

From Rev. W. A. McCollum, Wabaunsee, Sept. 20th:

"The church at Zeandale design to gather up the fragments of their ruined house, and construct a small one therefrom. They now come to Wabaunsee to worship occasionally. I am working, with my own bands, on our house of worship here, and am resolved that a fine house, so nearly done, shall not dishonor God, and disgrace us, by lying useless. One month's work for one man will fit it for plastering, and two of us are at work with might and main. Every thing in the pastoral work, save Sabbath presching, gives way to this manual labor. I consider it as good as praying to complete God's house. I can not speak encouragingly of the spiritual prespect of this church. I fear God's face is turned away from us. My soul is distressed for his Zion here. The dictrine of Annibilation is poisoning some minds, and doing the devil's own work. We need mighty crying to God for his convicting and enlightening spirit to be poured out. God has his faithful ones here, we trust, and I by no means despair of seeing him again at work among us."

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Rev. J. W. Fox, (Evangelist,) after noticing the organization of a church at Superior, adds: We have reorganized a Sabbath-school at Grasshopper Falls, and at Emporia, and started one at Ridgeway. He refers to the interesting revivals of religion at Auburn, Grasshopper Falls, Clinton, Emporia, Hampden, etc., (his reports of which we have published,) and remarks:

"The famine has been blessed of God to restore a sense of dependence upon him. and to lead men to estimate more correctly the things of time. The war excitement has often diverted the attention of young men who had begun to think on eternal things. The pastors, where I have labored, express themselves as greatly encouraged since our meetings."

MISSOURI.

From Rev. J. S. Blanchard, Oregon, Holt Co., Dec. 6, 1860:

"Once in two weeks I have had appointments three miles east of this, and on these days have spoken to congregations alternately, so a four or five miles north-east, and south, of this appointment. I have, in various places, visited schools, and have endeavored to awaken more interest in the subject of education; have lectured some on the subject, presenting its claims upon the people, especially in view of the amount of money raised by the provisions of State laws for free schools.

"There are forty school districts in the county, and they have about $8000 to be distributed among them for the support of their schools. The school system of this State is destined to exert a powerful influence upon her population, and will go far to break her chains, and make this a free State. . . . My lectures to youth generally secure large congregations. The old and young seem to be pleased with them, though I never fail to mention among other things despisable in youth, the use of tobacco, which is very prevalent here among all classes."

From Rev. John Cross, Jan. 9, 1861:

"I have pursued my labors in Missouri without any other interruption, than being shut out at one of my appointments, by a slaveholder, who owned the house, which was used for public meeting. Some threats are affoat, but we trust the Lord will protect us; or, if otherwise, 'will cause the wrath of man to praise him,' and defend the great interests of his kingdom against the rage of the ungodly. I am getting a circuit arranged, and hope to be permitted to continue my labors unmolested."

In April he wrote from College Springs, Iowa:

guid to Risburgo

"Since my last communication, the storm of war has burst upon us, and in the excitement of the day we are not able to take a cool observation of the present, much less to calculate the probabilities of the future. I have yet been permitted to pursue my labors in Missouri unmolested, though there are many threats on one hand, and timorous forebodings on the other. Since my last quarterly report, the court house at Mary sville has been virtually closed against me, as the feeling of hostility was so strong, that my friends were unwilling to have me fill the appointment. I have still five appointments in Missouri, and have supplied the church here, half of the time, for about two months past."

In his annual report, Mr. Cross said:

"Among even professors of religion in Missouri, so far as my observation extends, there is very little thorough temperance principle. Morality generally is at a low ebb, and, at this time, some of the religious societies consist of a heterogeneous mass of Unionists and rebels, who are not on friendly terms with each other. The war spirit is rife, and next-door neighbors are in arms against each other. Many Union families have fled from the State, leaving crops and stock, and whatever could not be readily taken in the flight. . . At Amity, (College Springs,) anti-slavery is universal, and notwithstanding our exposed position, no one talks of compromise, or prays for peace with slavery for its basis."

From Rev. G. J. Cummins, (an Evangelist,) July 1, 1861. He reported a series of meetings at Greenvale, in which he was assisted by Rev. Daniel Worth. He said :

"We continued the meetings every afternoon for five days. Quite an interest was awakened, two persons came forward for prayers; some backsliders were stirred up to renew their covenant with God, and I think much good was done in Jesus' name. Professors were strengthened to renewed diligence, reformatory principles were brought before the people, and received with gladness with but few exceptions. . . . Oh! that you could only see. or have the opportunity to preach to these Western men and women who have in other days sat under the teaching of good men in other lands, but have been long deprived of these blessed privileges. West of the Des Moines river there is a vast field open for missionary labor, and faithful and efficient men would soon raise up churches, which in a short time would support a stated ministry."

This annual report says:

"Anti-slavery sentiments are on the advance in the West, and the people are fast coming to the opinion that slavery must die. The people are in advance of the Church and ministry as a general thing. . . My object this summer has been, to a great extent, to collighten the people on this subject, and thereby prepare them to aid in the work of emancipation, which we all hope is near at hand, and in so doing God has blessed me."

In April, Rev. W. C. Westervelt, Evangelist, gave an account of protracted meetings at Washington and Ottumwa.

"The meeting at Washington," he says, "increased in interest to the last. When I first came there, Christians were very much discouraged. Having a sense of their unworthiness, and need of divine aid, they appeared to lack courage to believe that the Lord could bring them into a better state of mind, lead them around Jericho, and cause its walls to 'fall down flat,' that they might go up and take the city. When they began to walk in the paths of ob-dience, the giants were made to tremble. Many were awakened, and upwards of twenty were hopefully converted. The work of the Lord was most precious. To his name be all the praise. My next protracted meeting was in Ottumwa, on the Des Moines river. The Congregational church, though small, is exerting a good influence in the place. They esteemed it a great privilege to wait upon the Lord in his sanctuary, and hoped that he had a blessing in store for them. They prayed; the Lord heard and brought salvation. The Church was refreshed, and there were several hopeful conversions. There was one lady for whom we felt great anxiety. Her husband was among the converts and had commenced family worship, yet she remained in great distress of mind. We felt that she must be converted before the meetings closed; but I had preached every night and attended a prayer and conference meeting every afternoon and needed rest. I committed this anxious soul to the Lord, and closed the meeting. After the benediction, she came down to the pulpit, with countenance glowing, and spoke in a low voice, yet very decidedly: 'I have found him, I have found him."

In his annual report, he said:

"Southern Iowa, in comparison with other parts of the State, has more Southern elements, and, in many respects, is rather a hard field. I find no difficulty in preaching an anti-slavery gospel, yet I find the mass of mind moves slow. Prejudice lies deep. If slavery should be done away during the present war, I believe this would be a very interesting field. There are many families here from Missouri who need sympathy and

Rev. O. Emerson wrote in January:

"The first Sabbath in the month was spent at Albion, with a church, now vacant, that was planted some fifteen months since. The little church rejoice that that work was done and that some additions have been made. They are strong in faith in reference to the future. I rejoiced in the opportunity of preaching to them, and giving such advice and encouragement as I could. I have since spent two weeks assisting the church at Green Mountain in a series of meetings. There were tokens of the Spirit's presence, but Satan bindered us by sowing seeds of discord between the different churches in the neighborhood."

In his final report, he said:

"While saddened at the remembrance of manifold deficiencies, I can not retrace the path by which Providence has led me, without mingled emotions of wonder and gratitude. I rejoice in the work the Association has accomplished in the home field. It never will be seen, and much less generally acknowledged in this world; but it is none the less open to the view of Him whose approbation is of chief account. Our Association will be held in everlasting remembrance by the great and good of coming genera-tions. It must be sustained. It has a great work to do for the slave. A work that will remain incomplete long after the present generation shall have passed away. Let us pray for each other for strength and wisdom from above equal to every emergency. As this may be my last communication in my official relations with the Association, please write freely if in any way you think I can at any time promote its interests. I trust you will not fail to convey to the Committee and other friends of the Association an assurance of my grateful appreciation of their kindness during this long period. I rejoice in the work the Association has done, and shall always regard my connection with it as one of the most interesting features of my missionary experience."

WISCONSIN.

From a missionary in Sauk Co., Dec. 29, 1860:

"Our church at Trenton maintains regular weekly church prayer-meetings, also a weekly union prayer-meeting. I am encouraged by the advancing piety and activity of that little band, and by the conversion of some individuals I have visited this week twenty-five families, and attended meeting every evening except this. Last week I visited thirty families. Most families which I visit have no religious papers, and little religious reading, the Bible excepted, and that neglected to a fearful extent. Every where, in public and private, even in Catholic families, I am cordially received where known, and I can not doubt that God gives me access to the hearts of the people.

"I now, as never before, see the value of a permanent ministry, and an established character for sustaining the interests of truth, without swerving to please the wicked, on the part of the minister. Unworthy as I am, I am satisfied that I have this confidence. I have now entered upon the tenth year of my labors among this people. I know of but one other minister in this county of nineteen thousand inhabitants, of any denomination, who has been with his people over two years. We have a Kansas Relief Committee here, and we are collecting grain and other means of assistance for the suffering. We intend to heed the cry of the poor."

From a missionary at large:

"My work has been distributed over a large surface. Since the outbreak of the slaveholders' rebellion, the exigencies of the times have led to the discussion of the question of the relation of Christianity to civil government, and the duty of citizens in the present crisis. Indeed, so excited is the public mind on the subject of our national difficulties, that little else can interest the people. The public ear is now open, as it never was before, to hear on the exciting topics of slavery and freedom.

"Western Wisconsin is settled by people of many nations. In the south-west part, in the mining regions, there is a large proportion of English, and a good share of the German race, (mostly Catholic,) with a sprinkling of Irish. New-England is quite largely represented in most localities, forming communities occasionally with strong puritanic proclivities. In the north-western portion we have extensive pineries, and an exceedingly rough population of lumbermen. In some of the valleys again, are as rich farming lands as in any part of the State."

From a Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missionary:

"We have been blessed with a revival in one of our churches, (Vale Head.) the effect of which is visible, and continues fresh until now. All the congregation take a lively interest in the religious exercises on the Sabbath. Some Americans, and more Germans, are to be seen working at their harvests on the Sabbath. I meet almost every Sabbath evening, while attending my appointment at Bangor, a crowd of young men, all Germans, returning home with guns, after being hunting or drilling on the holy day. We have paid all the remaining debt on one of our churches.

"Lively sympathy prevails throughout all the region in behalf of the enslaved and the Federal Government. May the Lord, who is 'mighty in battle,' bring this bloody contention to a speedy end, that will prove favorable to his cause, and conducive to the rights of humanity."

ILLINOIS.

From Rev. A. L. Rankin, Missionary at large, Sept. 12th, 1861:

"My labor, for the greater portion of the year, has been expended upon the southern portion of my field, and since spring, much of my time has been occupied with the troops of the western division of the grand army. Not so greet apparent results have been secured in the organization of churches, as during the previous year. But I trust that as much good has been secured in strengthening those a ready organized, and keeping up a steady influence for the cause of God and humanity.

"The past year has been one of unusual excitements. First were those attendant upon the Presidential contest, and the second class those connected with the present national struggles. The first arrayed all the prejudices-by far the largest portion of the population among whom I have labored-against your mission ry, and greatly retarded his operations; yet I am happy to say, that there has, notwithstanding, been a stendy anti-slavery growth through Southern Illinois. The second has so absorbed the attention of the people, that almost no impression can be made in a moral point of view. The war, however, is doing much for the growth of anti-slavery sentiment. All things considered, the result of the year's labors has been encouraging. The Methodist ministers of Southern Illinois are now suffering greatly from the withholding of portions of their salaries from them by the secessionists, hordes of whom are scattered all through this part of the State.

From the report of Rev. Wm. Holmes, Evangelist:

"In the month of November, 1860, I organized a Congregational church at Worthington, Jackson Co., consisting of five persons, the heads of three families, which comprise in all twenty-two persons, two thirds of whom are adults. . .

"A new impetus has been given to Sabbath-schools in this section during the past season. New schools have been organized, new libraries have been furnished, and more interest has been manifested in their welfare by the community.

"The cause of education is steadily on the increase. The free-school system works well in Southern Illinois. New school-houses are springing up in regions hitherto neglected. A better class of teachers are being sought after and employed, with fair salaries, and the people, with some exceptions, readily acknowledge that: 'It is not good for the soul to be without knowledge. "In a majority of places anti-slavery sentiments are listened to with impatience, ridicule, and contempt. But the question must be fairly and squarely met, and settled forever. The noxious weed of prejudice must be eradicated. It can not grow side by side with the flower of brotherly love."

From Rev. J. S. Davis, Hoyleton:

"Our colony is on a beautiful prairie, surrounded by the houses of old settlers mostly from the slave States, and with the aversion to Eastern people so common to that class Yet they are generally pleased to see us at their houses; and when approached with friendly confidence, reciprocate the good feeling, and show warmth of heart, and often real sterling worth.

"The Collins church shows the importance of even two or three families organizing and go ng forward. 'A physician, of the Dutch Reformed Church, having no society of that denomination near, proposed to one or two Congregational families, that they form a Congregational church. The church was formed, and one cold wintry day, a beginning was made toward a meeting-house by getting out timbers. The house is up, plastered and painted. The Congregational Union gave $200. We have seventeen members. The old settlers form a large part of our congregation. And now we want a powerful work of the Lord, that scores of them may be brought to Christ."

From another missionary, Southern Illinois:

"Our church is highly favored of the Lord Jesus. During these exciting times there seems to be a lively interest and good attendance. Some of our number (young men) have gone to the 'tented field.' They are men of great worth to us. We feel their absence deeply, but duty called them, and they have our waymest sympathy and prayers. Union men are multiplying, and becoming more thoroughly convinced that slavery is the cause of all our national trouble. We are now apparently more secure against threats and violence than ever before "

From Rev. Lucius Gould, Evangelist, Belvidere, March 6:

"You desire to know what the Lord has wrought in connection with my labors. At Mazon, I held a meeting, and about twenty were converted. At Dwight also a number were converted. At Ogle Station, in connection with Rev. J. G. Terrill, a few had been converted at the time I left. Brother T writes me, that the work of the Lord is still going on, and many are seeking salvation. It has been my privilege to witness the conversion of over thirty in connection with my private labors for Jesus: some very striking and peculiar ones."

From another missionary in Illinois:

"There is a strong Universalist and deistical influence here, emanating from a few men who have become so wise in their old age and leisure, as to be a wonder to themselves. They are inveterate talkers and debaters, and influence the young men who congregate about the stores to a very sad extent. It is idle to debate with them, for they acknowledge nothing with which to begin as a platform, and withal are manifestly insincere and hateful in their opposition to Christianity."

From another:

"The hated name of abolition is assuming unwonted attractions; and while the former burden is in a degree removed by an invisible hand, it seems to be the dictates of divine providence, that the churches of the West shall remain and become truly efficient by the only means of true efficiency, namely, self-support. That, and that only, under God, will make us wast we must be to meet our obligations."

INDIANA.

From Rev. Levin Wilson, Evangelist, Southern Indiana:

"The present state of things is giving some of the would-be national religious denominations some trouble. The Cumberland Presbyterians are having their share. We long plead with them to break union and fellowship with slaveholders, but they closed their eyes to the light of Bible arguments, and stopped their ears to all Gospel admonitions on the subject. They went further. Through their influence, they excited a spirit of intolerance, persecution, and mobocracy against the friends of humanity and the ministers of the Gospel of Christ. It was not enough for them to place a man under their ecclesiastical bonds, 'but, taking cognizance of legal matters,' they procured the strong hand of the ministers of law to aid them in their nefarious work, as in the case of the Rev. J. B. M'Cormick. In their ecclesiastical cours, from the highest to the lowest, they declared slaveholding to be no bar to Christian fellowship. . . . Now we are in the midst of a great pro-slavery rebellion; and three fifths of the Cumberland Presbyterians have joined in it, and withdrawn the aid of the missionary funds from the free States where the churches are generally feeble. My prayer is as it ever has been that the Lord will open their eyes to the truth, and give them grace to do his will."

From a female missionary teacher among the colored people at Evansville, etc.

"My school has continued steadily to improve, and its influence is more and more felt among all the colored people. I have fully gained their confidence, and think they now feel that whatever I do will be for their real good. The children enjoy their school. This, together with the promise of a reward to the most prompt and cons ant. has stimulated them to greater exertion and I have been less tried by absence and tardiness. Their improvement in dress deportment, and in their studies is encouraging. and affords them great pleasure. There seems to be a desire to have their school as good as the white schools. They have learned to apply and fix their thoughts much better than formerly. Their examination was very creditable to them and satisfactory to visitors. Through the efforts of the children our house is made comfortable, the Sabbath-school and children's meeting are doing well,

"My labors out of school have been more extensive than they were last year. I have made many religious calls, and distributed several hundreds of tracts. I also established a female prayer-meeting among a few families who did not attend church. As they were mostly irreligious people, the me-ting devolved entirely upon myself; but the Lord graciously met with us, and often nearly every eve was filled with tears. I trust that angels have rejoiced over the returning sinner whose first awakenings were at these little meetings.

"I am sorry to be unable to report any conversions among my scholars. Oh! that the Lord would come and bless us according to his loving-kindness and the multitude of his tender mercies, and redeem these children to himself, a people to his praise."

From another missionary, Adams Co., August 1, 1861:

"The slaveholders are making abolitionists in the South at a rate per day much more rapid than all the anti-slavery lecturers of the world could produce. Even here, in Adams county, some that were distinguished for their pro-slaveryism will now confess that they can see no way to establish and perpetuate peace in the land until slavery is removed from the country.

"This is a very convenient time to discuss the question of slavery, as to its anti-Christian as well as its anti Republican character. The people now have ears to hear, and should be invited to consider the subjects in all its aspects. They need this exhibition of truth at this time, for all their thoughts are about the war, with its cause and consequences. It appears to me that every Christian minister in the land should cry aloud and spare not, and show the people their transgression and the citizens their sins. The ears of the people are open. Let us take courage and speak freely and fully; for it is certain that we never had before this time such a favorable opportunity, and we are not certain that it will be given us to have such an opportunity again. May we be found faithful to the cause of our God and the interests of our fellow-men."

From another missionary:

"There is a general dearth through all this region. The Gospel has but little power -past delinquencies, present backwardness incline the world to look on and say: "What is religion? Has it any power?' I feel to cry: 'O Lord! how long?'

"Our region of country is inhabited by a population mostly moral and sober; but few grog-sheps or other places of evil resort. The youth for the most part are well behaved, though not so well educated, owing to unfavorable location, as in many places, but religious persons are comparatively few. The Sabbath is observed but poorly, that is, a great deal of visiting, traveling, etc., is done by church members as well as others. Our church tries to keep up our testimony, but we do not altogether

"The anti-slavery cause in its purity has but few advocates. The feeling against color is very strong, though not showing itself in any violent way. We are allowed to receive them into our school, and no one molests us; and we hope and believe that the testimony which we thus bear, and the quiet, upright behavior and studious deportment of our few colored youth, are having a good effect upon the people—at least holding in check the bitterness which rankles in so many bosoms. Temperance is pretty well observed. There are few grog shops.

"The Congregational or Pre-byterian element is weak in this whole region. I think there is not a Pre-byterian church in this county, and but laree Congregational churches, all small. But few of the people have emigrated from regions where such churches prosper and prevail. I hope and believe that our influence feeble as we are, goes forth for good, and that future years will perfect the harvest which is to spring from the seed we are painfully sowing."

MICHIGAN.

From a missionary in Kalamazoo Co., March, 1861:

"Reformation.—Among the converts there was one who for many years had been a confirmed drunkard. For the last two years, I can not say that I ever saw him when he was not drunk, until I saw him arrested by the Spirit of God, and under deep conviction. Before the church, he remarked: 'Two months ago, I would sooner have believed that I should be at this time lifting up my eyes in threat than a subject of the grace of God, seeking admission into the Christian Church. A few weeks ago, I contemplated doing away with myself, as I was so mis rable, almost in despair.' At that time he said, he fell on his knees and fervently prayed: 'Have mercy upon me, a miserable sinner.' As he prayed, he felt so deeply the pollution of his heart, that he could but smite on his breast and cry out: 'Have mercy upon me, a sinner.' For some time after this, the passion for strong drink was so powerf. I as almost to overcome him. In his helplessness he cast himself on Christ in prayer, that the passion for drink might be taken away from him; and that Saviour who cast out the devils from Mary Magdalene, cast out the rum and whisky demon from him, so that from that hour, he said, he had not had a desire for liquor."

About the first of August, this church (Augusta) sent to the Association a copy of the following resolutions:

"Whereas, During the past year, the Lord has greatly blessed us, spiritually and temporally, by adding to our members, and increasing our pecuniary ability, as a church, and

"Whereas, We learn that the American Missionary Association, who during our feebler years, watched over us, and led us by the hand, are at present in pressing pecuniary aid, therefore

"Resolved, That we, as a church, deem it our duty, and do henceforth declare ourselves a self-sustaining church, from April 1st, 1861.

*Resolved. That we acknowledge with gratitude the assistance received from the American Missionary Association, as having been, in the hands of God, the means in a great measure of giving us existence as a church, and we hope that in the future, they may find us no less willing and cheerful, to the extent of our ability, as God may prosper us, to aid them in carrying on the noble work committed to their trust.

"Resolved, That our pastor be requested to send a copy of the above to the Home Secretary."

From another missionary:

"No favor aside from the necessary food for the family, touches a minister's heart, like a donation of books, or the means for that specific object. It comes like 'cold water to a thirsty soul.' If those at the East knew as I do this particular want of Wester's ministers, who have been compelled to commence their work without a library, they would see a channel for doing good that has too often been overlooked. The minister of the present day must not only be a thinker but a reader; and many a man fails in some degree to be up to the time and age, because he can not buy the necessary food for the mind; thus he goes crippled but still hoping, never feeling more strongly tempted than when he eiters a well-filled book-store. I know that our friends at the East are doing much, and are asked to do much more. But there are many who, if they knew all, would be glad to do something in this channel, for it would be an investment which would be remainent."

From a missionary in Ottawa county:

"There has been a small increase in our church since the date of my commission.

Our congregations are good, and men who have been Southern in sentiment are now soundly Union, while ultra men of that character, if not converted, are silenced.

Our population, with few exceptions, attend church on the Sabbath. Universalism and infidelity used to be prevalent; they are now scarcely known.

Our village being a port of entry, and in the midst of a lumbering region, it might be expected that intemperance would prevail; but in this respect there is much improvement."

OHIO

From Rev. J. A. R. Rogers:

the power of the Holy Ghost."

"Decature, September 9th, 1861.

"Our Sabbath-school has increased in numbers and interest. A young people's prayer meeting has been established with great promise of good; some who were in darkness have turned their faces. Zionward, and a great light has arisen upon them, one of them has in view the Gospel muistry. The excitement arising from the war has not interfered with the interest in the salvation of men's souls, neither has it, on the other hand, operated as strongly as I had hoped in creating a spirit of self-sacrifice in the soldiers of the cross in doing battle for their great Captain. Something has been learned, I trust, of the necessity of wisely-directed and persistent human instrumentalities in the work of evangelization, and their utter inefficiency unless accompanied by " September 27, 1861.

"I spent Sabbath, the 26th inst. at Cabin Creek, Ky. Though it was not known till Saturday evening, on my arrival there, that there would be preaching on the Sabbath, there was quite an audi-noe assembled apperently very eager to hear the words of life. The day was one of great enjoyment and profit to myself, and I hope not without benefit to the people. Old associations were called up by us, and we were all constrained to raise another Eb-nezer as we saw in how many ways we thought not of the Lord had helped us. There was not the least opposition or disturbance manifested during my visit. I was repeatedly told that, if need be, there were fifty men ready to shed their last drop of blood in my defense. Of course I did not expect there would be any occasion for such a manifestation of regard for one of Christ's feeble ministers.

"The brethren, though faint, seemed to be pressing on the Christian warfare with unabated purpose of heart. They maintain their Sabbath-school and meetings for worship on the Lord's day, though destitute of the preached Gospel. The meeting-house itself stands a continual testimony against the sin of slavery. Most of the male members belong to the Home Guard, and not a few of them will join the army as soon as they are assured that they are not needed to protect their own freedies.

"The present troub es in Kentucky increase my love for the dear old State, and cause an increased longing to be with the people. These troubles remind me of the universal feeling among the expelled Bereans that their friends should not mourn for them, but for those who were the cause of their expulsion."

Rev. Mr. Fee wrote from Ohio:

"I tremble for my country now as at no previous time. If the President and the people fail to improve this opportunity, so open and unexceptionable, and harden their heats sgainst the claims of God's poor, then we have, as Egypt had, judgments in reserve; and our rivers must be turned into blood, (as at Bull Run,) and the shrieks of the first-born will go up from every family. The North is guilty; will she now repent?"

From a missionary in Miami Co.:

"For years the anti-slavery principles which distinguished the Wesleyan Church from all the other churches in this place, have been very unpopular. But it seems as if the Southern rebellion had accomplished that which years of protest, and reproof, and warning had failed to do. The people seem at last aroused to the fact that slavery was fast ruining the country. . I find that amid all the excitement and commotion incident to the unhappy state of the nation, the calmest and most hopeful of all classes are the hearty and consistent reformers, who for years have been warning the people of the very calamities that are now upon us. True, faithful men of God, who have fearlessly borne persecution in the early days of anti-slavery reform, can afford to be calm in the midst of the present storm."

From another missionary in Ohio, January 25th, 1861:

"We feel thankful to the Father of Mercies for what he has already wrought, and are greatly encouraged to labor on in this infinitely blessed work, believing that we shall see still greater results. Our congregations are very good. I know of but very few fields that are more promising than the one we are now occupying. Our people are in straitened circum-tances so far as the things of this world are concerned. They feel very grateful for the sid rendered them by your committee. Without it they could not have sustained their pastor. We labor under many embarrassments, but these shall not deter us, while we hear the Master saying: 'Lo I I am with you,' 'My grace is sufficient for thee.'"

From a colporteur in Pennsylvania:

"In the bounds of my operations the people are mostly moral and church-going, and the Sabbath is outwardly well observed, churches are numerous and well attended. I wish I could say that these churches were spiritual, progressive, and reformatory. The Presby terian (O. S.) churches are numerous and influential, but the ministers, with a few exceptions, have given me a c of reception, and some of the members are rank proslavery, while others are evidently inquiring after the truth. With the exception of three or four men, I can not hear that the merits of slavery are discussed in the pulpit in any proper way, in this region. On the evils of whi-ky-selling and druking, and tobacco-using, there is, so far as I can learn, almost entire silence among the ministry and churches. There is a great and pressing need of the kind of books I circulate. If the pulpits would speak out, my labors might be dispensed with, but I rejoice that I have put hundreds of books into circulation, which will stir up the minds of multitudes to think seriously on those great and momentous questions which are agitating this nation from center to circumference."

From a Welsh missionary in Pennsylvania:

"The church under my charge is in a very good condition. Brotherly love is strong, and every member seems to feel that it is his duty to do something for the cause of Christ. The congregation seem to be much interested in the preaching of the Gospel, and under the blessing of the Holy Spirit we may expect a good harvest ere long.

My visiting tours are blessed to a great extent. I find hundreds that do not go to any place of worship."

THE SPIRIT AND AIM OF THE GOSPEL.

"THE Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."—LUKE 4:18.

THE seers of our day behold a double vision. One picture is all sadness, and gloom, and fears, the death-shadow seems spreading over a dying republic, and other nations are seen rejoicing at the prospect, and considering how they may divide the spoil. The other shows us the rising glory of a new-born era; and beyond the dark river, tearful and bloody, which we are crossing now, there gleams the peaceful, sunny aspect of a delivered and united land, a nation Christian and free. Which of the e pictures presents our actual future? On this question mere history sheds little light. No such rebellion as this has hitherto disgraced humanity. Free institutions are assaulted just when their blessings are richer, better known, and more valued than ever, and the sin against God, and the crime against man, of attempting to found an empire on slavery, is tenfold greater now than it could have been before, because it has been cast off as an accursed thing by nearly every nation under heaven. The past then furnishes no gauge for this stupendous iniquity.

Nor does the present scene aid us much in forecasting the future.

The danger is greater than we have met before. From our western prairies to the eastern sea, our plains, hillsides, and mountains are red with American blood, shed by American hands. There are thousands of new-made graves where our slain lie in "garments rolled in blood;" there are more thousands still of living sufferers; countless homes are desolate, and the crowd of mourners lengthens dail its sad procession. Land and sea leap to the cannon's voice; earth feels the tread of five hundred thousand armed men; hostile flags—one, the strange, dishonored badge of traitors—float over almost endless lines of entrenchments and guns, and all around us are the pomp and pride, the stern array, the passions and tears and agony of war. Amid this scene, so sad, so threatening, and yet so terribly magnificent in its bloody array, it becomes the Christian to inquire whither are we tending, what will be the result, why have these calamities come upon us, and how may these judgments of God be averted?

In order to answer these questions we must first of all understand the real meaning of this war. Until this is settled, nothing can be made clear. Those who expect that, after some decisive battle, permanent peace will be suddenly restored, the country settle back to its former condition, and all our old relations be resumed, will find themselves deceived. We have passed one great stage of our coun try's history, and it can never return. In God's great march of events there is no panic, or repulse, or retreat. We are in the midst of a great social and political revolution, that is sweeping toward a definite goal which we must reach or perish - the establishment of free institutions over all this land. There will be, there can be, no permanent peace, or pause, until this work is done. Our rulers may, perhaps, hesitate or refuse to act; they may form other designs; they may resolve to stop short of the goal; they may strive to induce others to swerve from the work, or fetter the manly arm that would strike for freedom, and repudiate the bold words that thrilled the national heart; but unless we are sentenced already, it will avail nothing; the broad stream of events tends only in one direction, and it is resistless as the sweep of eternity.

The task before us is not alone to fight a few successful battles, but to re-shape the whole social and political structure of the country; to re-mold private opinions and public policy; to emancipate the North; to save, in spite of herself, the blighted, maddened, almost demoniac South, bless her with the nobler life of Northern institutions, and make her the worthy, integral part of a great, free, and Christian naiton.

My general purpose in this discourse is to present-

First. The true spirit and aim of the Gospel in contrast with the antagonistic scheme of Satan.

Second. To set forth the true idea and mission of our country, to show that we have brought these calamities upon us by departing widely from it, and that our chief national sin is the incorporating into a professedly Christian system a main element of heathenism, cherishing and protecting an anti-Christian barbarism, by which we have seriously hindered the spread of the Gospel, corrupted the Church, endangered, by our evil example, the cause of Christian freedom every where, and brought upon us these judgments of God.

Let us first study the true spirit and aim of the Gospel, in order to judge whether, with our past or present policy, we can fulfill the mission of a Christian nation, or whether the Church herself can thus obey the command of Christ to preach the Gospel unto every creature.

Christ presents us, in his scheme, two distinct purposes that together form the plan of salvation. He proclaims for the individual, repentance toward God, faith in the Son, the new birth, sanctification through the Spirit, and eternal life as the great result. To this one idea the American Church, of all denominations, has in the main restricted, itself for at least fifty years. To this, French infidelity first, clamoring against the union of Church and State, and then politicians seeking to escape from Christian rebuke, have striven hard to confine her. The Church weakly consented. She deserted her proper post, she yielded up her rights, she parted with her influence, she allowed herself to be judged and directed by Christless politicians and by an unprincipled and even infidel press; she disgraced herself and dishonored her Lord. This preparing the individual for heaven is, however, but one part of the Saviour's plan. He announces equally a physical, a social, a political salvation, a full recovery for every portion of the ruin, a remedy for the whole disaster.

Christianity is intended not only to save the soul, but it is a recovering life-power for society, and intended to re-shape all the institutions of earth after the heavenly model. Now the central idea in this regeneration of society, an idea blazing out like a sun over all the Bible, is the dignity and worth of the individual man, the immortal humanity, the royal son of heaven, bearing his Father's image, bought back from the slavery of Satan, by the blood of Jesus Christ, his Kinsman Redeemer. With this idea in view, Christ demands that such a creature, the son of God, shall not be crushed by human institutions, nor in any manner oppressed by human power; that institutions must be made for man, not man for them, and that every individual of this heavenborn race shall have a fair field for free and full development, and that the whole social and political system shall be so shaped as to aid every man to grow up to the full stature of his manhood, to become all that God has given him capacity to be.

This then is the essential idea of the Gospel as applied to man and his institutions here; to lift steadily every form and condition of humanity toward a perfect manhood, because man is the royal brother of Christ. But as Satan is the antagonist of Jesus, the anti-Christ, so his anti-Christian system stands opposed, feature by feature, to the plan of the Son of God; and the central Satanic idea, therefore, is to dishonor and degrade humanity, because man is the image of God, and brother of his deadly foe, and his system tends ever to sink the masses of men to ignorance, poverty, and brutehood, to force them down to that last stage this side of the shame and ruin of hell, where every proud characteristic of manhood is stripped away, and they become human brutes, with no human rights, without citizenship, or property, or education, or homes, or marriage, or family, or family name, living in the legal status of the beasts, and leaving, like the brutes, no memorial when they die, so that the grave of Pomp, the man, has no more significance than that of Cæsar, the dog.

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

Such are the two systems of life which are operating in this world upon our race, that of Christ which proposes to instruct, and refine, and elevate all men, even the laboring classes, to lift them to the highest level of humanity here, and then crown them with eternal life; and that Satanic civilization, which by its demoniac spell changes the masses into man-shaped cattle here, and then hurls them through the gates of death into the deeper degradation/of hell. Nor is this all. All classes of society are bound together by inseparable ties. Inevitably they rise or fall together, and when the laboring masses sink to slaves and chattels, the ruling classes, by a terrible but just necessity, follow downward to barbarism, which is none the less real, though surrounded by the external pomp of Egypt, or Greece, or Rome.

It needs but a single glance at history to verify these statements of the tendency and result of all the heathen civilizations of the world. They are all parts of one Satanic, anti-Christian scheme, and the effect upon the masses of men, the laborers, has been in all ages essentially the same.

The Holy Spirit in describing the great military governments of antiquity, from the flood to the Christian era, presents them one and all as beasts of prey. Lion, or bear, or leopard, or the nondescript Roman monster, their mission was to tear in pieces and devour, to trample out the life of humanity.

Profane history, covering the same great era, shows us the splendor of royal palaces and imperial cities, the lordly priest and costly temple, the pomp of armies, and battle-fields piled with dead, and long processions of bound and weeping captives, but in all that picture, where man wrought for two thousand four hundred years under these Satanic civilizations, there is not to be found a free intelligent people outside of the Jewish state. Under every other government of antiquity, the masses approached the condition of government serfs or chattel slaves. It is, moreover, worthy of special remark, that in proportion as the race receded from the light of primitive revelation, the condition of the people became worse, till Rome, stumbling in the darkness, and wallowing in the filthy mire of her heathenism, counted in her empire sixty millions of chattel slaves - showing, in the clearest manner, how this human brutehood, which we have seen fit to introduce, cherish, and defend, is the natural result and true expression of the last and worst stage of an expiring heathenism.

Let us now turn again to that great recovering system which Christ came to introduce, and we shall see that in spirit, and purpose and results, it is the exact antagonism of that which we have considered; and that while a contempt for labor, and the enslaving of the working people, are inseparable from heathenism, they can no more form a part of the Christian system than could the worship of Jupiter or Astarte, or the sacrifices of the heathen altars.

How then can we avoid the startling conclusion, that no greater crime could be committed against man, no more foul dishonor done to God, no keener insult offered to Christ, no greater obstacle presented to the spread of the Gospel and a Christian civilization, than for us, placed in the foremost position in the world's great march, in the very focus of the heavenly light, and deriving all our prosperity from the principles which we have repudiated-for us to dig up the putrid corpse of Roman heathenism, place it as a political god in our halls of state, and demand that it shall crush into brutehood millions of American citizens, that Christian ministers shall keep silence in its presence, that it shall be welcomed and feared in the churches, and that Jesus shall endure its disgusting presence at his own suppertable.

On the point under discussion, the spirit of the Hebrew code and that of the Gospel are the same.

For fifteen hundred years, through the law and the prophets, God proclaimed to the Jews the dignity of man, the sacredness of the immortal creature, whose brow bore the image of Jehovah. In his deepest poverty he was to be pitied and aided as a brother; borne down by debt, the poor debtor's feelings were to be regarded more than money; and even when a transgressor, and worthy of stripes, it was not to be forgotten that the criminal was still a man, while to reduce a man to chattelism was a crime punished with death, because God was insulted in the degradation of his creature. During all their national history the Jews leaned toward heathen oppression; they trod down the poor and weak, and they held their brethren in unlawful bondage, and at the time of the coming of Christ, the spirit, though not the form, of Roman slavery pervaded the country; the poor were scorned, the laborer was despised and oppressed, and the haughty nobility spoke of the workers, the masses, as a worthless, accursed rabble, having no rights that the wealthy were bound to respect.

Such was the world which preceded Christ, and such the state of society in which he appeared, and now the all important question is, how and where did he begin the world's redemption, and what was the nature of the good news he brought.

Of course, the Son of God chose the place and manner of his appearance, and that choice must have been with definite purpose and an essential part of his plan. Not in the palace, nor the hall of the noble, nor any home of wealth or power, was the infant Redeemer laid, but far down in the lowest sphere of the common people, among the laborers of Judea-thus connecting himself with the lowest social grades of humanity, and ennobling poverty by the presence of the descended God. Thirty years after, we hear the puzzled and angry Jew inquiring: "Is not this the carpenter?" It was indeed the carpenter, one of the most significant facts in the life of Jesus. The divine Man, the type and head of perfected humanity, wrought with the mechanic Joseph. The Maker of all worlds took the position of the humble craftsman, and labored with his own hands among the workers of earth; and thus he ennobled the laborer, and made labor illustrious forever. Again, this divine Founder of an everlasting kingdom, which will displace all others with its more powerful life, goes forth to appoint his officers. The world is all before him whence to choose his agents for the greatest work of the ages; and we see him stand by the little lake and call some of the lowest laborers even in Galilee, and they become the cabinet ministers of the King of kings.

And now he is ready for his work. He enters the synagogue, and states what his mission is, and sets forth its principles in the language of the text: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

Friends, if any one can look at those old heathen, Satanic despotisms, with their wretched, ignorant, down-trodden people forming the dark back-ground of their delusive splendor, and then listen to the thunders of the Jewish prophets vindicating the rights of the laboring people, and see how the pages of the Bible seem to blaze with God's wrath against oppression, and then stand by the Redeemer's cradle, or with him while he labored himself, or listen to his first announcement of his principles, or the message sent to John that he brought good news to the laboring poor, and then assert that chattel slavery is sanctioned by the Bible, and forms a proper part of the Christian system, that man can be reached by no argument but such an one as smote down Saul on his way to Damascus. Nothing but the lightning flash of the Shekinah can open the double-barred dungeons of his mind.

Slavery was an excrescence on the Jewish system, and God pruned it off with his lightnings. But it was the legitimate fruit of Roman heathenism; and so Christ, instead of pruning, sent out the apostles to strike at the very root of the Paganism which bore it, and plant Christianity in its stead.

If, now, this Christian system in its historical development has vindicated its original principles, we can bring the argument directly down to our own times, and show more clearly still the mistake and sin of our country in attempting this impossible union of the system of Christ with the old counterfeit of Satan, and why it must be removed before we can fulfill the mission of a Christian nation.

When the Gospel was first preached to the Gentiles, there were in the Roman world sixty millions of chattel slaves, embracing nearly all the industrial classes of the empire. Labor was enslaved. This was the starting-point. The life-power of the Gospel was planted there, and wrought on in the empire till at length Rome was nominally Christian. Then the empire crumbled and passed away, and modern Christian Europe arose with her feudal system, but chattel slavery for the masses had vanished with the old Paganism, and the people under the feudal barons rose one step into the condition of serfs. They had ascended from brutehood to manhood, ignorant and degraded though the manhood was. Man was no longer a thing, no longer in the legal status of the beast. The Gospel to that extent had wrought deliverance for the captives, and lifted humanity one step out of the chattel degradation of heathenism.

The system of Jesus still wrought on. True, the uplifting of the masses was like the slow upheaval of continents, but the process of elevation was sure; and the next grand step was the abolition of serfdom, and the laboring classes in Europe, the extreme north excepted — thank God no longer an exception now — rose to the condition of freemen. In theory at least they became citizens of a Christian state.

In Continental Europe the despotism of the Church itself hindered the progress of the people, while in Great Britain, after the Reformation, a freer, purer Gospel gave a new impulse to Christian freedom. and produced the commons of England, the masses ascending in the scale of humanity exactly in proportion to the progress of an unfettered Gospel, and the great Teutonic race taking the front in the march of freedom, because they, more than all others, had received the reformed Christianity.

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

At this time, in England, this conflict of the ages between the spirit of heathenism and the spirit of Christ assumed a new and definite form, and that English battle stands closely connected with our own, and shows clearly its real nature. The emancipation of the serfs was the true birth-hour of our English and American liberties. In theory at least, it was the throwing open the broad field of human effort to all, with liberty for each to dare and achieve for himself and family, according to the power that was in him, with liberty to realize Christ's own idea of manhood. In theory, it was the Christian liberty, the unfettered pursuit of good and happiness, so solemnly set forth in our own Bill of Rights, and intended to be secured to all.

Jesus came, (in the power of his Gospel,) as the emancipator of Southern Europe, and replaced on the head of the workers the lost crown of their manhood.

The laborers of England soon formed a new estate in the realm, rising through the ennobling Gospel, in intelligence, wealth, and power, till they won for themselves the illustrious name of the Commons of England; and when, through their influence, it was decided that one touch of English soil, and one breath of her air, could transform a slave into a man, the Christian idea of liberty became a living power in the British constitution. But to reach this, the struggle was long and bitter. The spirit of heathen despotism lingered and ruled long after the system had passed away. The common people, the laborers, the mechanics, the tradesmen, the smaller land-owners, were compelled to fight their way upward at every step against the contempt, the pride, the power of the nobility, they in whom the master spirit was strong and haughty as ever, who thought it beneath a gentleman to perform any act of labor, and who regarded even a merchant with contempt.

The rising industrial classes, and the haughty aristocracy, were long held almost as distinct as the slaveholders and their servants now are; the proud, exclusive spirit of the noble, the gentleman, regarding a laboring man as next to a slave. Here it is important to observe, that the great English popular movement which culminated under Cromwell received its whole impulse from the spirit of the Gospel. I do not mean that it was conducted at all points in a Christian spirit, or that its leaders were all pure-hearted men, but I do mean that the power which lifted and rolled on the popular wave was the true spirit of Christ demanding the recognition of human rights, and asserting the proper manhood of the people and the proper dignity of labor. The assertion that the religion of the English Puritans was merely a hypocritical cloak, is the most superficial of slanders. Of all men, they were most deeply in earnest.

The spirit of the Reformation carried a great portion of the English people far beyond the king, the nobles, and the Church. The Church was but half reformed, the throne was a despotism, and too many of the nobility irreligious and even profligate, but thousands of the people were sincerely pious; they had drunk deep into the power and simplicity of the Gospel, and through the unvarying and irrepressible spirit of Christianity, just in proportion as the inner life grew strong, it sought and demanded for itself the freedom and the support of popular institutions. A soul made free in Christ becomes conscious of the dignity of an immortal nature, and as a brother whom the Divine Humanity confesses before the Father, it demands, in the name of Jesus, recognition as a man below.

Upon this body of Christian freemen, in the main the middle class of England, the king, the nobles, the bishops, turned with the true spirit of an anti-christian despotism. The fierce hatred, the bitter scorn, the insolent ridicule, which hissed with passion, have no parallel in modern times except in the South now, where, according to Mr. Russell, the fiendlike hate of the slaveholders for the canting, praying, Yankee hypocrites, makes the anger of the old Cavalier toward the psalm-singing Roundhead seem passionless and cold. The expectation and the boast of the "born to rule class," the gentlemen, of England, was, that they would ride down the unwashed farmers and greasy mechanics as a leopard would scatter sheep. The result was, that they were crushed by Cromwell's troops as if they were mere children in arms, and Church, aristocracy, and throne went down together before the shock of the people - a Christian people striking for Christian freedom.

That English struggle, then, was an an attempt to elevate and ennoble the laboring masses of the people. It was the spirit of the Gospel laboring to express itself in the institutions of the state. It was the Gospel working deliverance, met and put down by the same anti-christian despotism which in all time has scorned the people, and sought to oppress and enslave the laborer, and which has been the constant and the greatest obstacle to the progress of the Gospel, holding the masses in ignorance of Jesus, and teaching the rulers to scorn him. The free institutions of England were overthrown, but all that is noblest in her life to-day, is the outgrowth of the principles of the time of Cromwell; and the Gospel is preparing there another triumph for the people.

The lines of history are thus seen to converge upon and illustrate the conflict of to-day, and reveal, alike our mission and our sin. The character of the two systems which shake the country with this war can not be mistaken now.

These Northern colonies stood commissioned of God to exhibit, in a more perfect manner and on a grander scale than earth ever saw before, the practical workings of the Gospel. They were to found a free and Christian state—in the language of Carlyle, "to get the will of God done on earth." Their aim was to base a republic on the law of God, to frame a body of institutions which should fitly express the real spirit of Christ, which should recognize the one blood relationship of the race, the worth and dignity of the individual man; which should regard all men as equal before God, and with equal rights and privileges before the law. They aimed to educate every man, however humble; to honor and dignify labor; to open before every man a fair, free field, and to offer all due reward to honorable industry.

It was an attempt to express in a government the Christian idea of liberty, and to bind the whole population of a state into one free, intelligent, Christian brotherhood—an earnest, heroic, God-fearing community, with its free churches and free schools, and freemen, with no master, or slave, or bishop, or noble, or king,—a new and grand experiment in Christian civilization. They founded a state designed to instruct, protect, and elevate humanity, with Christ supreme over all, acknowledged alike in public and private, in the State and the Church.

Here alone is found the true American idea; these only are the true germ principles of the American nation.

We were commissioned of the Lord to preach his Gospel, in our national capacity, by our institutions and our policy; to exhibit unto the world on this unequaled theater, and on this magnificent scale, the practical workings of the Christian scheme.

I fully believe that Jesus intended that, under him, this free American Christian State should be the deliverer of the nations. He meant that from us should go forth the voice that should thrill and quicken all humanity; he thought to breathe through us the dissolving spell that should melt the old despotisms away, and to impart to this people that transforming life-power which should remodel the institutions of earth. This is the American mission, this the American idea. This was the original spirit and purpose of these Northern colonies.

But side by side with these, on our Southern shore, was planted the germ of a system the exact antagonism of this. The old foes of popular rights and Christian liberty established themselves on the soil of Virginia; they came the representatives of the throne, the prelacy, the nobility—they who considered themselves the masters, the gentlemen, as distinguished from the laborer—they came dyed in the wool with the old spirit of anti-christian despotism, with the old scorn of labor, the old desire to degrade and enslave the industrial classes, the same determination to hold the workers in ignorance; and the Cavalier in his new home hated as cordially, and cursed as bitterly, the praying, psalm-singing Yankee as he did the Roundhead in England. Then, in addition to what was most corrupt and anti-christian in modern Europe, they went back two thousand years, and dug up from the dead heathenism of Rome the Pagan idea of chattel slavery, and made it the chief corner-stone of their political system. They declared it to be a Christian institution, baptized it into the Church of Jesus, and planted this Satanic barrier right across the Christian march of our nation. We permitted it, then sanctioned it, then bound ourselves to defend it; and to-day, corrupted, weakened, divided, at war, and smitten of God, we are eating the bitter fruit of our devices. We have repudiated in our national policy the American Christian idea; we have unfitted ourselves for preaching the Gospel in its freeness and fullness; we have proclaimed not the thrilling message of Jesus, the unbinding of burdens, the breaking of yokes, the deliverance of the captives; we have brought, instead, to the poor and weak the bad news of oppression and tears, of agony and despair.

This is the miscalled Gospel which we have preached to four millions of men; this is the practical exhibition of Christianity which we have made to thirty-two millions here, and to the world at large, and now God has called us to give an account of our stewardship of the grace of his Gospel.

I do not ask you now, to dwell on the wrongs done to the slaves, terrible as these are, and requiring swift repentance. The argument sweeps far wider than that. I wish you to consider the influence which our national policy has had, first upon the twenty millions of the North. I believe that through this policy we have cast our birthright away; that we have parted with our manhood, failed to assert our proper rights; that we have timidly yielded and served, when it was not only our privilege, but our duty to rule. The humiliating fact is, that for more than eighty years the South has ruled us in the spirit of a master, and we have submitted meekly to every command. We have been superior in numbers, in wealth, in every element of material power, in intelligence, in science, art, literature, and in every department of human effort; and yet the South has constantly dictated our national policy as absolutely as if they were our legal masters, and have controlled the public sentiment in Church and State, till now, we are confronted with the amazing fact that at least twenty-two millions of those who would sustain the Government find it difficult so to array and direct their strength as to cope with less than six millions of whites in the seceded South.

Now, for such an astonishing state of things, where the few ever rule the many, and the weak lord it over the strong, there must be some adequate cause. Such things do not come by chance. It explains nothing to say the North has been divided, and the South is a unit. Why has not the North been united? Why has she not stood as one man to the defense of her principles? Equally vain is it to say that the politicians of the North have betrayed the people, Why is there no public sentiment which would render such treachery impossible? Who dares betray the South? If there had been no material at the North meek enough to bear betrayal, there would have been no breach of trust. Nor does it explain any thing to say that we have cared more for business than politics. How is it that the North sunk so low that business and money were dearer to her than independence, and honor, and principle, till she would meekly bear the insolence of Southern dictation; till she thought it nothing, only a matter of course, that her representatives should be socially scorned, and even beaten without redress in the Senate Chamber itself? Say what we will, we have consented to take the position of inferiors, and we have failed to exhibit the chief elements of manhood. There is, I think, a profound meaning in this, which we of the North ought at once to understand,

When the Constitution was framed, the power of the North lay in its industry and laborers. The population was composed of the intelligent working middle-class. In the South the haughty slave-holders, despising both labor and laborers, held the relative position of the English nobility, only that the peasantry here were slaves. When they demanded, and the North permitted, a recognition of themselves as owners of laborers, and their workmen as slaves, there was established in the state a superior master-class, a nobility, farther removed from the workers than even the English nobles. The North degraded its labor, it placed all its laboring millions in the position of inferiors, and they were made to feel that they were lower in grade than the gentlemen—the nobility of the South.

grade than the gentlemen—the nobility of the South.

The demoralizing influence of this well-nigh fatal concession

The demoralizing influence of this well-nigh fatal concession has run through all our subsequent history. Insolent demand, the assuming of a master's rights, and servile submission on our part have marked every step of our course. We increased in numbers and wealth, but we lost our manliness, our self-reliance, our self-respect. We lost a high, fine sense of honor; we could scarcely be goaded to resist a Southern encroachment, or resent an insult; we grew insensible to the importance of principle; we were becoming incapable of lofty feelings and heroic deeds; we were sinking rapidly to the weak, cowardly spirit of a class that has consented to be ruled. All this was the inevitable consequence of the degradation which we put upon labor, and the legal recognition of a master-class; and so long as this ruling class, owning laborers, is permitted to exist, the laboring North will be compelled to occupy an inferior position, and will stand before an arrogant nobility. We were in a condition where we were no longer capable of preaching or exhibiting aright the high and manly Gospel of Christ. God saw that we must have convulsion and war to restore us to ourselves, and those guns at Sumter were a trumpet call from heaven awaking the North to a resurrection of its manhood. The manner of our conducting the war thus far, is mortifying proof that we half acknowledge yet the presence of a master.

We hesitate with a spirit of servile reverence in regard to the person and property of the slaveholder, and we are particularly tender of his claim to man. It daily causes the sacrifice of our noblest young men; it brings upon us, through our hesitation, disadvantage and disaster; it prolongs the war, drains our treasure, endangers our cities, strengthens and makes insolent the enemy; it causes wonder and sneers in Europe; and yet we have not the manly courage to deliver ourselves from this thraldom, and assert and maintain our superiority and our rights, by striking down this claim to property in man, and scorning the base idol we have worshiped.

When Fremont nobly dared to speak the bold word that our ears and hearts were aching for, one whispered threat from Kentucky had more power in Washington than all the millions of Northern freemen, who approved his act. The spell of a slaveholding nobility hangs yet over Washington—a spell that only a thunder-storm from the people can break. Cromwell had to deal with this same spirit. He knew the influence which the throne and the nobility had exerted over the common people; he feared that their hearts would be faint, and their arms unstrung in battle before those whom they had reverenced, and drawing himself up before his soldiers, he drew his pistol and said, "This pistol will be discharged as readily against the king as any other," and thus he broke the spell of their reverence and fears. Would to God that some man might be raised up, with the courage of Cromwell, to speak for us the delivering word—some one to whom the sword "excalibur" may be given.

It is absolutely necessary for the North that she should assume the position of a master power. She must be made to feel that she is ruler of this land. Not otherwise can there be here a perfected religious, moral, or intellectual nation. Thus only can we fulfill our national mission. We claim no right to despotic authority; but we are bound by our regard for Christ, for his cause, for human freedom every where, and by our proper respect for ourselves, to say to the South, You have ruled us too long, your reign is over, your claim to degrade and enslave millions here is anti-Christian and inhuman, and by right of numbers, intelligence, wealth, and power, and in the name of God we shall henceforth govern this land in the interests of freedom. and for the advancement of the cause of Jesus. We can not preach a gospel for humanity till we resume our manhood ourselves, and take a position worthy of our numbers, wealth, intelligence, and power,

Again, we have dishonored Christ by suffering his Church to be brought into subjection to this anti-Christian power. The Church has been shorn of her boldness and her independence; she has not dared to preach in the language or spirit of her Master: she has ceased in great measure to be an aggressive, witnessing Church. She turned from Jesus, and sat down at the feet of politicians to be instructed; she no longer dared to occupy her proper position as leader of public thought; she was in great measure weak, timid, evasive, or silent. She and her ministers ceased to be a controlling power in the state, and therefore the religious idea faded out of our national councils, all political responsibility to God was ignored, and his higher law derided.

Without intending to use words of reproach, but simply to state a fact, as I would a truth in natural science. I say, the Church, by admitting slavery to her fellowship and communion, has rendered its removal impossible, except by war and revolution, or servile insurrection.

"Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect?" has a farreaching significance. If the Church, by her sanction and authority, places slavery or any other sin at the table of Jesus, and among the elect of God, it is the basest of all absurdities to suppose that the world will assail it as a sin, and bring charges against the elect of God. The people may overthrow it in blood, but it will never thus be reformed away. The Church that welcomes slavery has fortified the sin with all its own power, and with the influence of Christian civilization, and stands guard herself upon the intrenchments.

Friends, this is a sin of no common stamp. The light of the world was changed into darkness. The Gospel of freedom become an engine of oppression; the appointed leader of the world deserted her post, and the prophet refused to warn. Such a Church could not preach the Gospel for humanity; and God has brought upon the Christians of this land these days of tears and blood, that through suffering they may be born into a higher life, and made fit to be the Church of a nobler era.

Again, through our fostering of this heathen element, it has come to pass that at least one fourth of the population can in no way perform the duties of citizens or Christians, and to this extent the state is weakened, and Christ is dishonored. There are four millions of slaves, and at least four millions of degraded whites, the oppressed and uneducated victims of a slaveholding nobility; and now compare these eight millions with eight millions of the free, intelligent,

Christian population of Ohio or New-York, or New-England, with their active minds, their inventions, their productive industry, their schools, churches, and all the beautiful array of free Christian civilization, and you can see somewhat of the injury which has been wrought both for the cause of Christ and our nation, by holding these millions in this condition of ignorance and brutehood. To a majority of them no Gospel has been, or can be preached. which elevates and instructs, which organizes them into Christian families and communities, or which bestows upon them one single element of Christian civilization. To this extent we have bound ourselves not to preach the Gospel.

Again, instead of a Christian civilization, this despotism has reared up an actual barbarism over one half our country, and we have not only indorsed but cherished it. We have learned that men may be barbarians though surrounded by the external forms of civilization. and living amid the temples of a corrupted Christianity. We see that men may be none the less savages, though they use the rifled cannon and all the science of modern war. We have been chilled with horror at the aspect which the South presents as she stands unvailed by this war. The fiendlike hate, the fierce thirst for revenge and blood, which seems to change even women into demons, a spirit which is absolutely on fire with passion, the ferocious and cowardly acts which mark the savage heart, these have astonished the world, and we may well humble ourselves before God, and blush at ourselves when we consider that this is the system which we have cherished and defended, which we have so nearly reverenced, whose insolent domination the millions of the North have so tamely endured, and to which they have surrendered their manhood and their Church.

Finally. It has introduced into our State both an element of weakness and a treacherous foe, so that we are not only in peril from an enemy within, but are, for the moment, defenseless in the presence of foreign despotisms, and through our temporary disgraceful failure, the cause of Christian liberty and progress is endangered among all nations. The despotic spirit, even in England, sympathizes with the kindred element in the South, and pants with longing for the overthrow of the Republic, while our Government, in its reverence for the sacredness of the master-class and the master's property, dares not yet strike the great blow for liberty which would bring to our cause at once the cordial sympathy of the whole people of England and all Europe, make of our country the star of hope for the world, and bring upon us again the blessing of our God.

If I have not erred in this argument, the conclusions are clear and may be briefly stated.

There can be no deliverance for our land, no emancipation for the twenty millions of Northern freemen, by carrying on this war according to the present policy. To conquer a peace if we could, and then retain slavery in our system as before, would be simply to replace our masters in power to rule us more completely than ever, and obtain by political trickery what they could not wrest from us in war. There can be no safety, no true peace, no full grown, heroic manliness in this North, no proper exhibition of the Christian system, no fulfilling our national destiny until that slaveholding nobility is completely abolished, and Northern freemen, with a consciousness that we are the dominant power in this land, assert themselves as the rulers of the nation.

To found a free Christian state, with every man educated and free, and God recognized as supreme over all, this alone is the true American idea. To that we must return, and upon that we must henceforth model the American nation.

God has committed to us now this noblest mission of modern times. First to emancipate ourselves, and assume the leadership of the nation. Then to cover all that South with the free and Christian institutions of the North, and make the whole nation one in interest, spirit, and aims, and exhibit unto the world a perfected, free, and Christian Republic. Then, safe from all fear of foreign aggression, our loved old flag, with every star still gleaming on its field, and not one of them dimmed with a drop of blood, or one tear wrang from a down-trodden brother, shall be hailed every where as the symbol of a grander civilization than earth has seen as yet, and we shall be prepared then to preach that glorious Gospel which Christ declared in the text, a Gospel of deliverance for the captives, a Gospel that breaks the yoke and comforts the weak and the poor, a Gospel that honors, and instructs, and refines, and elevates our whole humanity. Then thrilling ourselves with the rich and living sympathies that bound Jesus to the heart of humanity, we may become the life-giving power for the nations, and in these American agonies may be found perhaps the birthhour of the Kingdom of God.

THE Sixteenth Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held in the First Congregational Church, Oberlin, Ohio, commencing Wednesday, October 15, 1862, at three c'clock P.M.

In the absence of the President, Rev. David Thurston, of Maine, the chair was taken by F. D. Parish, Esq., of Ohio, one of the Vice-Presidents. Prayer was offered by Rev. John G. Fee, of Kentucky.

Rev. Henry Belden, Recording Secretary, being absent, Rev. A. M. Richardson was appointed Secretary pro tem., and H. B. Spelman, Esq., Assistant Secretary.

The Treasurer's Annual Report was read, in his absence, by Rev. George Whipple, of New-York, with the Auditor's certificate appended.

A letter, addressed to the Treasurer, by Wm. Marsh, Esq., of Pawlet, Vt., written on his ninetieth birthday, was also read.

The Corresponding Secretary, Rev. George Whipple, of New-York, presented an abstract of the Annual Report of the operations of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds, most brade in Management of the Association in Foreign Eiglds in Management of the Association in Eiglds in Management of the Association in Eiglds in Management of the Eiglds in Management of the Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Secretary of the Home Department, followed with the Annual Report of that department.

Interesting statements were made by the Corresponding Secretaries, respecting the labors of the Society's missions among the Freedmen at Fortress Monroe, Port Royal, Washington, and elsewhere.

At the conclusion of these reports, a Business Committee was appointed, consisting of Rev. Henry Cowles, of Oberlin, Ohio; Rev. Samuel Wolcott, of Cleveland, Ohio; Rev. Wm. B. Brown, of Newark, New-Jersey; Rev. George Whipple, of New-York City; Rev. J. B. Walker, of Sandusky, Ohio.

Also, a Committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year, consisting of Rev. M. W. Fairfield, of Oberlin, Ohio; Rev. Josiah Brewer, of Stockbridge, Massachusetts; Rev. H. B. Hall, of Thompson, Ohio; Rev. R. H. Conklin, of Ashtabula, Ohio; Mr. H. B. Spelman, of Cleveland, Ohio.

Association took a recess to seven o'clock in the evening.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The exercises were opened with prayer, by Rev. R. H. Conklin, of Ohio. The hymn commencing, "Hark the glad sound, the Saviour comes," etc., was read by Rev. Wm. B. Brown, and sung by the choir. The Annual Sermon was preached by Rev. Samuel Wolcott, of Cleveland, from Haggai 2d chap., 7th verse: "And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts."

At the close of public worship, the Association resolved to adjourn until eight o'clock to-morrow morning.

Benediction by Rev. John Morgan, D.D., of Oberlin.

THURSDAY MORNING.

The Association convened at eight o'clock, and spent an hour in devotional exercises, Rev. C. W. Torrey presiding; after which the business meeting was opened with prayer, by Rev. Amos Dresser, of West-Williamsfield, Ohio.

The minutes of the preceding sessions were read and approved.

On motion of Rev. Josiah Brewer, a vote of thanks was tendered to Rev. Samuel Wolcott, for his Annual Sermon before the Association, and a copy was requested for publication.

The Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Department read a paper prepared by Lewis Tappan, Esq., in relation to the Jamaica Mission, which was referred to a Committee of three, consisting of the Revs. J. A. Thome, A. M. Richardson, and C. W. Torrey. He also read a paper explanatory of the condition of the finances of the Assowith the Amand Dieport of that debirtment. ciation.

The Business Committee, through their chairman, Rev. Henry Cowles, reported a series of resolutions, which were accepted, and taken up separately. After an animated discussion, the preamble and first three resolutions were adopted, as follows:

Whereas, The American Missionary Association originated in a deep conviction of the great sin of American Slavery, and of the duty of American Christians to bear their testimony by all suitable means against it: and a further conviction that Christian Missions should be a perpetual protest against slavery, and in behalf of the enslaved;

And whereas, through the good Providence of God, great changes have been wrought during the year past, affecting the cherished purposes and the labors of this Association, and greater seem still impending, the Association would express its views to its patrons and the public, as follows:

1. Resolved, That we deem it a sacred Christian duty to uphold our present Administration in sustaining constitutional government, and in putting down this slaveholders' rebellion; that the officers of our government, civil and military, and especially, the President, have our sympathies due their great burdens and responsibilities deenly continual prayer that they may have wisdom and energy; that we sympathize deeply with the noble patriots who have imperiled life before the sword and the pestilence, and also with the thousands of bereaved ones who mourn their slain.

2. That we see occasion for deep solicitude lest the penitence of this nation for its great national sin of oppression is not yet deep, thorough and acceptable to the Most High; for grief that its Anti-Slavery action since the war began, seems to have been largely prompted by the self-interest of the white race, rather than by the fear of God and the justice due the oppressed; for grief also that prejudice; hate, and contempt towards the oppressed race is so widely diffused and has gone so deep into the national character; in view of which great sins and evils, we feel called upon to humble our selves deeply before God; to implore his mercy and to pray that through his Providence and grace, the heart of the people may be turned to love and righteousness, that so God's wrath may turn from us that the nation perish not.

3. That yet, with gratitude to God, we record progress; in the prohibition of Slavery in the District of Columbia, and in all the Federal Territories; in a new and better treaty for the suppression of the Slave-Trade, and for the formal recognition of the nationality of Hayti and Liberia; in various legislation looking towards the breaking down of the Slave Power; in the great advance of public sentiment towards a more just abhorrence of slavery and in favor of emancipation; in the recent proclamation of the President which inspires the hope that under God the freedom of large masses of the enslaved is near at hand; and especially, that God is pushing forward by his glorious and manifest providences the consummation which Christian Anti-Slavery men have long and ardently sought - freedom to all the enslaved, a government with no stain upon it of unrighteousness and oppression, and a Christianity bearing effective, self-consistent, and perpetual protest against all sin,

A recess was taken until half-past one o'clock P.M.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The Association met at half-past one o'clock, and united in the celebration of the Lord's Supper; the Rev. Josiah Brewer, of Stockbridge, Massachusetts; and Rev. J. White, formerly of the Mendi Mission, officiating.

At the conclusion of these exercises, the Association resumed the consideration of the Report of the Business Committee, which was laid on the table at the close of the morning session.

The fourth and fifth resolutions were read, and after full and free discussion, adopted:

4. That we rejoice that God in his providence has begun to burst open the gates of the Bastile in which four millions of our brethren have so long lain bound; that several thousands have already emerged to life and liberty, and other thousands and millions are hopefully coming; that among these thousands a door is open for missionary labor at once so wide and so hopeful of the choicest fruits; that this Association feel pressed for many reasons to enter and occupy this field with their utmost ability — the emancipated being eminently ripe for the Gospel, eager for a knowledge of the Bible and for ability to read it, and their social and moral elevation being beyond measure valuable as a testimony against elavery, and against the fallacies and falsehoods alleged in its justification. The Association also regard this missionary work as due to the spirit of a pure Christianity, as adapted eminently to honor the Gospel and its Author, and as one which peculiarly belongs to the American people, being one of the works meet for repentance of their long and guilty oppression of the colored race.

5. We therefore entreat our patrons and the whole Christian public to come up to the aid of this Association, and enable it to prosecute this, and indeed its whole work, vigorously, with resources and appliances ample enough to occupy this field fully, and to advance as fast as God in his providence may open it, yet more widely before us. And while we can not encourage the Executive Committee to pledge appropriations beyond their probable receipts, we yet advise most vigorous measures for raising funds, and pledge ourselves to do personally all we can for this object.

The sixth was laid over for consideration at the evening session.

The sixth resolution being under consideration, the Rev. J. White, recently of the Mendi Mission in West-Africa, gave a deeply interesting statement of facts, showing the progress and power of the Gospel among the inhabitants of those benighted shores.

The resolution was then adopted.

6. Resolved. That we regard with serious concern the enfeebled condition of the Mendi Mission, through the illness of so many of its missionaries; and believing it to be a solemn duty to the overburdened missionaries now there, as well as to Africa and to God, we recommend that vigorous efforts be made to supply that mission with all needed men and means, and all man and large experiences their agents of the contract of the contract

Rev. John G. Fee, of Kentucky, then addressed the audience, giving a detailed account of the unsettled condition of affairs in that State, developing both the hopeful and the discouraging aspects of the cause.

Mr. William Davis, a Freedman from Fortress Monroe, followed, giving a thrilling narrative of his experiences, as a slave, a Christian, and a freedman.

Rev. George Whipple, of New-York, and Rev. William B. Brown of New-Jersey, spoke briefly.

Rev. J. A. Thome, of Cleveland, offered the following resolution, which was adopted. ENGINEER JAINOJOD TO SONSIER SHT OF SASTER.

The Rev. Samuel Wolcott addressed a few parting words to the people of Oberlin, and Rev. Henry Cowles responded.

The hour being late, the minutes of the meeting were referred to a committee of five: consisting of Revs. Henry Cowles, Geo. Whipple, Wm. B. Brown, John G. Fee, and S. S. Jocelyn, for examination and publication.

Prayer was offered by Rev. John Keep, and after singing the Doxology, the Association adjourned, to meet at the call of the Executive Committee.

Report of the Committee in relation to the Jamaica Mission, read by Rev. J. A. Thome.

A paper relating to the Jamaica Mission, and proposing for certain considerations therein mentioned, to enter into negotiation with the Christian brethren in Great Britain, with a view of inducing them to assume the charge and control of said Mission, or to contribute liberally to its support, having been laid before the Association, was referred for deliberation to a Committee, which beg leave to report:

Unfavorably on the proposal to proffer the Jamaica Mission to the control of the brethren in Great Britain, for the reasons:

That the peculiar type which characterizes, and has from the beginning characterized the American missionary operations in Jamaica, should still be preserved; and it is more than doubtful that it would be, if the proposed transfer should be made; and,

That there is no prospect that the brethren of the Mission would be pleased with the transfer, or judge it wise.

The Committee would report favorably to the alternate course suggested, namely, of soliciting liberal support from the friends of colonial missions in Great Britain.

This measure is obviously proper, and it would commend itself to our brethren across the water, and doubtless secure a generous response.

The Committee, in submitting the foregoing recommendations, would also respectfully suggest to the Association the adoption of the following

APPEAL TO THE FRIENDS OF COLONIAL MISSIONS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN: The American Missionary Association of the United States, from their Annual Meeting, held in Oberlin, October 15 and 16, 1862, send you greeting in the name of the Lord, and address you in behalf of their missionary operations in the Island of Jamaica.

At the organization of this Association, in 1846, Missionaries from the United States had established several stations, the pioneer in these movements, Rev. David S. Ingraham, having entered the Island in 1837, and started with much faith, energy, and self denial, a self-supporting work. In 1839, five ministers sailed from New-York, to join in this new enterprise. The reliance on the freed people to sustain them, soon failed; and these brethren appealed to the friends of Missions at home for aid. No Missionary Board then existing in this country was at liberty to undertake the maintenance of this work. A Committee of gentlemen voluntarily assumed the burthen of soliciting funds in aid of the cause.

The American Missionary Association, immediately after its organization, took charge of the Jamaica Mission; and have since sustained it. The communications from the missionaries, published in our monthly papers, and the statements given in the Annual Reports, afford evidence of the zeal and perseverance of the missionaries, and of the success of the schools and churches under their supervision. The missionary band at the present time is composed of devoted, self-denying and faithful persons, who act in harmony among themselves, and are in fraternal relations with their brethren of other missions in the Island. The mission is in as prosperous a condition as it has been during any period of its existence. It seems desirable that its influence should be increased, and considering the state of this country, and the demands made upon the Association for increased labors and expenditures among the freed people of the United States, the Association feel constrained to commend the Jamaica Mission to your Christian support.

You will, we are sure, dear brethren, recognize with pleasure the fact that for twenty-five years, a band of evangelical and self-sacrificing missionaries, from this country, have been laboring in the Gospel among the emancipated people of your most important West-India Colony. The value of these services, even in the secular aspects of them, can not be estimated. The influence of these simple-hearted, earnest workers upon the missions of the Island, and it is not too much perhaps to say of the Islands generally, has been happy. That the operations of these missionaries have attracted your attention, and won your confidence, we do not question.

We trust, therefore, that the appeal we now make to your Christian liberality for pecuniary aid in behalf of the Jamaica Mission, will be approved and responded to with the promptitude and generosity which distinguish our British brethren.

The officers of the Association will be authorized to mature any plan of cooperation which may be agreeable to you and to them.

Commending this work of our common Christianity to your sympathy and support, and feeling assured that we shall have your prayers in our behalf, in view of the highly interesting fields of labor which the present war is opening to us among the freed people of our own South, we remain

Your fellow-laborers, in the cause of humanity, and in the Gospel of Christ.

THE American Missionary Association meets for its Sixteenth Anniversity, at a time when our land is full of the desolations caused by a most wicked rebellion; nothlisign storage va bornadob reveroit

It becomes us, as a Christian organization, to recognize the just judgments of God in these afflictions, and to bow in humble inquiry after their cause, and how they may be averted.

At a time when, to prevent the loss of all things dear to us as men. as patriots, and as Christians, the wealth of the nation is scattered like the dust of the earth, the blood of thousands and tens of thousands is poured forth like water on every battle-field, and the lives of hundreds of thousands are freely sacrificed upon the altar of our country, it is impossible that the Executive Committee of this Association should not be reminded of the principles embodied in its organization, and the distinct pledge it made, that in selecting its fields of labor, conducting the missionary work, collecting its funds; and appointing its officers, agents, and missionaries, it would endeavor particularly to discountenance slavery - that glant sin, which more than any other one has been the procuring cause, and has now been made the instrument and agent, of all our present afflictions, In adopting these principles, and in pledging these efforts, we sought the welfare of the world, the purity of the Church and its missionary work, and the honor of God; and hoped thereby to avert from our country the Divine judgments which even then seemed to be impending.

We are to-day in the midst of those judgments. Every good work has been arrested in its progress, the Church has been rent in twain, nearly half the stars of our boasted Union have been blotted out, nearly every household mourns its slain, and our land is whelmed in blood. It becomes us not to boast of the principles we adopted, but prayerfully to inquire whether we have been faithful in their application, and true to our pledges; or whether, in the fear of being thought belligerent or uncharitable, we have been silent where speech was required, and have borne the olive-branch of peace, when we were called to contend for the truth.

It is a matter of devout thanksgiving that, through the favor of God, and the self-denial of his servants, the contributions to our funds have been little reduced. The Committee feel bound to acknowledge, with gratitude, that, though their wants have been not been fully met, the deficiency has been less than they feared.

In view of the former action of this Association - petitioning our government to suppress the African slave-trade - it is eminently proper that we should express our gratitude for the recent treaty of the United States government with the government of Great Britain for this object. Both these governments are now substantially pledged to use their power for its suppression. The friends of missions will also rejoice that the extension of slavery in our land is forever debarred, by express legislation; and in the hope that in less than three months it will be abolished in a large majority of the slave States, while vigorous measures will be in operation to bring it to an end in all. During the year, one hundred and seventy-two life-members have been added to the Association, making the present number on the list three thousand one hundred and ninety-two, (3192.) The deaths of twenty-one have been reported to us.

The Executive Committee have been called to mourn the death of one of their number, Mr. Samuel Wilde. He died, at his residence in Williamsburgh, Wednesday, February fifth, after an illness of twenty-four days. He was a deacon of the First Congregational Church of Williamsburgh, and an earnest Christian reformer. By his death, the Executive Committee, the Association, the Church of Christ, and the temperance and anti-slavery causes, met with a severe loss. He rests from his labors. Rev. John W. Lewis, whose mission to Haiti was reported at our last annual meeting, had even then ceased from his labors. He died August 29, 1861, but a knowledge of his decease did not reach us in season to be reported last year. He was much respected in Haiti, and is sincerely regretted there. No death is known to have occurred among our foreign missionaries since our last report.

The Mendi Mission has suffered very serious embarrassment throughout the whole of this year, from the severe illness of a number of its missionaries; yet, through the kind providence of God, the lives of all of them have been preserved, and they now hope for their entire restoration medical to memora during sederate of my facility

Rev. John White, who had not been expected to return to this country till January of this year, was compelled to seek relief in a change of climate, in September. He arrived at New-York the last of October. Before he left the Mission, the church at Good Hope, of which he had had the charge, was placed under the care of Rev. Mr. Hinman. Mr. White had been engaged in preparing for publication in the Sherbro language, a translation of the Gospel of John. This he has finished since his arrival here, and it has been sent back to be published on the mission press. A small edition only will be published at first; it will then have the benefit of an extended examination, and a thorough revision, by missionaries and others, before a larger and more permanent edition is issued. The typesetting will be done mostly by the scholars of the Mission-school at Good Hope, and the cost of this edition will be small. It is thought that the American Bible Society will cheerfully undertake the work of a larger edition, as many copies will be needed to meet the wants of a numerous population in the Sherbro country.

The enlarged plan of operations projected by the Mission last year had only a commencement before the advice reached them that it would be necessary to retrench in every practicable way, to adapt their expenses to what it was feared would be the financial condition of this country. Add in the state of th

They replied: "It is with feelings which few except the missionary can appreciate that we have endeavored to carry out the command, 'retrench.' There are so many openings for the Gospel, so many fields white already for the harvest,' and so many precious souls all around us who are perishing without Christ, and without hope, that the very thought of contracting our work awakens the most painful feelings. But, if it must be done, we trust and pray that this season of pecuniary embarrassment may be brief, and that this trial may be sanctified to the Mission and to all concerned."

The apprehensions of a war between England and the United States caused increased embarrassment, and for a time it was impossible for the missionaries to negotiate the exchange of American bills at Freetown, except at the most extravagant rates. The exchanges through the year have been so high as to increase the expenses of the mission at least one fourth more than they would otherwise have been.

Mr. Hinman wrote from Good Hope, November fifth, that four native candidates had expected to unite with the church the preceding Sabbath, but they had been advised to wait, and with another, who also asked to be received, unite in an inquiry-class, to meet him weekly.

Early in November, the Governor of Sierra Leone went into the Bendoo country, pacified some of the contending parties there, and negotiated treaties between the English government and several of the chiefs. The Bendoo country, on both sides of the Jong, as high up as Bahmah, was ceded to the English, also the Sherbro, Macauly's and Turtle Islands. They have already come under the control of the Governor of Sierra Leone! The Sherbro and Avery stations are thus placed under the protection of British law. It was hoped that this would affect our mission favorably.

A pleasing evidence of desire for schools was manifested by some of the chiefs. The Mission removed a teacher from the town of one of them, whereupon he employed a teacher himself, sent to the Mission for books, and soon had a school of twenty-five scholars.

In December, Mrs. Hinman suffered so long and so severely from an attack of acute dysentery, that she was compelled to seek relief from care, and additional medical advice, by going to Freetown. In January, the colonial surgeon of Sierra Leone gave her a written opinion that she should return to America by the first opportunity, and remain here at least twelve months, for the establishment of her health. Mr. and Mrs. Hinman accordingly arrived in New-York the last of May. Mrs. Hinman had improved a little on her passage, but was still very feeble. The church at Good Hope was then placed under the charge of Rev. Mr. Jowett. Mr. Hinman sailed from Philadelphia, on his return to the Mission, October 4th. Mrs. Hinman expects to rejoin the Mission after a few months.

The extra burdens thrown upon Mr. and Mrs. Burton by these changes have been great, and the latter has suffered so much, that they have asked to be released from the Mission in April next. This will increase the demand for help; and a man of good business habits, to take charge of the secular interests of the Mission, will be much needed. More ordained missionaries should also be sent there.

The school at Good Hope has been somewhat diminished. Three of the older scholars are with Mr. Winship at the Avery station, and a few were sent to Mrs. Mair at Salem Hilb. The older boys of the school have been advantageously employed by Mr. Burton in a workshop, preparing some needful articles of furniture for the Mission, and some for sale. Although there have been adverse influences exerted upon some of the young men at the Mission, there has been little, if any thing, to diminish the belief that the school at this station has done much for the future welfare of Africa, the fruits of which will be long seen.

chant be justified it for the bearing the heathen world the

Near the close of last year Mr. Winship was prostrated by severe and dangerous sickness. For a long time his recovery was regarded as hopeless. At the advice of physicians, and at the recommendation of the Mission, as soon as he could travel, he went to the Island of Madeira, accompanied by Mrs. Winship. They were both much benefited by their sojourn there, and returned to the Mission in much improved health in February.

In April, Mr. Winship wrote that they had got settled in their new home, (Avery station.) in the Bagroq country. They regard it as a most lovely spot, furnishing a large field of labor, and promising more of the comforts and conveniences possible to a mission-station in Africa, than almost any other location.

Barnabas Root, a native of the Sherbro country, educated at Good Hope Mission-school, and a member of the church there, is acting as his linguist and interpreter. Mr. Winship wrote that the meetings on the Sabhath were becoming more and more interesting, with increasing numbers in attendance, and marked attention. He rejoiced in the hope that, though yet unable to preach to the people in their native tongue, his ministrations in the Gospel are interpreted to them by one who loves the truth, and has, for some years, experienced its saving power.

The recent treaties between the English government and the chiefs of the Bagroo country will increase the importance of the Avery station, and make it very desirable that it should be strongly manned. Mahno, the native town in the immediate neighborhood, has become the center of a trade in African oak, or teak, and other woods. A large population of the more intelligent and enterprising natives is likely to resort there, and at the same time numbers of foreigners. Unhappily, experience has shown that in almost every instance a contact with foreigners, drawn to Africa by commerce and hope of gain, has been contaminating, stimulating the vices of the people, and greatly increasing the difficulties of the missionary. In most instances these commercial agents, although from Christian lands, need themselves to be converted to Christianity. If this can be done, so as to bring into the kingdom and service of Christ the energies and enterprise of these pioneers of civilization, they may be made to exert an evangelizing, spiritual influence, whose value can scarcely be estimated.

Is it not the duty of Christian merchants to carefully consider the moral character of every factor or sailor they send into the dark places of the earth? Each one is a missionary of good or evil—scattering the seeds of life or of death—a laborer with Christian behalf of the world's redemption, or against him. Can that Christian merchant be justified before God, who sends to the heathen world the servants of Satan, whose whole mission is to corrupt and destroy? These questions become significant in view of the oft-reported fact that missionaries in Africa, and in other pagan countries, find their work more hindered by such men than by the native heathenism of their flocks.

Mr. and Mrs. Claffin remain at this station. Mr. and Mrs. Miles are at present absent, on account of Mrs. Miles's health; whether they will return to the Mission is yet uncertain. The withdrawal of Mr. Brooks from the Mission was briefly noticed in our last Report. On his retirement he entered into commercial pursuits, and, contrary to the principles of the Mission, commenced trading in tobacco, swords, cutlasses, gunpowder and guns. His example has had a deleterious effect upon some of the young men, who had previously looked up to him as their spiritual counselor and guide. Some of the most promising have left the Mission service and become his factors, and ground immediately contiguous to the Mission premises has been taken for this purpose. This has brought a great stigma on the Mission, and led some of the chiefs to regard with suspicion all the professions of the missionaries to act from higher than mere worldly and selfish motives. The evil is enhanced instead of being diminished by the striking contrast of Mr. Brooks's present action in this respect with his past teachings.

The school at Mo Tappan has been discontinued, since the sickness of Mrs. Miles made it necessary for Mr. Miles to accompany her to Freetown, where at last advices they were tarrying. The reopening of the school is uncertain.

Mr. and Mrs. Claffin have pursued their work with vigor and in hope. Mr. Claffin has prepared some elementary books in the Mendi language, which at the latest dates were about to be issued from the Mission press, but their publication has been delayed for the want of some characters that had to be furnished from this country. A war has since been raging along the Boom river, almost entirely cutting off communication between the Boom Falls and the other stations, and no recent intelligence has been received from the former.

In view of the influences above enumerated, as arising from the trading factories contiguous to the Mission houses at Mo Tappan, and other causes, the Mission have desired leave to change the location of the Boom Falls Station, from Mo Tappan to one of the large towns near by. This it is said will give the Mission more ready access to a larger population, and furnish improved facilities for immediate missionary labor, both of males and females, and of pastoral supervision. The change, they say, can be made without increased expense. Permission has been granted them.

The school interests will be most effected by this change, as it will render necessary the giving up of the boarding school at this station.

It has, for other reasons, already been temporarily suspended, and probably it may not again be opened. Each of the Mission families will take a few of the more premising children, to be cared for as if their own; and day-schools will be opened in the native towns for the education of the many.

The church at Mo Tappan has been seriously injured, and diminished in numbers, by the influences of causes referred to, but no statistics of its present condition have been received.

The Christian religion has not yet in Africa, any more than in America, sufficient power to prevent all war. That it has prevented many wars, through the influence of the Mission, can not be doubted.

Mr. Claffin some time ago communicated the following incident:

"An old chief of a large town, a few hours' walk from Mo Tappan, came to see me, with a present of rice, telling me I must come to see him. This I did, after a little time; and preached to his people. A few weeks afterwards, on a Saturday, a quarrel occurred near his place, which resulted in the wounding of four men with swords, one of them badly. The latter belonged to the town of the old chief. Such a quarrel, if not speedily settled by the payment of a large fine, is sure to result in war. Early Sunday morning, the old chief came, saying, I must go with him, for the people were very many, and wanted to fight; I must preach to them. I went, and found some hundreds assembled with their daggers, swords, guns, drums, horns, etc., all the trappings of war. They were restless, excited, and burning for revenge. Many of them had taken m oath that they would not return without a fight, and they only needed a word of sanction from their chief to rush upon the town of those who had shed blood, and destroy it. The chief had to hold them with a strong arm, but at length he made them all sit down. After the cause of coming was shown, the chief asked me to talk. When I had gained their attention, I pointed out the injustice of war, on such an occasion, and showed the proper way to settle the difficulty, in a manner pledsing to God. The people listened very attentively, the old chief gave me many thanks, and I returned to my other Sabbath duties. The affair was settled in a peaceable manner."

floor and attentive braretes;

Near the commencement of the year, Rev. Mr. Hinman wrote from this station that the attendance at the chapel at the early Sabbath service, 7 A.M., held principally for the benefit of the country people, was not large, but good attention was paid. The congregation at 11 A.M. was increasing; a Sabbath-school was held in the afternoon, and a prayer-meeting at 5 P.M. The prayer-meeting, Thursday evening, was well attended. He was cheered and encouraged by the state of things.

After Mr. Hinman's removal to Good Hope, to take charge of the church there, Salem Hill was left without a resident minister. Mrs. Mair continued there with a Mission family, and a school of a few children, having the aid only of native teachers educated at the Mission. She has been compelled by ill-health to suspend her labors for a time.

Salem Hill is represented as being beautifully and salubriously situated, having an abundance of the best pure spring water, and affording ready access to a large native population. Doctor Hinman is very anxious to recommence his labors there, so soon as the interests of the older stations will allow. It is hoped that vigorous operations may soon be renewed in that neighborhood.

It is a cause of deep regret, that our missionaries in Africa have not been enabled to carry out their plans for the advancement of their work. While laboring earnestly according to their ability, and be youd their continued ability, to proclaim the Gospel of Christ to the multitude whom they could reach, and who were earnest in their calls for it, they felt that the success of their work depended mainly on their ability, under God, to infuse into the minds of their converts a true missionary spirit, and engage them in the work of evangelizing their own native land. The few points the missionaries could themselves reach, would enable them to speak to but the minutest fraction of Africa's teeming millions. The few men, few in comparison with the great demand, whom the Christian world would send and sustain there, could not possibly reach the great multitude. The laborers must be raised up on the ground, if ever Africa is converted to God.

Our Mission had therefore planned vigorously, for the spread of their work, for raising up teachers, and enlisting their energies, so that hereafter they might supply the needed service, when foreign laborers are few. They had endcavored to develop and employ native talent, had opened schools in many towns, under native Christian teachers, and had that timerants to preach the Gospel of Christ, wherever a people could be gathered to hear them. A pleasing interest began to be felt in this work by the natives generally, all around them. Every where they found an open door and attentive hearers; but for a time this good work is hindered. The feebleness of the missionaries, the necessity of a number of them suspending for a season their labors, and the inability of the Association to supply the demand for present helpers, have checked these pleasing prospects. We hope it may be but temporary, and that the current in behalf of Africa's redemption will soon flow more pure, and stronger than ever, proceeding directly from the throne of God, and bearing on its bosom the offerings, the prayers, and the hearts of all God's people.

There is no diminution in the demand; the people of Africa are as needy as ever; many of them are more than ever in earnest, and, in the providence of God, the attention of Christians is more than ever called towards her. Will they hear God's voice, and enter the door open before them. The whole future of Africa, the question whether the civilization of that continent shall be a Christian or a selfish one, seems to be suspended on the question, whether Christians will seize the advantages offered, and, "in advance of all others," take possession of the land, in the name of their God and Saviour. The time for doing this is short.

Mr. S. J. Whiton sailed from Boston in May, to join the Mendi Mission. His heart was so much in the work, that knowing the embarrassment of the Treasury, he provided his own outfit, and contributed the full amount of his passage-money. We regret to be obliged to state, that on arriving at Freetown, his health was so seriously impaired that he thought it imprudent to attempt joining the Mission. He reembarked for America by the first opportunity. This was entirely unexpected, as Mr. Whiton had made himself fully acquainted, he supposed, with the peculiarities of the African climate, and had confidence that he could labor there in safety. He reached home quite ill, and has not yet recovered.

Brainerd. Brainerd.

At the commencement of the year, the Brainerd station was under the care of Mr. J. S. Fisher, teacher. Soon after, Mr. Penfield was advised, by physicians and others, to leave Providence on account of Mrs. Penfield's loss of health. The climate was supposed to be injurious to her. By invitation of the Church at Brainerd, Mr. Penfield removed there, and has since been the pastor of that church.

The spiritual condition of the church has not been regarded as favorable. There have been, and still are, divisions among them, and loss of confidence in each other, owing partly to the lack of permanent pastoral labor, and partly to the divisive influence of some, who appear to be more intent on pulling down and destroying, than on building up, the Redeemer's kingdom.

The report of Mr. Penfield, however, represents the Sabbath congregations as good, and the spiritual condition of the church as improving. The confidence of the people in each other is increasing, and divisions are being healed. He hopes his lot is cast among them for many years. Thirty members have been added to the church on profession of their faith.

The school has suffered by Mr. Fisher's removal from Brainerd to Providence. The people also complain of hard times, and are not prompt in sending their children to school, or in paying the school-fees. The Sabbath-school is, however, growing in interest, and the young men have formed a society for mutual improvement, and asked Mr. Penfield to preside. By accepting this invitation, he hopes to do them more good.

Eliot.

The church at Eliot has received an addition of eighteen members during the year, fifteen on the profession of their faith. In May, Mr. Thompson, writing of the encouragements of the past year, said: "Of those who have lately been hopefully converted, some may not hold out to the end. The greater portion, I confidently believe, have been truly converted to God; and will persevere. "We shall always have reason to thank God for his gracious visitation. . . . We are gathering in the fruits still, and hope to continue to do so, till the Master comes."

In temporal matters the people have been a good deal-tried. Mr. Thompson says there has been a very great scarcity of ground provisions, such as yams, cocoa, plantains, cassada, corn, bread-fruit, etc. Some of the people have been so troubled for food that they have not been able to send their children to school, yet they have contributed about $200 for their missionary's support.

The August meetings, held in commemoration of the act of emancipation, were this year very interesting and profitable. Immediately after these, which terminated with the first week in August, a series of Union meetings, a week of prayer, was held by missionaries of a number of different societies. The last of these meetings, Mr. Thompson speaks of as one of deep interest:

"The stifled sob and earnest look," he says, "told the spirit of the meeting. It was a heavenly time, and I only wish I could describe to you what we all felt. The meetings were all of a deeply interesting character. They are to be held hereafter twice a year: the second week in June, and the second week in August." In concluding, Mr. Thompson says: "The spiritual state of things about us is, on the whole, improving. There is a gradual growth in the knowledge of God, and in the duties of the Christian, and an increasing disposition to perform them. Parents are having more solicitude for the spiritual welfare of their children; quite a number of whom have been hopefully converted, and have united with the Church."

Miss Woodcock returned to the Mission in invigorated health, July 2d, and immediately recommenced her labor in the school at Sea View. During her absence, the school was taught by Miss Jane Edwards, under the supervision of Mrs. E. Strachan, and the children have made commendable progress. The prospects for a large school this autumn are good; and an effort is being made to bring up this, and all the schools, to self-support. It can hardly be expected that they will fully do that this year, especially in view of the failure of some of the products of the island most used as food. It is something gained, however, to have the people make the trial.

The school at Rock River is under the immediate charge of Martin Harris, a young black man who has had some experience in teaching. The district in which the school is held is one very destitute of religious privileges, and in which a school is much needed. There are more than a hundred children there, who should be in school, but are growing up in ignorance and vice. Many of the people are living in great darkness and superstition, and the school, and the spiritual instruction it carries with it, furnish almost all the religious light the Providence.

This station is still under the pastoral care of Mr. Penfield, though he resides at Brainerd. Mr. Fisher, who resides at Providence, and ministers to the church, is not ordained. The report of the station is made out by him.

This church received forty-six members during the previous year, the most of them professing to be converts in the great revival. Of these, two have died, and four have been cut off from the church. Four new members have been received on profession of faith.

Mr. Fisher says, the past year has been a very hard one for the people, owing partly to their having neglected to plant, the previous year, during the great religious excitement, and partly to a drought in the spring. The Wednesday and Friday morning prayer-meetings are well attended. There are some very reliable persons among the older church-members; but the younger members of the church on whom its future welfare must mainly depend, have not yet their religious character well developed.

Internation

This station includes Hermitage within its bounds. It has suffered much from the disturbing influences of violent sectarianism. A considerable number of persons at the latter place, some of them excommunicated members, led away by one who claims the right of a Trustee, violently ejected a part of the Mission congregation from the house of worship on the Sabbath. The next day, a member of the church, who is also an officer of the law, regained possession of the house, and the disturbers were bound ever to appear at court, to answer to the charge of a breach of the peace, in violently disturbing a religious meeting. A counter prosecution was attempted against the constable and others, members of the church, but failed.

The effect of these distractions has been deleterious, retarding the progress of the church, and injuring the piety of its members. Seven persons have been separated from the church by discipline. There have, however, been encouragements throughout the year. In June, Mr. Venning wrote:

"Our Sabbath and other meetings are tolerably well attended, and the Word of God is far from being a dead letter to many of God's people. It is effectual in them to keep them, and to sustain them amidst the manifold temptations to which they are exposed. Of this we have evidence in the testimony which some are giving continually, with their tongues, and which they do not belie by their likes. For this we do sincerely give thanks to our heavenly father.

Some souls mostly young people, are being converted. We have at present ten candidates for church fellowship, some of whom give as good (I think I may say better) evidence than most of those received last year; others again will not stand examination. I fear. Since the beginning of this year, seven persons have united with the church, all adults. Our young people in the church are steadily working on in their Sabbath-schools. From their great imperfection in knowledge and character, there is of course very great imperfection, and apparent inefficiency, in their labor. With this we must bear.

*Seventeen persons were received into the church, on profession of meir faith, during the year, and one by letter."

Brandon Hill.

In February, a council was held at this station, for the purpose of examining Mr. Sherman B. Wilson, and ordaining and installing him pastor of the church, if found competent. Six churches were represented, and five ministers were present. The council were well satisfied with the examination of Mr. Wilson, and accordingly ordained and installed him. He had conducted the Sabbath services of the congregation, and performed most of the pastoral labor for the year previous, while acting as teacher of the Mission school. In his report of the station, he says:

"The religious interest has at no time been unusually high, and yet throughout the year it has been such as to make us feel that our labors were not in vain. Nine have been added to the church on profession, and there are several in the inquiry-class, seeking admission. Most of the members are constantly improving, and, I think, growing in grace. The young people, with few exceptions, are certainly improving, and manifesting desires and determinations to serve God more fully and faithfully. They take an active part in most of our religious meetings, and seem greatly interested in them, (Two persons have been cut off from the church during the year.)

"Our school was larger for part of the year than it has ever been before, but during the last term, which should have had the largest attendance, the parents were unable to send their children on account of the hard times. It was exceedingly dry in February and March, which made provisions very scarce and very high—few were really able to send their children to school. The children in the school are constantly advancing in their studies, and improving generally. They are more intelligent and moral. There is considerable interest in religion among them. Some of them are members of the inquiring class, and profess to love and serve the Saviour. Some manifest great desires to be Christians, and seem determined to be. I am well pleased with them, and entertain considerable hope for them.

"Our Sabbath-school is about the same in size that it was last year, but more interesting.
"The church has increased from thirty-nine to sixty-three in three years, and there is hope that it will continue to increase. Our people are certainly improving."

No annual statement has been received from Richmond. The school has averaged about thirty scholars, and has been under the care of Mr. F. J. Douglass, assisted by Miss J. E. Treat. The scholars have continued to work a part of each day for their support and tuition. The school has received the expressed approbation of some of those nearly connected with the Island Government.

Mr. Douglass has resigned the charge of the school. He will remain on the island, at Chesterfield, during the winter, and render Mr. Venning such aid in his pastoral labor as he can. Whether he will return to this country in the spring, or seek ordination and remain in Jamaica, is uncertain. For the sake of the people there, we hope he may remain. Mrs. Douglass will again take charge of the school at Chesterfield.

The statistics of the other Mission schools are given in tabular form. In general their progress has been satisfactory to the Mission. The Government are now giving a small sum for the support of the schools, and the Mission are endeavoring, with this, to make the schools self-sustaining. There is hope that the Association may soon be entirely relieved of their support.

There is the most gratifying evidence that the religious condition of the island of Jamaica is improving. The long season of spiritual drought and desolation has been interrupted. A gracious visitation of God's presence has been enjoyed. His work has been revived, and very many have been truly converted. A rich harvest has commenced. The progress of the work has, however, made developments of ignorance, superstition, and iniquity, that call for increased labor, more earnest efforts, and more fervent prayer. What has been done and granted shows how much more needs to be done, and encourages missionaries and others to labor for its accomplishment. Their hearts have been strengthened, and their hopes encouraged, by seeing the work of the Lord prosper in their hands. There is reason to hope that future years may show increased results from continued missionary labor.

The churches of our Mission, in Jamaica, in view of the afflictions that have befallen our country, have made unusual efforts for the support of their missionaries. This has required sacrifice, and many of them have been willing to make it. Had it not been for the drought and scarcity through which they have passed, even more than has been would have been done. We hope their efforts will continue and increase.

We can not conclude our report of a Mission among the emancipated people of the island of Jamaica without renewedly acknowledging the blessing which the boon of emancipation has been to them. It is no small thing that they have vindicated the safety and the expediency of emancipation. They have been industrious, orderly, and peaceful, giving almost no occasion for legal prosecution, and entirely removing the dread of insurrection or violence which haunted the colonies, day and night, so long as slavery lasted. The testimony of the missionaries is uniform; that, although slavery left its contaminations on every thing it came in contact with, and begot vices and pollutions that it will require the lustrations of a generation, at least, to remove, yet emancipation has been a restorer and a purifier. It prepared the way for the successful efforts of missionaries and religious teachers, and the moral restraints of wholesome laws; and under the influence of these, industry and confidence have been awakened, and intelligence, virtue, and religion been promoted. Until now, the evidence is abundant that the whole of the West-India Islands are more prosperous and happy than they ever were under the dominion of slavery.

One of our missionaries, in Jamaica, has said:

"I have never lived among a people where offenses demanding legal attention were so rare. I have never lived where I have felt there was greater security of person or property than here, right in the midst of the emancipated slaves."

In relation to the whole of the West-India Islands, the London Non-Conformist not long since said:

"The progress of depopulation under slavery, which threatened to leave the islands without inhabitants, has been checked, and the native Creoles are rapidly increasing in number. An improved cultivation has been adopted, and machinery introduced to an extent never dreamed of under the old system. The practical atheism with which slavery overspread the colonies has given place to the benign and hallowing influences and institutions of religion. The Bible, to the slave a scaled book, is now open and free to the emancipated negro; the Sabbath, of which he was plundered, and which, throughout the slave islands, was descerated as the market-day, has been restored, and is now kept holy; while the divine institution of marriage, then disregarded and superseded by universal concubinage, is now generally honored. The revenues of all the islands have been nearly doubled; while hordes of wretched, discontented slaves, obsed of all human rights, ground to the dust by oppression and cruelty, and rapidly wasting away, have been transformed into a satisfied, industrious and improving peasantry, acquiring property for themselves, and grateful for the advantages which the philanthropy and the religion of the nation have conferred upon them."

A recent official report to Parliament, from the Governor of Jamaica, says:

"I look upon it as a settled point that the great mass of the emancipated population and their descendants have betaken themselves to the cultivation of the soil on their own account, either as a source of profit or as the mere means of subsistence."

While this fact renders the supply of labor scarce, it is amply compensated by the increased intelligence and comfort of the people.

"There can be no doubt, in fact," continues the Governor, "that an independent, respectable, and I believe trustworthy middle class is rapidly forming; and I assert my conviction that if the real object of emancipation was to place the free man in such a position that he might work out his own advancement in the social scale, and prove his capacity for the full and rational enjoyment of personal independence, secured by constitutional liberty, Jamaica will afford more instances of such-gratifying results than any other land in which African slayery once existed."

OJIBUE AND OTTAWA MISSION.

GRAND TRAVERSE BAY, MICHIGAN.

Missionaries,-Rev. George N. Smith, Mrs. Smith.

The labors of Mr. Smith are continued at Northport, Onnumuneseville, and the Head of the Harbor. The condition of the church remains about as it was last year, with fifty-two members, a few of whom are whites. The attendance of both whites and Indians at the religious meetings has been good, and Mr. Smith says that although there has been no special religious interest, he is sure that the Gospel is producing its appropriate results. The progress of the church is steadily onward.

Twice during the year he has had occasion to mention favorably the efforts of the Indian Agent, Hon. D. C. Leach, against the liquor traffic. It has done much to prevent the evil of drinking among the Indians. He says the amount drank bears no comparison to what has been sometimes known. The result shows how much Government might do for the Indians, simply by requiring its agents to themselves obey treaty stipulations.

Since the Indian outbreak and massacres in Minnesota a panic has prevailed among the white population about Northport, which Mr. Smith thinks may be disastrous. The Indians are themselves quiet, and dread the outbreak as much as the timid whites do. Many of them are citizens of the United States, some of them Christians, and the sympathies of all are with the Government.

A very large company of whites enlisted into the army of the United States, at Northport. As President of the County Bible Society, Mr. Smith furnished each of them with a Bible or Testament. The families of some of them have to be provided for by the friends.

In March last, a Government teacher among the Indians addressed a letter to Mr. Smith, congratulating him on the successful result of his labors among the Indians, as witnessed by the writer. The converted Indians, he says, "are auxious to improve their opportunities for religious culture, and the meetings conducted by them," during Mr. Smith's absence, "are decorous and solemn." He thinks their missionary has reason to thank God that his labor has not been in vain. There are numbers in his church whose daily walk and conversation accord with the teachings of Jesus.

CANADA MISSION.-CANADA WEST.

Missionaries.-Rev. David Hotouriss, Mrs. Hotoriss, Puce River; Rev. L. C. Chambers, London.

In May last Mr. and Mrs. Hotchkiss resigned their situation as missionaries among the colored refugees in Canada, and returned to their former homes in Pennsylvania. Mr. Hotchkiss had been in Canada since June, 1855. His first wife died there in the summer of 1859. In October, 1860, he married again, and the present Mrs. H. entered at once vigorously into the work of the mission. The reasons assigned for their withdrawal are, the unfavorableness of the climate to Mrs. H.'s constitution, the severe trials of that mission-field, and the feeble prospects of usefulness there. In a review of his labors, Mr. Hotchkiss states that since he went into Canada he has received eighty persons into church-membership; thirty-five at Little River, and forty-five on the Puce River. Of the clurch at Little River he says most of them have gone to Hayti. Only eleven still remain. At Puce River six have died, five removed, eleven have been out off, and twenty-three remain. He says: "Quite a number of these have been, and are still, striving to serve God; and, considering their opportunities, they will not fall behind many in other churches." There have been, however, around these settlements many men of the worst characters, yet claiming to be ministers of the Gospel. They have been able, under the cloak of benevolence, to turn many away from the truth, and the missionary has had much occasion to mourn the fall of those whom he had fondly hoped were striving to follow Christ, and for whom he had labored and made much personal sacrifice.

Mr. H. says his heart "was greatly pained at parting with the dear ones of his flock, in Canada." The communion was celebrated the Sabbath before they left; the idea that it was for the last time on earth, made the occasion inexpressibly sad. When he bowed in prayer with those who gathered at his house, the morning of his departure, he says, it seemed as though his heart would break. The prospects of that portion of the field have been so affected by a large emigration to Hayti, and other causes, that the Executive Committee will not attempt to renew the work there.

Rev. Mr. Chambers has two churches under his care, one at London, and one at St. Thomas, seventeen miles from there. The former has received five and the latter nineteen members during the year. The Sabbath-school at London has fifty-nine scholars. Mr.

Chambers is much encouraged in his work.

Through the contributions of a friend in England, for this special purpose, two considerable donations have been made to the school under the care of Mrs. M. A. S. Carey, at Chatham. The amount given to the school of Mrs. Hotchkiss, at Puce River, was from the same source. A donation was also made for the support of Mr. W. O. Lowrey, then under appointment as a teacher among the blacks in Canada; but Mr. Lowrey's views of duty led him to decline the appointment.

Mr. J. P. Green and Miss Mary E. Green have been laboring for a few months among the "Freedmen," at and near Fortress Monroe, Virginia. Rev. J. S. Green and Mrs. Green sailed from New-York for their mission in October last. They reached Honolulu December 1, in good health, and Mr. Green recommenced his labors with his people at Makawao December 15th. The second Sabbath in January this church celebrated the Lord's Supper; several backsliders were restored to church privileges and more than forty persons propounded for admission. These had been hopefully converted during Mr. Green's absence.

February second, twelve were propounded for admission to the church at Huelo. Their new meeting-house had been seated, and the church was free from debt.

At Keokea three persons were received into the church the first Sabbath in March. Mr. Green says:

"I congratulated the brethren and sisters on their success in building their pleasant, "I congratulated the brethren and sisters on their success in building their pleasant, plain, but substantial stone meeting-house, having a sweet-toned bell to call them to worship—and all paid for. Here the head man, though aged and somewhat feeble, meets with the people on the Sabbath, reads with them and listens to their recitations, prays with them and affords them such instruction as he is able to communicate. May a blessing attend these Sabbath labors."

"At the communion season in April, at Makawao," Mr. Green says:

"We admitted forty individuals to the fellowship of the church; more had been propounded, but several of them remain, and may be admitted at some future time. Three of those admitted were half castes. Two others are the wives of foreigners, but daughters of the church and children of the covenant, The entire company appeared

"Two individuals were restored to the fellowship of the church. Mrs. Green was admitted by letter from the High-street Church, Providence, Rhode Island. The season at the table of the Lord was a precious one."

MARQUESAS ISLANDS.

Under date May 30th, Mr. Green gave an account of the missionary labors of a young Hawaiian brother and his wife, in Hivaoa, of the Marquesas Islands. He congratulates the Association in having now, through its Sandwich Islands mission, "entered upon missionary work in those islands." He says:

"I greatly rejoice that our Missionary Association may now feel that they have a special interest in Hivaoa. Many of them will recollect that this is the island to which special interest in Hivaoa. Many of them will recollect that this is the island to which brother Seymour was appointed as a missionary. . . He is happily settled in California, and it will not be wise, I think, to appoint a foreign missionary for that field. And yet in the good providence of God, you are permitted, friends of the Association, to do something for the poor, benighted Hivaoans. Mr. Hapuku is your missionary. I do not hask you to send any thing at present for his support. I mean that our people shall take care of him for the present, or aid in doing so. But I ask for him and his wife your sympathy and prayers, and I will keep you posted in regard to his labors."

Of the chief on whose lands this mission is located Mr. Green says:

"He seems to be doing the right sort of a thing, exerting a proper influence on the subject of war and stealing. Who can conceive the value of his influence if he shall be truly converted to God, shall embrace the Lord Jesus Christ by faith, and become a new creature ?"

From the account given by Hapuku we learn that cannibalism is still occasionally practiced by the Marquesans. An instance occurred near his residence, on Hivaoa, last year. He entreats his friends, connected with Mr. Green's labors, to pray for the people of Marquesans. The Sigmess priestheed is diminishing in months all He writes; and the signess of the signess of

"Finally this is my earnest thought to declare to you, brethren in the love and service of the Lord, from Huelo to Makawao, thence to Keokea and Kalepolepo, pray earnestly to God for this dark-hearted people, that the work of the Lord may succeed in the midst of them. Do not rest in this matter; for in the work of the Lord ye are the right hand, we the left hand. If ye lend your aid by earnest prayer to God, the dark-hearted rites will yield to a sudden overthrow."

From the statistics gathered by Hapuku, compared with those taken at an earlier date, it would appear that the population of the Marquesas Islands is decreasing. What is done for them must be done quickly.

BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries -- Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D., and Mrs. BRADLEY.

In the mission printing office Dr. Bradley has been much assisted through the year by his son, Cornelius B. Bradley. In a letter, dated July 17th, he reports the employment of a young American in the printing-office as foreman and superintendent. He had been in Bangkok about two years, and was converted about the commencement of the present year, and received into the church of the Presbyterian Mission in Bangkok, in February 7th. He enters into the service of the mission in preference of other more lucrative offers. Dr. Bradley regards it as very providential that he should thus be supplied with an assistant, when the Executive Committee were not able to send one from the country. The printing-office will wholly sustain him. 2000 copies, or three hundred thousand pages of Scripture Lessons. and 5000 copies, or 285,000 pages of a history of Joseph have been printed during the year.

At the communion season in October last a Siamese convert was received into the church. At the same time Dr. B. reported a case of apparent conversion, discovered by a member of the Presbyterian Mission at Petchabooree, of a man who had never heard the preached word. Before he saw a missionary he had seen and read the History of Moses, and Siamese translations of the Gospel of John, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistle to the Romans, much of which he had committed to memory.

Mrs. Bradley was for a long time laid by with sickness. February 4th, she was thought to be dying, and she herself believing that the hour of her departure was very near, sent messages of encouragement to the Executive Committee in behalf of their work in that field. She was confident that a great harvest is soon to be reaped in Siam.

Since her recovery she has again performed much missionary work, gathering the Siamese around her, and endeavoring to lead them to the Saviour. Both Doctor and Mrs. Bradley are confident that Buddhism is declining in Siam since the commencement of the present reign. The Siamese priesthood is diminishing in numbers; many hundreds of the most enlightened have retired from it; and left the duties of it to devolve on the meaner and baser portion of their fellows. Unhappily, however, the retiring priests do not embrace Christianity, but sink into infidelity.

The King has employed an English woman as a governess of his children, but with the express stipulation that she shall not mix up her teaching "with proselyting, as Mrs. Bradley and other missionary ladies did."

The hopes of missionaries in Siam have been much delayed, the fruit of their labors appears to be very small, and it is wonderful that they are not discouraged. Their hopes are, however, strong, and their unyielding grasp of the work, their untiring confidence that greater results are yet in store for them, serve to stimulate their friends in this country to hold on, year after year, in hope that the trees in that vineyard may soon begin to produce much fruit.

HOME MISSIONS.

In the providence of God, our Home work, though changed from its former principal field of operations, is one of vast magnitude, and of increasing interest to the friends of Christ and humanity.

During the year past, God has called from their labors, Rev. Lucius T. Gould, of Belvidere, Illinois, a devoted and successful evangelist; Mrs. Ellen F. McCollom, wife of Rev. W. A. McCollom, Wabaunsee, Kansas; Mrs. Mary S. Peake, the first teacher at Fortress Monroe; and Mr. Lewis B. Hardcastle, (teacher there,) of Jamaica, Long Island, N. Y. The decease of these beloved and devoted laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, while it calls for sympathy for the bereaved. should quicken and stimulate us to increased fidelity in our work, that we may gather with Christ his precious harvest; and, bringing our sheaves with us at last, be permitted to rejoice in his presence with all the redeemed.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

THE Association has had during the year forty home missionaries, two colporteurs, and fifteen teachers in its various fields. The Great Head of the Church has, in many ways, blessed their labors and set the seal of his approbation upon the work.

THE NORTH-WEST.

The withdrawal of missionaries of the Association from the Northwest, formerly our largest field of operations, that was resolved upon last year, has been carried out, so that, compared with previous years, the results of our missions there are small. We have had in that field, exclusive of those on the borders of the slave States and Kansas, but twelve missionaries, most of whose commissions are now closed. In the States east of Ohio, there have been but eight. Five of the number in the free States were Welsh. The missionaries in the "far West" have generally, this year, been blessed in their work; but the calamities of the "Rebellion," and the loss of tens of thousands of soldiers from these States, have cast a shadow over many churches. That portion of our country is not now a field for the supply merely of the granaries of the world, but of men for the battlefield, and nobly have its sons responded to the calls of the Government upon them.

It is with feelings of sadness that we leave this great field of States and empire, where we have for many years rejoiced to do our part in preaching the pure and free Gospel of Christ; in organizing and sustaining churches, and moral and free institutions; and have striven, by means of the Gospel, to make solid the foundations of society; where we have rejoiced with missionaries in their prosperity, and sympathized with them in their afflictions; have been encouraged in the success of their churches, and, according to our ability, have aided them in their feeble state, until many have become strong and able to support their own pastors. It has been among our richest pleasures to send forth evangelists, whose feet have passed over the hills and prairies with the Gospel of peace; Christian reformers, who, like John the Baptist, have gone forth in the spirit of Elias, reproving sin, and pointing men to the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." It is with a satisfaction, which none can understand but those who have sown, and wept, and in faith waited for the precious harvest, that we have seen under God a lifting of the standard of the Cross, and a gathering of the people unto it.

Our Welsh brethren are generally prospering in their efforts to sustain their ministry; the more feeble churches are aiming at self-support, and are rapidly liquidating the debts on their church edifices. No people are more sure than they are to accomplish the objects they aim at. They have industry, economy, zeal and perseverance; they hate oppression, and throw their influence religiously, and in every direction, against slavery and its allies in Church and state.

We are assured that the ministers, churches and people of the North-west will not lose their interest in the Association, because of the relinquishment of its work there. Our principles are dear to them; our foreign missions will retain their affections and support, and our work on their borders, and in the slave States, as well as the great mission among the millions coming to freedom, will create a new and deepening interest, and call forth from that quarter missionaries and teachers, liberal donations, and fervent prayer, for the support of the Association.

BORDERS OF THE BLAVE STATES.

Our missionaries and colporteurs in parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Southern Illinois and Iowa, bordering on the slave States, are doing an important work. In South-western Pennsylvania, and contiguous parts of Ohio and North-western Virginia, Rev. J. McFarland, Evangelist and colporteur, finds an increasing demand for information on the subjects of slavery and emancipation, and many publications on these subjects have been sold and circulated.

In South-western Indiana, Rev. Levin Wilson, Evangelist, has had renewed experience of the virulence of pro-slavery men; but the prospect, brightens, though much labor is yet required to earry forward the work of religion and reform. Miss Johnson, a missionary teacher for the colored people at Evansville, Indiana, is encouraged in her work. The improvement of her scholars gives much satisfaction, and her influence among the whites is very happy.

The necessity of an increase in the number of missionaries and colporteurs in the Egypts of Southern Indiana and Illinois, is felt more than ever before. In Illinois our missionaries have been much opposed by that secret order of traitors, "The Knights of the Golden Circle," which extends through the slave States and to some parts of the free States. They violently threaten and denounce missionaries, and all who love the Government, or oppose the slaveholders' rebellion. During the canvas for the proposed new constitution of Illinois, the hazard of our missionaries from these conspirators was great, on account of their opposition to its persecuting clauses against the colored people. The missionaries gave wide publicity to the operations of these men, and numbers of them have been committed to prison. Some have gone into the rebel States and joined their armies.

Our missionaries on the borders are mostly evangelists and colporteurs, some of whom have several counties for their fields. Rev. A. L. Rankin, as missionary at large, visited a great part of Southern Illinois and some points in Missouri. At the camps, at Cairo and St. Louis he did much good among the soldiers. Rev. Wm. Holmes and Rev. J. S. Davis have continued in this field, and have witnessed the blessing of God on their labors.

In Southern Iowa, Rev. W. A. Westervelt has been laboring as an evangelist with success. His labors on behalf of the slave and of all true reforms have been earnest. Rev. S. Blanchard and Rev. John Cross, who had been nearly excluded from labors in Missouri, have preached in several counties in the South-western part of Iowa, bordering on Missouri. They have preached alternately in Iowa and Missouri, where a strong pro-slavery sentiment prevailed, and have done much to expose error and promote the principles of freedom and true Christianity. Brother Blanchard has returned to his former field in Missouri, and is laboring in several counties. He feels much encouraged on the subject of emancipation. The prospect for the success of the Gospel in the salvation of souls brightens with the increase of anti-slavery sentiment.

off giring County KANSAS of Old to start should be

This State, so wonderful in its brief history, baptized in blood from the birth, had but just emerged from its struggle against the slaveholders' invasion, when the trumpet of freedom called her out to contend against their atrocious rebellion. She has sent more men to battle, in proportion to her population, than any other State, and has opened her arms to five thousand slaves, now freed, who have been advantageously employed by the farmers; and are now, many of them, being organized to fight for the country. Though there is there much that is adverse to the spiritual advancement of the people, the labors of our missionaries and others have been blessed of God, and the institutions of the Gospel have been sustained. Our Evangelist in Kansas, Rev. J. W. Fox, has in a few cases been engaged in revivals. He has devoted much of his time to the Freedmen, visiting the several places where most of them are located, and has in various ways promoted the objects of the Association among them. Rev. J. Copeland. of Clinton, has, in addition to his labors with his churches at Clinton and Kanwaca, for many months preached to the Freedmen's Congregational church at Lawrence, Sabbath evenings: their new church edifice has recently been dedicated. It was a season of great interest. The same desire for learning is manifest among the freed people in Kansas, as in the slave States, where missions and schools are established.

The church edifice at Wabaunsee is at last completed. The church has sustained much loss by the absence of numbers of its members in the army. The Rev. W. A. McCollom, the pastor, has been greatly afflicted by the death of his excellent wife, after a sickness of but a few days. The field is an important one, and it is hoped that, under God, the desired prosperity will be enjoyed.

Rev. S. L. Adair has been pursuing his labors at Osawatomie and Mount Gilead with earnestness, but has recently been called to the chaplaincy of the hospital at Fort Scott, where the soldiers greatly need such service as he is eminently qualified to render. Osawatomie, which has, from its first settlement, been occupied by our missionary, is a place of memorable interest, from the attack of the Missouri border ruffians, and their deadly repulse. It was the scene of the early labors of John Brown, and of the sufferings and murder of his sons; where his purpose was deepened to strive for the overthrow of that fiendish system of bondage, which, by its atrocities in Kansas, was an index to the great rebellion.

THE HURS PRODUCED AND MINERATURE.

The rebellion and war have, for much of the past year, arrested the progress of our missions in Kentucky. The Rev. William Mobley, however, continued to preach the Gospel in Jackson, Laurel, Rock Castle, and other counties, and generally was favorably received; but when the rebels overrun that portion of the country, his labors were interrupted.

Rev. John G. Fee, whose labors have been mostly confined to the lower portion of Ohio, has occasionally preached in Bracken and Lewis counties, Ky. Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, who was located at Decatur, Ohio, and whose labors were followed with a revival of religion, has preached some at Cabin Creek, Lewis county, Kentucky. In the month of June these brethren and Rev. Geo. Candee went to Berea, Madison county, and to Jackson and other counties, Kentucky, and were received by the friends with joy. They returned to Ohio to take their families to the interior of Kentucky. Mr. Rogers, Mrs. Fee and two children, reached Berea two days before the late battle at Richmond, Ky. Brother Fee arrived at Richmond at the time of the battle, but could not reach his family, and proceeded north to Lexington before the enemy took the city, and thence to the Ohio river. At Augusta he was seized by a mob, but rescued by the marshal; he appealed in vain to the civil laws. He was threatened with being hanged, unless he promised to leave the State and never return. This promise he refused to make. He was again threatened and set across the river. A Judge and an army surgeon took part in these scenes.

Bros. Fee and Candee hope, in due time, and we trust early, to meet with the other missionaries, on this field of their choice, to labor and rejoice with many who are longing for the word of life, and to be welcomed by those who have opposed and persecuted them, and also by thousands emancipated in the State.

MISSIONS TO FREEDMEN-FORTRESS MONROE,

At the Annual Meeting of 1861, brief statements were made of the commencement of our mission at Fortress Monroe among the freedmen called "contrabands." The report of Rev. L. C. Lockwood showed that he had been kindly received by General Wool, who then had command there, and received from him encouragement in his mission. Mr. Lockwood has given frequent reports of that people in their new and anomalous condition. Though at times their rejoicing was with trembling, they have relied on the Lord God, assured that He who brought Israel out of Egypt, would establish their freedom, and give them a goodly heritage. Their prayers and hymns are hopeful, as they begin to realize what, in their captivity, they had been looking for, as in a vision. Their emancipation-hymn and chorus, sung even in captivity,

"Oh! go down, Moses,
Away down to Egypt's land,
And tell King Pharaoh,
To let my people go!"

shows what they had been looking and hoping for.

Most of them having resided at Hampton, left there on its evacuaation by our troops, and lost nearly all their clothing and other effects; they were reduced to great destitution. The town was burned by the rebels, August 7. The officers of the Association made an appeal to the benevolent in their behalf, which was promptly responded to in such measure as to give temporary relief.

The people were, many of them, religious, belonged to the Baptist church at Hampton, which, at one time, was composed of about eight hundred colored persons and two hundred whites. Mr. Lockwood at once arranged for preaching and other services at three points: the Fortress, the Seminary, and the Tyler House, the former residence of John Tyler, ex-President of the United States, near Hampton.

Sabbath-schools were established at these points; and on the 17th of September a week-day school of twenty scholars was commenced, which soon increased to fifty. The teacher was the devoted colored woman, Mrs. Peake, whose intelligence and virtues won for her universal respect, and whose labors were connected with excellent results. She continued her school nearly to the termination of life. She died on the 22d of February, 1862, sleeping sweetly in Jesus.

The day-school at the Fortress was for some time taught by colored persons, and afterwards by white teachers. The evidences of the aptitude of the children to learn, and the desire of adults for knowledge, were strikingly manifest. Elementary books and all the materials for instruction were provided, and the work went forward with cheering results.

The school taught by Mrs. Peake was afterwards successfully conducted by Mr. George K. Hyde, of New-York City, who labored with zeal for the good of the people. The school at the Tyler House was taught for a short time by Mr. Lewis Hardcastle, of Jamaica, Long Island, an experienced teacher, but whose feeble health compelled him to return to his home, where he has since died in peace and joy in Christ. Mr. John D. Bancroft, of Harpersville, N. Y., also taught in that school several months, but was also compelled by ill-health to leave it, after having rendered good service in the cause of Christ and humanity.

Late in the month of March, the colored people were removed to Hampton and vicinity. Their removal was connected with much suffering. Mr. Chas. P. Day opened the school near Hampton, May 5th, with fifty scholars. Six weeks after, it was removed to occupy a part of the old Court-House at Hampton, which was fitted up for a school and for church services. The donations sent us for this purpose amounted to about $350. The Court-House, as Mr. Lockwood writes, once a place of injustice, under the name of justice, was thus converted to the holy purposes of education and religion among a despised and persecuted race. Around this the freedmen have built their cottages against the standing chimneys, making Hampton wear again the appearance of habitation, though in humble style. Several thousand feet of lumber have been given by the authorities at the Fort to the ex-slaves for this purpose.

The school of Mr. Day has progressed rapidly, increasing in numbers and interest. He remarks, in a report: "I commenced a night-school about the middle of May, the number of scholars being about seventy; teaching for a time ten hours during the day, and two or three in the evening, with a few private lessons, and was enabled by the blessing of God to accomplish something in lifting up and enlightening the minds of those who had been so long and so cruelly abused." In the lower department of the school at Hampton, he was at first assisted by one of the freed people.

July 14th, the Committee sent Mr. J. Porter Green and Mary E. Green, son and daughter of Rev. J. S. Green, from the Sandwich Islands, as teachers to Fortress Monroe and Hampton. Mr. Green labored at the Fort, teaching and preaching, in a building erected for boarding and lodging the people. He had from fifty to seventy scholars of both sexes, from ten to fifteen years of age.

Mr. C. B. Wilder, in his position as Superintendent of Contrabands, has had it in his power to do much for their benefit, and has rendered them great service in his exertions to maintain their Sabbath-schools and religious meetings, especially at the Fort, as well as in his efforts for their temporal interests there and elsewhere. His labors have been arduous, self-denying, and disinterested, and of very great importance to the people.

Miss Green has been employed in the primary department of Mr. Day's school. July 24th, the number of her scholars was one hundred and sixty-three. Her labors were arduous and attended with much success, and the gratitude and affection of the children and people were expressed to her in every possible way.

Soon after the vacation occurred, during which time the school-rooms were to be more fully completed, she was taken sick of a fever, and is still confined and feeble.

Mr. Day states that recently the school, embracing both departments, had increased to about five hundred pupils, that twelve of them are so far advanced, that he is using them as monitors. He spends much time out of school-hours among the colored people in the camps. Many were brought by General McClellan on his return from the upper part of the peninsula, and the women and children are living in tents, the men being mostly away in Government service. There has been much sickness among them, and, at one time, from about one thousand souls, an average of seven died daily.

The varied and useful labors of Mr. Green have been suspended at the Fort, on account of the severe illness of his sister.

Recent reports give some evidence of the presence of the Spirit, and the hopeful conversion of several individuals. Mr. Lockwood has baptized a number of converts. Many marriages also have been celebrated, at times attended with much interest to all classes.

Visits of the Secretaries, etc.

The Secretaries of the Association have at different times visited the mission at Fortress Monroe, and been much pleased by the manifest desire of very many of the people for improvement, and their general good behavior. Of course, there are exceptions to this, as there must necessarily be, or slavery would not be the terrible evil it is, but the statement is true of the great mass, especially of those in and around Hampton. Many of them are truly religious, and a few of them really gifted in prayer and exhortation. The evident earnestness and sincerity of their prayers for the President of the United States, and the officers and soldiers of the army of the Union, are at times deeply affecting, and encourage the hope that God means to make use of the present rebellion for the removal of slavery, and to bring us out from our present afflictions a better people, and secure to every inhabitant of our land his birthright of freedom.

The Secretaries take pleasure in expressing their convictions that the commanders of this post, and some of the officers nearest them, have sincerely desired to secure the welfare of these people; while they are constrained to record their deep sorrow, that a few of the under-officers there seem to have been in full sympathy with the spirit of slavery, and to have exerted themselves to prevent justice being done to the people when laboring for Government, and to thwart every effort to elevate them as freedmen. Some of those thus opposed to benevolent effort in behalf of the ex-slaves, have been in position to annoy them greatly, and prevent their being paid the wages promised them once and again by authority of the Government. There is abundant evidence that even at the low rate of wages promised them—one half of that paid to the whites—there is now due the poor fund, established for this people from their own earnings, and to the people themselves, a sum' not much less than twenty thousand dollars. And yet this class of men, and their sympathizers at the North, are charging the "contrabands" with being a burden on Government; while they, at the same time, throw every possible obstacle in the way of their seeking remunerative labor elsewhere, under the plea that Government can not spare their services.

It is proper to state that the President of the United States, upon a presentation of the matter by the Home Secretary of the Association, authorized General Wool to appoint a surgeon especially for these people. Dr. J. J. Linson, of New-York, was first appointed. and rendered them valuable service. Others have since been appointed for that work, but the inadequacy of the salary affixed to such service, when compared with the cost of living there and the severe labor of the office, has compelled them, one after another, to resign. Dr. Rufus R. Browne, a brigade-surgeon, now at New-Orleans, voluntarily and gratuitously rendered them very much valuable medical aid, for which he has received the thanks of our Executive Committee in their behalf.

SIXTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

It is proper, also, to state, that some of the members of the President's Cabinet have manifested a cheerful disposition to do for this people whatever properly belonged to their departments, and have in various ways given facility to our efforts. We believe it to be the intention of these officers to have these laborers for Government treated as free white laborers should be treated.

The work is progressing at Fortress Monroe and vicinity with much encouragement, notwithstanding there is still much destitution and suffering among the new-comers. At Norfolk, a school has been established under the superintendence of Mr. Cook, a colored teacher aided by the Association. His wife also teaches a school, receiving pay from the parents of her scholars, residents of Norfolk. There are here two Baptist churches, one Methodist and one Episcopal. The resident population of colored people here numbers about four thousand. At least one thousand freedmen have come in from other parts.

Books have been sent to Suffolk, and in September last a Sabbath-school was opened in the colored Baptist church. Its superintendent (a colored man) opened a day-school about the same time. Five years before, he was imprisoned in North-Carolina for teaching a colored school, and his school was broken up. A colored minister (Methodist) from Connecticut, who went into Virginia with the army, is doing good there. The Association is giving some aid to a colored man teaching at Yorktown. The military are generally friendly to giving the freedmen the means of education and sustaining religious worship among them. Some of them are aiding in the Sabbathschools. It is the design of the Executive Committee to establish permanent missionaries and teachers at the above places. The great field now open in Eastern Virginia for efforts among the freed people is widening daily.

Mr. William L. Coan, of Boston, has been employed for the year as an agent in New-England, to raise funds for the Association, and clothing for the wretched and needy among the freedmen. In January last, Mr. William Davis, an ex-slave, came from Fortress Monroe by invitation, to labor in company with Mr. Coan. In New-York, Brooklyn, and at the East, his addresses have been listened to with interest, and prejudice against the colored man has been lessened. The results of these labors have been quite satisfactory. In the month of May, Mr. William Thornton, another ex-slave and Christian brother, from Fortress Monroe, was invited to take part in this work, and was well received. The clothing principally sent to Fortress Monroe and Port Royal, the larger part secured by Mr. Coan and associates, has been equal to three hundred barrels. Mr. Thornton soon returned to Fortress Monroe, having been ordained here by a colored Baptist council. The other brethren remain in the work.

NEWPORT NEWS.

This post was twice visited by the Secretary of the Home Department, and Rev. Mr. Lockwood in November, (1861,) to ascertain the number and condition of the freed people there. They were welcomed by the commanding officer, General Phelps, whose sympathy for the enslaved and desire for their emancipation were earnestly expressed. General Phelps was succeeded by General Mansfield, a lover of justice and righteousness. He asserted the freedom of every colored man within the lines of our army, and their right, in common with other citizens, to go where they please, and receive just compensation for their labor. In June, Mr. John Oliver, a colored teacher from Boston, was sent to Newport News. In General Mansfield he found an earnest friend in his work, who at once furnished him with a building for a school and for religious services, and valuable personal aid.

Mr. Oliver has had two schools, one of seventy scholars at Newport News, and another at the Parish farm, of forty scholars. These schools have been attended by him alternately, each three days in a week. He had at one time, at the camp-ground, an evening school of one hundred and five adults, but the great increase of troops there prevented its continuance. Religious meetings are held in the school-house on the Sabbath, and two prayer-meetings during the week. Most of the people came from a distance. Were it not for the religious element among this people every where, they would be in great despondency at times. Those of them who have had farmlands to cultivate, have given abundant evidence of their ability to sustain themselves; but in the movements of the army, and by the outrages of soldiers, they have been deprived of most of their crops. There has been much sickness and suffering among them, and Mr. Oliver has had trouble in securing medical attention. He has at last secured a place for the sick, and hopes for better attention to them. He has been much encouraged in his labors.

PORT ROYAL.

Since the possession of the Islands of South Carolina by our troops, much instruction has been given to the freedmen there. Rev. Dr. Strickland, of the Methodist Church, a Chaplain in/the army, wrote last winter to our Treasurer, requesting a supply of spelling-books, cards, etc., as he and some of the soldiers, and one colored man, were teaching the people; a supply of elementary books was sent.

Rev. M. French, of this city, in January last, after consultation with the officers of this Association, visited Washington, and received every advantage desirable for exploring the Islands of South-Carolina. He also visited Fortress Monroe. He then visited the Islands and twenty-five plantations in South-Carolina, and returned to New York-At his request, a meeting was held February fourteenth, at the Park Hotel; Lewis Tappan was appointed Chairman, and Rev. Dr. Wise, Secretary. The representations of Mr. French and Prof. Linsay created an interest, which resulted in a large meeting at the Cooper Institute, when a committee was appointed, which, on the twenty-second of February, organized the National Freedman's Relief Association. At the meeting on the twentieth, among other resolutions, the following was passed:

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be presented to the societies, churches, and individuals that have interested themselves for the temporal and spiritual necessities of the ex-slaves at Fortress Monroe, Port Royal, and other places; also to the commanding officers and other persons in the employment of Government who have cooperated in carrying out these benevolent objects; and that the early and continued exertions of the 'American Missionary Association,' in sending missionaries, Sunday-school and week-day teachers, with suitable school-books, etc., and large supplies of clothing, to the 'contrabands,' merit the approbation and support of the Christian community."

Rev. Mr. French was appointed General Agent of the Freedman's Association, and on the third of March, went with a large number of superintendents for plantations and teachers to Port Royal.

Mr. James A. McCrea was sent out January 22, by the American Missionary Association. On his arrival at Beaufort, he took charge of the building belonging to the African Baptist church, and has held regular services there, aided by ministers and others. He was supplied by us with needful books, black-boards and cards, for the instruction of the people; primers, spelling-books, etc., have also been supplied to Rev. Mr. French to distribute and use on the various islands where superintendents and teachers are located. A supply of Bibles and Testaments, received from the American Bible Society, were sent to Mr. McCrea for the schools, and for distribution. The reports of Mr. McCrea have been encouraging. The people and the scholars are eager for knowledge, and earnest in their piety. Under the administration, first, of General Hunter, and then of Governor Saxton, the people bave given evidence of their profitableness to the Government, and capacity for the relations which they have sustained, whether as laborers or soldiers.

In June, Mr. John Conant, of Bangor, Maine, was sent to Port Royal as missionary teacher. He united with Mr. McCrea in hislabors at Beaufort, and has since had two week-day schools on neighboring plantations, as has also Mr. McCrea. The schools are progressing with satisfactory improvements, on the part of the scholars, as are also those under the care of the National Freedmen's Association, and others. The whole number of the colored people there, is near fifteen thousand. The Association has just appointed as missionary teachers, Mr. Wm. McClue, and Mrs. Jane McCrea, for Beaufort; and Miss Martha R. Kellogg, and Miss Anna A. Carter, for Hilton Head.

We can not fail to notice with gratitude the favorable influence exerted over the district of South-Carolina by the appointment of generals so favorable to liberty, as Generals Hunter, Saxton, and Mitchel have been. As the Governor of the District, General Saxton has already done much to favor the intellectual and moral advancement of the colored people, and fit them to act as free citizens of the United States; and his plans look forward to the extension of efforts for their improvement. General Mitchel has also done much for their welfare.

WASHINGTON CITY.

In May last, Rev. D. B. Nichols went as a Missionary of this Association to Washington City. He preached among the colored people generally, became acquainted with their ministers, schools, and people, visited the freed people, preached to them, and was preparing definite plans for the mission, when General Wadsworth appointed him Superintendent of the "Contrabands" in that District. With the approbation of the officers of this Association, who regarded his usefulness as greatly increased thereby, he accepted of the appointment, with the expectation of doing much missionary work on the Sabbath, and other days, while the Association would be mainly relieved from His report states that there are twelve hundred or more "freed people," from the slave States, at Washington, the number varying weekly, as many find places elsewhere, and others arrive.

Recently, nearly one thousand have come in, very destitute, requiring the aid of the benevolent, especially for the women, children and sick. The men are profitably employed by the Government, and in other ways.

The Freedmen's Association at Washington, have a hospital and matrons for the sick, the number of the latter being large, especially of children, and the mortality of those lately arriving is very great. Of the educational department, under the American Tract Society of New-York, and the Freedmen's Association at Washington, Mr. Nichols speaks in the highest terms, and the aspect of things is generally encouraging. So is also the state of the eleven thousand resident free people. Emancipation in the District, by act of Government, is working well.

SOUTHERN MISSIONS.

In contemplating the providential work committed to the people of God, for the redemption of the South, and looking upon its terrible condition and iniquity, its conspiracy against humanity, its rebellion against Government and against God, we should remember that by our complicity with its glant sin, we were on the very verge of that apostasy into which it has sunk. Praising God that in his wonderworking mercy he has caused us to stand, let us in humility and repentance, and looking to him for guidance, be ready to do the work committed to us.

We can not fail to see that, as the lightning maketh a way for the rain, so with the judgments of God upon the nation for its sins, the mercy of God is descending, his crushed people are being delivered, tens of thousands of freedmen are now accessible to our missionaries, the blessings of letters and salvation can be imparted to them, and we are already rejoicing in the glorious work. In this work which must in its benevolence embrace all classes, and which looks to the power of the Gospel and the Holy Spirit, for their salvation, we must not fail to know the day in which we live and the elements that are in motion, and so to measure them as to control the evil and give velocity and dominion to the good.

We have as a Missionary Society been regarded as fanatically earnest for the extinction of slavery, but now when it threatens the life of the nation, it is hoped that those who have criticised and opposed us are assured that Christ who came to open the prison-doors, calls us to regard the abolition of slavery as the grand Christian missionary enterprise of this country, one in which we should all be co-workers with God. The present life and the eternal salvation of millions may depend upon the advocacy of a righteous policy at this time. Let us then, still claim emancipation, immediate and universal, the breaking of every yoke, as a matter of justice. Were we permitted, as we are not, to regard the work in relation to its necessity only, even then, we should see that God holds us bound, in view of the rivers of blood flowing because slavery is not effectually smitten, to press on to its death, determined to open the doors of liberty to its suffering victims as we would have heaven's doors opened to us. When a system of colonizing them out of the country is urged, on the ground of the persecution of the wicked, whose clamor and violence are increased by vielding to them, we, as friends of missions, are called upon to demand of Government to protect against all such pressure, the men who in their undisputed loyalty, are every one of them needed, and willing to aid in putting down this rebellion. As the friends of these men, whose precious interests are in a manner intrusted to us, we are called upon to defend them as well against the mistaken action of Government, as against the wickedness of Government officials, or other prejudiced and violent men.

General Education to be promoted by Educated Freedmen.

In the anxiety of the "freed people," and their children, to learn to read, and to secure general education, we see great encouragement; and from their peculiar desire and aptitude to convey to others the knowledge they secure, we can not doubt that some will yet be found useful, not only in teaching their own people, but many of the Southern white people, who, by virtue of the policy of most of the slave States, are now unprovided with common schools.

Some of the colored men South are eloquent, and have charmed and stirred the most cultivated, as well as the rude, by their power of thought and eloquence. When slavery is abolished, is it too much to believe that at the South, where prejudice is less violent than in the North, God will honor such men as preachers and teachers, to promote the general elevation of the whole people.

Many thousand of elementary books have been provided by us for the various stations among the Freedmen, commencing with the primary Sunday-School cards, etc., of the Tract Societies at Boston, New-York, and Cincinnati, and the American Sunday-School Union, some of them prepared specially for the Freedmen. In the schools at Fortress Monroe, books on Geography, Arithmetic, Grammar, etc., are in use among scholars most advanced in knowledge. The work opening before us will require a vast amount of books; may the Lord raise up friends who will do liberally for this department.

Our colporteurs have also circulated a large amount of religious and anti-slavery reading-matter, a portion of it among the soldiers in the several camps in the Border States. Thousands of the little tracts on "The War: Its Cause and Remedy;" and "Immediate Emancipation: The only wise and safe Mode," written by our Treasurer, Mr. Lewis Tappan, have been sold and otherwise widely circulated with much advantage to the cause of Freedom.

Sabbath-Schools.

We are desirous to have the claims of this work for the Freedmen, their need of books, schools, etc., brought before the Sabbath-schools, that all children may have the opportunity to contribute for the instruction of the freed children in letters as well as in true religion.

THE BIBLE FOR THE "FREEDMEN."

have the risk blue. I have more of these men.

A generation has passed since it was resolved by the American Bible Society to supply every family in the United States with a Bible. It was a noble purpose, and has been carried out very generally among the white population; comparatively few, however, of the slave population have yet been favored with the Scriptures; their opposers have denied them the knowledge of letters, and imposed heavy penalties on those who would teach them to read. But God's power is breaking the bars of iron and the gates of brass, and who shall prevent the spread of His word, which is to run and be glorified among all the people?

Since the slaveholders' rebellion commenced, we have circulated among the Freedmen, through our schools, and in other ways, many copies of the Scriptures, (mostly Testaments.) Grants for this purpose were made by the American Bible Society. Our Executive Committee have resolved to attempt to place a Bible, or New Testament, in every cabin, or with every family to which our missionaries can have access; and for this purpose have petitioned the American Bible Society to furnish us with the volumes.

A Bible in every household will be an incentive to the people to learn to read, and it will be read to them by the children taught in the schools, and by missionaries, teachers, and occasional visitors.

Who can estimate the good which, under God, will arise if the contemplated measure is carried out generally? What multitudes will thus read, or hear the word of God, who may through faith in the Lord Jesus be made wise unto salvation! The released victims of oppression must be enlightened, and taught to read, and commence their new life and history with the book of God, the great charter of civil and religious liberty, in their possession.

FINALLY, encouraged by the progress of our work, and the providence of God, let us praise Him for his grace bestowed, and enter upon the new year with renewed consecration of property, talent, and self-sacrifice, not less carnest than that of patriots and soldiers, who pour out their treasures and blood for the life of the country. Let us sound aloud the trumpet of salvation, and in the name of Him who came to open the prison-doors and destroy the works of the death go forth proclaiming liberty throughout all the land to all the inhabitants thereof, for the salvation of the nation, and the regeneration of the world.

In consequence of the change in our Home Missionary operations, and the financial condition of the country, the Western Agency, at Chicago, has been relinquished. Its excellent Secretary, Rev. J. E. Roy, has accepted of an invitation from the American Home Missionary Society, and become their Secretary for the same field.

AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

The monthly issues of The American Missionary, in magazine form, have averaged 4500. A part of them are paid for at the rate of fifty cents per year, and others are sent to life-members who request it, to annual donors of five dollars or more, to local agents, and to pastors who take up monthly concert or annual collections for the Association. The Missionary, in paper form, has been sent to all donors who expressed a wish to receive it. The monthly issue has been about 18,000. The aggregate number in the two forms, during the entire year, has been 270,000 copies.

CONCLUSION.

The Executive Committee can not close their report without expressing to the friends and members of the Association their deep anxiety that the Committee, now to be chosen, may have your warm sympathies and your fervent prayers, and be furnished with means to do more for the spread of the Gospel, the evangelizing of the heathen, the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom, and the salvation of the world, than ever yet has been done. An open door is set before them-fields, the wants of which are great beyond all calculation; and the Spirit and the Providence of God are loudly calling upon them to enter in and take possession in the name of the Lord of Hosts, and save as many as may be of the millions ready to perish. It can not be necessary to remind the friends and members of the Association, that there is no other name given under heaven, whereby the heathen may be saved, than the name of the Lord Jesus; that there is no other divine instrumentality for the spread of the Gospel than the preaching of the cross; no other chosen means for sending out the messengers of salvation than the Church. An inspired Apostle has asked, How shall they believe in whom they have not heard? How shall they hear without a preacher? How shall they preach except they be sent? Here, then, is the whole theory of missions divinely revealed. The friends of Christ send forth the missionary of the cross, the heralds of salvation, who preach repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus, and the sinner hears and believes and is saved. A golden chain, each link of divine appointment, and absolutely essential to success. If the Church withholds the means, the preacher can not be sent; if the preacher is not sent, the heathen can not hear; if they hear not, how can they believe? If they believe not, they can not be saved, and the present heathen world must die in their sins.

How great, then, the responsibility resting on the friends of the Redeemer. More than a million of those for whom Christ died, and who have yet no knowledge of his love, pass away from earth every month. The command of the Redeemer rests on the Church to proclaim to them salvation through an atoning Saviour. His presence and blessing are promised to every one sent out to preach the Word; and yet millions on millions, who are almost within the reach of our voices, are perishing for that knowledge, which might be given to them and to the whole heathen world in half a score of years, at little more than the cost of supporting one year of the dreadful war which our sins have brought upon us. Shall loyalty to our Government be justly held so dear; and loyalty to Christ be satisfied with the small dust of the balance, the surplus of our earthly blessings!

In the providence of God, tens of thousands of freed slaves are now waiting, in various parts of the South, for the privileges which freedom confers and slavery has denied them. The number is constantly increasing, and within a few months, or weeks, it is probable that hundreds of thousands will be looking to their friends for aid. And what class of people ever presented a better claim to charity? Indeed, it hardly de-what class of people ever presented a better claim to charity? Indeed, it hardly deserves the name of charity to supply their wants. They only ask a little interest on a long-standing debt. We have all reaped the fruits of their unpaid toil.

Their first wants are physical. Many of them have escaped and will escape from their bondage in a very destitute condition. They need clothes, and bedding, and some shelter from the storm. This want will be temporary; they will soon be able to supply themselves; but for a few months they must have help.

They need education. Few of them can read, and still fewer can write. They need day-schools and evening-schools for children and adults. Every family should at once be supplied with a Bible and the mass of them should be taught to read it.

any schools and evening-schools for charlest and suddle. Every family should be supplied with a Bible, and the mass of them should be taught to read it.

They need the preaching of the Gospel. Many of their own number are exhorters and preachers; but they need teachers who can "expound unto them the way of God

They need assistance in organizing themselves into schools, Sabbath-schools, congregations and churches; and they need intelligent friends and counselors, to guard them against the insults, impositions, immoralities, and various abuses of those who hate them, and are interested to prove that the negroes are an improvident race, unfit to take care of themselves.

For every thousand of these emancipated people, there should be at least one able, experienced, faithful missionary, to preach to them, to teach, to organize, and counsel them; and he should be assisted by several subordinate teachers. If a million should them; and he should be assisted by several subordinate teachers. If a million should be emancipated within a few months, a thousand teachers will be needed, besides the requisite clothing, houses, school-houses, books, and churches. Very inferior accommodations will satisfy them at first, but in some shape these must be provided.

These wants should be met at once. Never again will they welcome so heartily, appreciate as gratefully, and improve so satisfactorily these advantages, as on their first escape from the house of boudage. Such an inviting, promising field has rarely, if ever, been open to the Christian world. No time should be lost; already our work lags behind the demand. The missionaries and the teachers will be found when the call is made, if they can be sustained; and to support a thousand missionaries and the requisite number of teachers will cost less than the support of a single regiment of cavalry. Shall it be said that the good people of the United States can not do so much in this important work without diminishing their contributions to other benevolent objects? We dare not ask for less. To say nothing of our obligations to these oppressed people, we owe it to ourselves and to our country, if the President's Proclamation is to be carried out, to see to it, that it does not work disastrously, or fail of its legitimate fruits, for want, of efficient cooperation on the part of the Christian community.

We have no disposition to direct or advise the public through what channel they shall contribute to this work, but most advise the public through what channel they shall contribute to this work, but most advise the public through what channel they shall contribute to this work, but most be called upon.

To those who have not already chosen another channel for their contributions, we recommend the American Missionary Association as a Society which was the first to enter upon the work, and which is prosecuting it with great vigor and success, and using the resources committed to it for this purpose with great fidelity and economy. To all Christian ministers we make our appeal, urging them to bring the matter before their respective congregations immediately, and take up collections for the object.

To the members of churches we appeal, urging them, if a public collection is not taken up, to secure the appointment of committees to go from house to house soliciting doestions of money and clothing.

To every benevolent individual we say: If no one calls for your contribution, send it yourself. Do not fail to have a share in this most important and most promising work. Send money or boxes of clothing and bedding to Lewis Tappan, Esq., Treasurer, No. 61 John street, New-York.

Ministers and teachers, who are able and willing to enter this field of labor, can forward their offers of service and testimonials to the Secretaries of the American Missionary Association, New-York.

This is not to be a permanent demand. In a few years the freed slaves will be able and willing to support in a great measure their own institutions. But their wants are imperative now; and as a matter of economy as well as humanity, they should be speedily met. What benevolent person will not respond to a call so reasonable and so importunate.

CHURCH MEETING.

In September, 1861, Rev. Mr. Lockwood wrote:

"Last Thursday I had an opportunity to observe the intellectual status of a considerable number of the brethren, at a church meeting. I was surprised at their understanding and wisdom in regard to church order and propriety, and tone of discipline. As the church-records had been burnt up in the church-edifice at Hampton, I inquired how far any of them could recall their contents. One or two replied that they could almost repeat the church regulations from memory.

"In the discussion, high ground was taken in regard to the Sabbath, the temperance cause, and other matters of Christian morality. In discipline, stress was laid on the propriety and duty of private admonition, in its successive scriptural steps, before public censure. The duty of forgiving offenders, and undoing wrongs, was also insisted on. Several had been improperly excluded from church privileges through the influence of white power. It was therefore decided to day that those who had the confidence of the church should be restored to church-fellowship unconfitionally."

MARRYING THE PREEDMEN.

"Yesterday morning I commenced at the Fortress the new business of marrying those who had 'taken up with each other." As I stated in my last letter, there is a large number of this class, including many church members. Such are the abominable results of slavery. . . . Five couples were married in the morning, and six in the evening. On both occasions I had with me Chaplain Fuller, of the Sixteenth Massachusetts Regiment, a beloved brother and co-laborer, who has from the first taken a deep interest in this matter, and in every thing concerning the welfare of this down-trodden, but now uprising race. We both prayed that no human power might ever separate those God had joined together. Considerable time was occupied, and very profitably."

Under date of October 1st, Mr. Lockwood writes:

"I have just visited the school of Mrs. Peake, (the colored teacher,) near the Seminary, with great satisfaction. Am delighted at the good order and rapid improvement in so short a time. The school numbers forty-five children, and others are expected. She offers to teach a school for adults in the afternoon. The school for children occupies from nine till twelve o'clock. She has several classes that spell well in the book and out of it. She is also teaching writing and the elements of arithmetic, with encouraging success. She intersperses the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Opmmandments, catechetical exercises, singing, etc. It is certainly a model school, considering the circumstances."

In one of Mr. Lockwood's letters, he reports a portion of a colored brother's prayer, though he says it is impossible for him to give its force and beauty, as follows:

"O Lord! if you please, look down upon us this evening, I pray, and give us a closing blessing. We thank and praise thee for all that we have heard from the lips of our Northern brethren, who have come ever the briny water to preach to us the pure Gospel. We confess that we are like the children of Israel, ever ready to murmur and complain. But for murmurings, O Lord! you have given us blessings, and this makes us come for more. O Lord! we believe that you have come to deliver your people. Oh! trample the Becessionists under foot, bless the Union cause, and right every wrong! Bless the President, the Congress Hall and the Senate. Help them to make laws that shall be for the good of the Union, and the freedom of thy oppressed people, O Lord! pray. Bless the army and the officers. Make them wise as a serpent, and bold and persevering as a lion, till thy people are delivered. Look this evening upon our dear brethren and sisters and children far away in the home of bondage, especially those who have been carried away by the Secessionists. Comfort their minds and interpose for their deliverance, and if they are not in Christ, bring them in, O Lord! I pray. Remember our dear brother who has been with us and is about to leave; preserve him on the mighty waters, and reward him for his labors of love. And remember our brother who has come back to us. Strengthen him in the inner and outer man, and give him grace and strength for suffering time, that he may go in and out before us and do us good. And when you have remembered all, remember me, and after you have done and suffered your holy will with me, please to receive me to yourself, O Lord! I pray, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen."

The following extracts from Rev. Mr. Lockwood's letters, of different dates, will give some idea of the spirit and power manifested by some of the freedmen in religious meetings. In a letter dated November 27th, he says:

"The eleven o'clock service at Wood's Mill, near Hampton, was very interesting. A 'contraband,' who is rapidly learning to read, made some sensible, Scriptural and even eloquent impromptu remarks on the text, 'Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation,' etc., adapted to make a good and deep impression upon both saints and sinners. He said:

"The joy of salvation! You, Christian, know what it is. When first converted, it was to you a joy unspeakable and full of glory. Then you could tell to sinners around what a dear Saviour you had found. Jesus all the day long was your joy and your song. When the Christian is cold in religion, he has no joy, no freedom, no heart to praise, no tongue to speak what God has done for his soul. But when God has restored to him the joy of his salvation, and once more upholds him with his free Spirit, his heart overflows, and his tongue is loosed. Then a man will speak with power. The words will catch fire andgo from heart to heart. I see sinners out of Christ, going to hell. This is a hard word, but true. They have no joy of salvation, no free spirit, they are in Satan's chains. Can I help warning them? If I saw a child near the fire, the flames darting out to seize its clothes, would I not run and pull it away? And so I would pull a soul out of the fire. O sinner! it will deuble my joy to save your soul from death. Oh! let me point you to his redeeming blood, and say, behold the way to God. Then may you have this joy of salvation and this free spirit."

Another of the refugees said:

"We have been in the furnace of affliction, and are still, but God only means to separate the dross, and get us so that like the pure metal we may reflect the image of our Purifier, who is sitting by to watch the process. I am assured that what God begins, he will bring to an end. We have need of faith, patience and perseverance, to realize the desired result. There must be no looking back to Egypt. Israel passed forty years in the wilderness, because of their unbelief. What if we can not see right off the green fields of Canasn; Moses could not. He could not even see how to cross the Red Sea. If we would have greater freedom of body, we must first free ourselves from the shackles of sin, and especially the sin of unbelief. We must snap the chain of Satan, and educate ourselves and our children, so that they may be worthy, and compel all to confess that they are deserving of liberty."

At another time Mr. Lockwood says:

At another time Mr. Lockwood says:

"In the afternoon George Green (a colored brother) made a thrilling exhortation, comforting saints and warning sinners with great power. The effect was auon, comforting sames and warming samers with great power. In a elect wateruly terrific, as he spoke in his terse, crowded, and electrifying language, and with fitting manner, of God's melting the skies, burning up the seas, dissolving the solid ground, and flinging his wrath abroad—pouring his unbottled vengeance upon the sinner's head in one eternal storm. Oht said he, a star called worm word shall be cast into the sea, and make it boil like a pot; and the frightened sinner shall cry to the sea, "Swallow me up;" but the sea shall say: 'I have a God to bey!' He shall then cry to the mountains; 'O mountains! cover me, and hide me from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb!". But the mountains shall say: 'We have a God to obey!!" " 'by ! so see that have a fol to end if the

"AND I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts."—Hasbar 2: 7.

THE prophet Haggai was one of the latest of the Hebrew prophets, being one of three who were commissioned to make known the divine will to the Jews after their return from captivity. The Jews who were released in the first year of the reign of Cyrus, as narrated by Ezra, returned to Jerusalem and commenced the rebuilding of the temple, but were interrupted in their work by the neighboring governors, the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin, who prejudiced the Persian monarch against them by false representations, so that the work ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius. Under this discouragement the people refrained from its prosecution for fourteen years, saying, "The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built," and attended exclusively to the erection and embellishment of their own houses. They were interpreting providential occurrences in a very different manner from what the Lord had designed, and in a way which was displeasing to him. He had only intended to put their faith and obedience to the test, not to deter them from the rebuilding of the temple - a work which could not be otherwise than pleasing to him. At this juncture, therefore, he raised up the prophets Haggai and Zecharish to deliver his messages to the children of Israel solitoned and spiritual namely, the negational sport spiritual in the negation of Israel solitoned and spiritual namely, the negation of Israel solitoned and the negation of Isr

The book of the former, from which the text is taken, comprises four distinct prophecies or discourses, uttered on specified days of three different months of the same year. In the first he calls on the people emphatically to consider their ways, and severely reproves their delay in rebuilding the temple: representing this neglect as the cause of the unfruitful seasons, and other marks of the divine displeasure with which they had been visited, and charging them, "Go up to the mountain and bring wood, and build the house, and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord ;" and this is followed by the announcement that the people obeyed the voice of the Lord their God.

and the words of Haggai, the prophet, the Lord's messenger. In the second, he comforts the aged men, who in their youth had beheld the magnificence of the first temple, and could not now refrain from weeping over the diminished splendor of its successor, by foretelling that the second shall even eclipse the first. In the third, he predicts a plentiful harvest as the reward of their proceeding with the work, though the seed was yet in the barn, though as yet the vine and the fig-tree and the pomegranate and the olive-tree had not brought forth; reminding them that while in the days of their disobedience, and desertion of the work, the Lord smote them with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labors of their hands, yet "from this day and upward," He would bless them. Finally, in a prophecy of the same date with the last, he proclaims the permanent establishment of Messiah's kingdom over the prostrate thrones of heathenism. Such you will perceive to be a faithful epitome of this short but instructive beck of prophecy.

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

Having given this outline, I can hardly forbear making it the plan of my discourse on this occasion, for which you observe that it furnishes ample and profitable material. The principles of the divine government are the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever. The cause of righteousness is the same in all ages, by whatever appellation, Hebrew or Christian, it may be designated. The pleasure which God took in the building and the rebuilding of the temple of his ancient worship - the same, and greater, does he take in the building up of the kingdom of his Son among men. Now as formerly, here as every where, he is glorified by the fidelity of his followers, by the ascendency of his authority, by the prosperity of his truth. The preacher of rightcousness under the Gospel dispensation, is as clearly commissioned as was ever the messenger of his ancient covenant, to denounce his judgments on those who desert or neglect his cause, preferring their own pleasure to his; and to promise his blessings, instant and constant, to those who yield him a ready and habitual service. And similar results to those which were exhibited under a previous dispensation will be witnessed and experienced in our own churches and congregations, in things temporal and spiritual, namely, the penalties, the calamities of desertion and disobedience, or the rewards, the benefits of labor and love. But having selected the text with reference to the sentiments contained in it, rather than to the strain of the interesting prophecy of which it forms a part, I waive this plan, itself radiated of relational quies

It is declared in the context : "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts." This, however, could not sustain any rivalry or comparison with that in the costliness and splendor of its decorations, for the first temple was plated with a nation's gold and shone like another sun; but the second was honored by the presence and the preaching of the Lord of the temple - and what is the chaff to the wheat? The prediction was fully accomplished, when after the lapse of five centuries, the Desire of all nations, suddenly coming to his temple, "flamed around its hallowed walls like a refiner's fire."

Although the passage has primary reference to the personal advent of Christ in the flesh, yet like many similar passages, it is equally applicable to his spiritual coming, to the triumphant establishment of his kingdom in the world. It is in this sense only that it can have to us a future significance. Such an application of it is warranted by the word of God, and at once consecrates and endears it to our most sacred regards and our most precious hopes. Standing, then, like the Hebrew prophet, on the eminence of the present, and looking not backward to the scenes and trophies of an abrogated dispensation, but still forward down the vista of a glorious futurity; surveying our world in the nineteenth century succeeding the Christian era, instead of the sixth preceding it, from the Christian sanctuary as our stand-point, instead of the Hebrew temple, and in view of another and later advent, not less illustrious than that which was heralded in Judea by the second Elijah, this ancient prediction of the Highest, once fulfilled with grandeur, is sounding in our ears as a sublime prophecy yet to be accomplished: "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts."

In endeavoring to bring out the doctrine of the text, thus interpreted and applied, I observe-

I. Political and moral convulsions are the destined precursor of the establishment of Christ's kingdom over all nations.

This would seem to be the unavoidable consequence of the state of revolt from God into which the world has fallen. The shaking of the nations is a necessary preliminary to the introduction among them of a reign of moral purity. Their strongholds have been seized and preoccupied by Satan, his deputies preside in the seats of empire, and his garrisons are intrenched in the citadels of power. The world over, you will find a contemptuous disregard of the authority of the Most High God, who is ruler over the nations. In not a single realm, and in hardly a single department of any government, do we discover a constant and paramount reference to his law as a binding rule of action. The lusts of a fallen and selfish nature - greed, baseness, and violence—have to a great extent usurped the place of higher and better sentiments in the administration of this world's affairs, and must be dislodged. Partly through the fuller development of existing principles, and more through the introduction into its prevalent policies of new and nobler principles, a moral revolution must be accomplished. Present systems of evil must be subverted and demolished, to make room for righteous schemes. It was no idle cry about the Apostlesthat of certain lewd fellows of the baser sort at Thessalonica—"These, that have turned the world upside down, are come hither also." This was a true indictment. This was just what they had been doing. This was their appointed work; and to the extent of their ability they performed it thoroughly, though they left many things in the world which were afterwards to be reversed, and many more which are yet to undergo the same process of upheaval. "I will overturn it, overturn it, overturn it," saith Jehovah, "and it shall be no more until he come, whose right it is, and I will give it him." A glance at the actual condition of the world in every department, social, civil, and spiritual, will show the necessity of this procedure.

There exist among men three organizations which are of divine origin: these are the family, the state, and the Church. These were constituted by God as essential to the perfect development of man and the highest well-being of the race. These relations, in all their legitimate forms, have his direct sanction, and can not be invaded nor annulled, without contravening his arrangements, impairing the general good, and incurring his displeasure. If these, each in its appointed sphere, were to perform its appropriate mission, his benevolent designs toward mankind would be fully accomplished, and the earth would be filled with the sunlight of human happiness, and reflect on every side the glory of its Maker. If we would know the actual condition of the world, let us see how far these divinely organized forces have been overpowered and perverted by opposing agencies.

The social state of every community is the moral product of the influences which preside over its several households, whose members take their places in society, which is but a circle of families, to act out, inthe public view, the lessons of their home-education. It was God's original provision that the family should be the school of the gentle affections and kind; ministries which shed grace and gladness over society. From well-regulated and virtuous homes, in which the heart had been taught to love, where its hest sensibilities had been nurtured and trained, and the faithful discharge of the most delicate duties had become a habit and a delight, what other result were possible than an orderly, virtuous, and happy social constituency? .. The unselfish love which in a true family finds its pride and pleasure in the advancement of every other member, transferred with its devoted and self-denying traits to the community, and enlisted in the service of all, would make THE HUMAN FAMILY WORthy of that smile of divine complacency which fell upon the earth when the Creator placed upon it, as his crowning work, the first of the happy race that was to overspread it in this relation. And what do we actually behold?

In place of this self-forgetful affection and delightful fusion of soul.

In place of this self-forgetful affection and delightful fusion of soul, there is isolation and alieration. The aspect of the world at large, socially viewed, is not the image of transcendent lovelings originally planned; it rather exhibits the sad disfigurement which can be wrought in innocent relations by the power of a reigning selfishness. The extremes of wealth, with inanity and frivolity, the multiplied extremes of poverty, with abounding squalor and wretchedness and deep degradation, arrogance and envy, heartless competitions and not less heartless ceremenies, are prominent features of the view. Happily, some of the domestic and social virtues which belonged to man's normal state, still survive to adorn and bless and gladden humanity, even as flowers, which bloomed in Eden, still linger in fading beauty on the face of the earth which has been cursed. But these do not prescribe the law of social intercourse in hardly a single locality. The spirit which presides over the social world is not fraternal and cordial, it is chilling and exclusive; it is not the spirit of benevolence, it is the spirit of caste. Except as it has been eradicated by the Gospel of Jesus,— the great leveler of human presumption and pride, - this unlovely sentiment is rooted in the social organization, barbarian and civilized, revealing itself in different forms, and in all marring the symmetry of the relation which God ordained

We turn next to the civil relation, embracing both ruler and subject, which he also instituted, and without a faithful recognition of which, the great ends of society can not be secured. He has prescribed no form of government, but as a security against the horrors of anarchy, than which nothing can be worse, in all things not forbidden by God's higher law, and until the opportunity may offer of substituting a better form or a better executive, the actual civil authority, whatever it may be, has a moral claim to the subjection which it exacts. The only permanent form of administration which God has established, is that of the family, the original type and divine model of all human government; and the more nearly we reach a practical conformity to the spirit of it, in every other organization, the better. That state, for instance, is the best governed whose constituted head, or ruler, what ever name he may bear, and however appointed, so administers his high trust, that the various communities which acknowledge his sway look up to him with the reverent regard and perfect trust with which dutiful children confide in an honored father, and whose removal by death would create in the wide-spread habitations of his realm a sense of bereavement like the cry which is heard in the home of the orphaned. Has this picture any basis of fact? In what chair of state shall we find the original ? and three suit of sold has nothing a landing ship he me-

Mankind are certainly favored with some excellent forms of civil government, and some excellent rulers. But how unlike the above sketch, how contradictory to it all, is the spirit of most governments, and the corresponding sentiment of the governed! A large majority of the rulers of this world use their subjects as mere tools for the furtherance of their schemes of selfish ambition. The mass of the people are denied their fair civil rights and privileges; their property, if they are able to accumulate any, is heavily taxed, if not plundered, to support the pride and pomp of their rulers; and their lives are worn out by hard service, or wasted in battle, in wars in which they have no personal interest. A large majority of the world's population live under some form of civil despotism, which checks their natural development, wars upon their best interests, and crushes them to the dust. Many others live under forms which greatly abridge their proper freedom and hinder their progress; and the rest have often found that the freest forms are not a sole safeguard against the perversions of political profligacy. On the side of the oppressors there still is power, as in the days of Israel's preacher, and the oppressed, as a general rule, still have no comforter or present avenger.

We turn last to the contemplation of man's spiritual relations. No tendency or trait is more deeply implanted in his moral nature than a proneness to worship. It is evident that the sentiment of reverence was originally impressed upon his soul, inclining him to offer homage to a superior power; he was made to adore, and in this sense he is naturally a religious being, fitted for devotion. Our first parents, in their primeyal innocence, offered praise to God, pure and pleasing, and its incense has since mingled, not less acceptably, with the sighs of contrition and the songs of redemption. To this native craving of the soul for an object to which it may look up with reverence and before which it may bow with humility, for a Being whom it may invoke and praise, and, if need be, propitiate - manifested in so many ways, in libations and burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as well as in solemn supplications and songs-the Almighty Creator, by whom and for whom the soul was made, hath graciously offered himself as the proper and complete object of worship. And when man's desires and best emotions are borne heavenward, in expressions of penitence for sin, of gratitude for mercies, and of homage to the eternal throne, he rises to his truest dignity and glorifies his Sovereign. Had he abode in honor, the earth would have continually resounded with the praises of his Maker, syllabled by devout lips. To what do we now listen? To what extent do we find the tokens of a spiritual worship?

We gratefully record the experience of many a rescued captive, into whose mouth, with the Psalmist's, a new song hath been put, even praise unto our God. But the mournful apostasy of the race from all this spiritual adoration and love is the great and gloomy fact which has convened us here to-night. Man has forsaken this heavenly communion, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into the image of some corruptible thing; infatuated myriads are now sitting in the death-shade of paganism, mad upon their idols, and the cry which fell from the mortal lips of Jesus is still the most plaintive of all confessions: "O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee!" Others that are not sunk in gross idolatry, and who do not seek the supernatural in such mock and monstrous forms, have scarcely less perverted the primitive simplicity and purity of divine worship. False religions, not associated with heathen rites, yet full of vain forms and strong delusions, fostering in their votaries sensual and cruel passions, retain a firm footing in some of the fairest provinces of the earth. And when from their dark and bloody symbols we turn to the banner of the Cross, which, as a badge of Christianity, should be identified with whatever is lovely and of good report, we find it waying over some of the most savage excesses which have ever stained the annals of human delinquency. In the bosom of a communion which bore the venerated name of Christ, and whose original members the Apostle saluted as "beloved of God, called to be saints," was developed in time a form of depravity so haughty and hideous, that the same Apostle prophetically defined it as "the mystery of iniquity," and its recognized head as "the man of sin," "the son of perdition," "that wicked" whom the Lord should consume with the spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming. With a large majority of those who bear the Christian name, the Church, the selected pillar and ground of the truth, has become, through corruption, the leading obstruction to the truth, and the true Church can be built up only on the ruins of the false church. In all the records which time has committed to history, I know of nothing more somber than this. The darkest chapters are those which delineate "the decline and fall" of the Church - her subjection to the errors and immoralities which, in different ages, have taken shelter in the sanctuary, demanded baptism, and received the sacrament - leaving the Church, which had been swept and garnished as an abode for the graces of the Holy Spirit, the possession and dwelling of the unclean spirit, with seven other spirits more wicked than himself. Through a large section of our own land, at the present day, the Church of Christ, or what claims to be such, is the ally and prop of that rebellion which is as the sin of witchcraft, and the bulwark of that chattel-slavery which, more than any other form of oppression, degrades the brotherhood of man, and dishonors the Fatherhood of God. And to this shame must be added the grief of the fact, that in that portion of evangelical Christendom which does not thus hold the truth in unrighteousness, and whose members are leagued against every evil enterprise, the covenant of a common discipleship and the pressure of a common foe do not elicit that flow of sympathy and that concert of action which we should naturally look for; but instead of the mutual understanding and hearty cooperation which the exigencies of the common cause implore, a narrow sectarian spirit draws its petty lines of division through the sacramental host, creating coldness, distrust, and distance between them, enfeebling their strength, wasting their energies, dwarfing their piety, and sadly delaying the full answer to our Saviour's touching prayer, "That they all may be ONE!"

Such, in brief, is Christendom, and such is heathendom; such are the predominant aspects of the world, enlightened and pagan, in its social, civil, and spiritual relations. This is the moral state of the lands which the pure Gospel is to penetrate; this is the attitude of the nations among whom Christ's kingdom of uncompromising righteousness is to be established. Its moral forces are to come in contact with their immoralities, and is it any marvel that a ferment should ensue-a commotion like the shaking among the dry bones in the valley of vision? It could only be prevented, constituted as men are, by the overpowering omnipotence of the Most High; and this is not his method of operation in the moral world. Moral changes are wrought by moral agencies, through truth addressed to the conscience and the heart. The understanding must be enlightened, the judgment convinced, the will subdued, and the feelings enlisted, through God's blessing on the truth. That truth encounters hostile passions, inveterate prejudices, and instead of winning a ready assent, is bitterly assailed and denounced. This opposition it must conquer, and effect a reform, and not a reform only, but in many instances a revolution also. The conflict is irreconcilable; there can be no affinity between the opposing principles, and no repose if they come together; but order will be contending with chaos, and light struggling with darkness. Hence in all pagan and semi-pagan countries into which missionaries have penetrated with the Gospel, and in all Christian and semi-Christian communities in which reformers have probed some prevalent and popular immorality, we see a stir and rage among the devotees of the assailed idol. The masters, civil and ecclesiastical, perceive that if the new faith prevails, the hope of their gains is gone, and they persecute, and perhaps imprison; and the blinded, maddened populace shout, with senseless clamor: "Great is Diana!"

God does not see fit to strangle iniquity at its birth, but allows it an arena and scope in the world, and provides that the forces of righteousness shall gather their strength by wrestling with it and vanquishing it. It can never override his government. Confusion and strife, injustice and oppression, the demons of discord, the troops of Gehenna—these, if not necessary to his plan, neither are they potent to defeat it, but can, and will, be made to subserve it. The devil's fiercest exasperation may betray the consciousness that his time is short, and the most vehement outbreak of wickedness may be the signal of the approaching destruction of its authors. The Saviour forewarned his disciples; "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass: but the end is not yet. There shall be upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And when these things begin to come to pass," he added, "then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." These will be in this generation, as they were in that, the precursor of his advent with power and great glory. He will come to reign over the turbulent nations, when their magazines of wrath have exploded and their batteries are silent, their political and moral convulsions having paved the way for the permanent establishment of that kingdom which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

II. The Lord Jesus Christ is to become an object of desire to all nations.

He is now the desire of all nations, only in the sense of being worthy of universal desire - as yet actually desired by comparatively few. There are restless desires in the human breast, but they take, for the most part, some other direction. There are the longings of an ethereal spirit, that, in its reduced state, would fain feed on husks, vet can not be satisfied therewith. The objects for which mankind are striving have not generally much intrinsic value, but they are eagerly pursued, and perhaps convulsively snatched, in the hope that they may assuage or gratify some unsated desire. And still are the sons of man doomed to disappointment, and "wander on God's verdant earth like the unblest on burning deserts, passionately digging wells and drawing up the dry quicksand" - finding no cooling draught for lips parched with thirst. Worldly acquisitions do not meet the aspirations and necessities of the soul. Whatever of solace or pleasure they are capable of imparting is quickly exhausted, and there remains an aching void, an importunate hunger-the habitual sense of need, never the consciousness of full satisfaction. Such has been the experience of mankind, and such it is destined to be, more and more. Every contrivance of art, every refinement of luxury, every experiment of pleasure, is to become a fresh witness to the emptiness of mere worldly gratification, its inadequacy to the capacities of an immortal nature. And all the while there is a Being for whom the soul was formed, and who is fitted to be the object of its steadfast desire and supreme love. Wanting, it knows not what-something, truly, that it finds not and has not-He is just what it needs, and is all that is needed. He is himself a portion, complete and ample, of infinite supply and sufficiency. No uneasy craving remains in the spirit that has feasted on his grace; he can satisfy its every desire, and cause it to receive of his fullness, and grace for grace. Every proper want, every pure longing, finds its appropriate and ultimate rest in him. Under the pressure of calamity he is all-powerful to sustain, graciously assuming every burden. He imparts comfort to the afflicted, resolution to the faint and feeble, courage and hope to the dejected. He is a counselor to the inquirer, a guide to the perplexed, and the protector of all. No emergency can arise in which he shall not be accessible, and to which he shall not be found adequate; he is a very present help in every time of trouble; his unlimited resources are pledged to every needful extent of defense and succor. The human heart, touched by the magnetic influence of the cross, points with unerring polarity to the Redeemer; and to its renewed affections he is the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely.

We have, then, in the world of mankind, a sense of need unappeased and unsatisfied; and we have in the Lord Jesus Christ a proper object of spiritual desire equal to every want. It can only be necessary, therefore, that he should be understood and appreciated, to become the desire of all nations - sought of them that asked not for him. found of them that sought him not. Let it be known that there is healing balm in Gilead and a Physician there, and who, that becomes sensible of his malady, will not seek the sovereign relief and cure? Let the nations, harassed by distressing feuds, torn with bickerings and strifes, scourged and smitten in battles, weltering in blood, fairly contemplate the divine beauty of Messiah, Prince of Peace, and comprehend the blessedness of his peaceful reign, and, captivated therewith, how speedily will they beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and learn war no more? Hitherto, he has had to them no form, nor comeliness, no beauty that they should desire him; but they will not always be blind to his excellence and loveliness. When they shall have become weary, not alone of the crushing despotism of their oppressors, but also of the cruel tyranny of their own passions, they will gladly repose under the mild sway of Him whose yoke is easy and whose burden is light. Before he shall appear in his might, the world will breathe out from its bosom a deep-drawn sigh for its Deliverer and King. The terrible convulsions which, as we have seen, are his appointed and necessary precursor, will have fulfilled their providential design, in thus preparing for him a proper reception. Delightful beyond conception will be the transition from the state which has been described, to the state which has been predicted and promised. Soothing beyond expression, in these days, is the mere anticipation - the joyful assurance that this dark world is drifting toward the light of the millennium, and that a brighter and better day is about to dawn. And though, eighteen centuries after heavenly voices sung in mortal ears the natal hymn of the Prince of Peace, we listen in vain for the refrain of that angelic song, and in place of its celestial strains the ear is pained and stunned by the sounds with which the passing breeze is freighted from the gory field, where the veteran warrior directs the dreadful tempest of battle, and piles up the mangled corpses of the foemen in heaps before his murderous artillery, and our weak faith is tempted to ask, despondingly. Where is the promised dominion of peace? Shall the sword devour forever? How long, O Lord, holy and true, how long?-let us bear in mind that the secret things belong unto the Lord our God; that it is not for us to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power, and that enough for us is the comforting declaration which the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, that the mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills by righteousness, and all nations shall serve him; they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree, and none shall make them afraid; they shall not hurt nor destroy in all his holy mountain. Thrice welcome this blissful assurance! and when prepared for this glorious exchange, the world will await, with earnest heart-throbbings, the arrival of its enthroned Immanuel, and hail him, with loud acclaim, as the desire of all nations.

III. The spiritual coming of Christ will be attended with glory.

The world has been mocked with false glory, and it will be indebted to the Gospel for the introduction of correcter views and a higher ideal. As soon as we pass the circle of pure Christian ethics, we find that the adherents of every cause depend, for success and fame, either on the menaces and appliances of physical force, or on the artifices of diplomacy. Christianity discards them both alike. It is guileless in its spirit, demanding of its followers singleness of purpose, transparency of plan, open-hearted integrity of character. In resorting to earthly schemes and wiles, the Papal Church divested itself of moral power, and exhibits her departure from the truth as it is in Jesus. It was not through such arts that the Christian faith was propagated by its early disciples, nor will its future triumphs be achieved by the expedients of a worldly policy. Free from intrigue, neither does it strive by physical force - one of its cardinal maxims being, that the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Its Founder established a kingdom which is not of this world; and while no other expectation had been entertained of him, than that he would come in royal state, with the pageantry and pomp of a monarch, his purpose soared above all such display, and he dispensed with factitious distinctions. He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and meekly endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, in patience possessing his soul, and pursuing his even course with a mildness unaccompanied by terror and unruffled by passion. Seeking, by every attractive method, to win for his truth a kind reception from the prejudiced and the perverse, his ministry performed its quiet round of beneficence like the harmony of the seasons; like the gentle influences of nature, to which he often resembled his discourses, his doctrine dropped as the rain, his speech distilled as the dew. His delight was to comfort the mourner, to cheer the disconsolate, to heal the broken-hearted; graciously did he invite the weary and heavyladen to come unto him, and grateful was the rest which he offered them. No spectacle of loathsomeness could repel his assiduities, no exhibition of callousness, ingratitude, or malignity could chill and check the overflowings of his sympathy. It was a gushing stream fed by a perennial fountain, and as it led its silent and sweet waters through a tract which sin had withered into a desert, diffusing fertility and beauty, it fulfilled the prediction of the prophet, that the wilderness and the solitary place should be glad, should rejoice and blossom as the rose. The only instrumentality for the advancement of Christianity in the world, sanctioned by its Author, is that which is imbued with the same spirit a spirit often more powerful than argument, more persuasive than entreaty. This benign and blessed aspect of the agency employed-the best feelings of the renewed heart, faith, humility, gratitude, and love, awakened and developed in such delightful contrast with the full passions which rage in the world around is one feature of the transcendent excellence of this system of truth, and gives it the impress of divinity. It is to be the conspicuous triumph of the Christian faith, to establish in our fallen world, through this agency, the reign of truth, justice, and love, and awake in all holy beings the joy of beholding the ravages of the curse staid, and the desolations of sin giving place to the delights of righteousness.

This is glory, true glory; it will be recognized and honored as such, when much, that, in the perverted judgment and taste of mankind, now passes for illustrious, will be lightly esteemed. The glory of a self-denying philanthropy which seeks to reclaim the wanderer and save the lost, the glory of a moral heroism which, in the path of duty, shrinks from no obloquy or opposition, will be felt to be immeasurably superior, each in its department, to that ephemeral glory with which the popular vision is now so easily dazzled. The millennial reign of peace will be crowded and illustrated with the trophies of that higher glory, eclipsing the lustre of many an achievement, of which the world has sought to perpetuate a remembrance on canyas or in stone.

The coming of Jesus, as the helpless Babe of Bethlehem, was attended with glory. The humble shepherds of Judea, in their nightwatch, were suddenly wrapped in the beams of heaven's own light, and the rude fields around them glowed with the splendor of heaven's plains. There will be glory when he shall come in the clouds of heaven, in the power of his Father, with his countless retinue of holy angels and the awful peal of the Archangel's trump. But a milder, richer glory shall attend his spiritual coming, filling the earth with a sweeter melody than that with which the morning stars greeted its creation, and irradiating it with a screner loveliness than the answering smile which met its Maker's benediction.

I have now set forth the leading truths embraced in the text, and it will be felt, I trust, that they are not unsuited to the hour. God is now shaking our nation in a manner unexampled in our experience, since our Republic took her place in the family of nations. Indeed, nations have passed through the throes of dissolution with less convulsion than this land has felt within a few months. Does not our discussion explain this unexpected agitation, and does not it also suggest the reason why God has sent it?

If our views are correct, the philosophy of the war is simple. In the development of our national life, two antagonistic principles have been brought into contact, and by the moral laws which God has ordained, there is an irreconcilable conflict between them, and there can be no peace in the land until the one or the other has conquered; rather, there can be no peace until the Right has triumphed, for, under God's government, the Wrong can not be permanent or quiet. This rebellion, in a latent form, was a legacy from our fathers, who bequeathed it to us under the delusive impression that the opposing elements, which could never harmonize, might yet exist together for a season without any violent outbreak, and that the right would gradually absorb and assimilate to itself the wrong, or subjugate it in a still way. The experiment worked disastrously, as such compromises always do. The element of Christian civilization was fettered and weakened by this forced conjunction with the element of barbarism, and the latter soon became rampant and defiant. Its partisans, for two generations, maintained an unfair ascendency by bluster and intimidation, and when, at length, this expedient was exhausted, as the last and desperate resort for a cause already vanquished in the field of argument and morally lost, they suddenly, but with deliberate malice, seized the torch and the sword and opened the bloody drama of treason-precipitating upon us the terrible tragedy of civil, and, perhaps, servile, war. They invoked this day-let them abide the dread ordeal of battle! If they are defeated, late or early, and after all this sacrifice we suffer them to transfer the issue to any other theater, we shall deserve to perish.

This is the explanation of the occurrence, at this time, of the dire calamity of war, under whose heavy cloud the nation is now passing, and which casts its chilling shadow upon our solitary hours, our social gatherings, and our religious convocations. But we look beyond the fact, and humbly seek the reason of its divine permission, and we find it without searching. The curse causeless shall not come, and it is not a causeless judgment which is pressing so fearfully upon our national life. The sons of Jacob, when the bitter cup of adversity was pressed to their lips, bethought them of the unheeded anguish of their unoffending brother whom they so remorselessly exiled and enslaved, and only not murdered him. The bitter anguish of two years of horrid war is fitted to bring stingingly to our memories our insensibility to the cries and tears of our unoffending African brother, during the two centuries of unrelenting war which we have waged upon his civil liberties and rights, his immortal aspirations and hopes, upon that which is more sacred than life itself, upon his manhood. We are verily guilty concerning our brother, therefore is this distress come upon us—this reflection did not arise in the minds of those heartless brothers, when overtaken by calamity, more instantaneously and vividly than God's retributive justice has, in these days, flashed it upon the conscience and the heart of this guilty Republic. And the only hope of our salvation as a people rests, as did theirs, in a thorough uprooting of this great wickedness and provocation, and the putting completely away from us the source of all this evil.

National retribution must overtake national sins on their own arena; but, to a people whose measure is not already full, the retributive visitation is designed to be also corrective. The theme before us has, in this relation, an encouraging aspect. God is shaking us, we may believe, not to destroy us, but to purify and save us. He is seeking to prepare us for the coming of our Deliverer, and all this agitation is a prerequisite to his powerful reign. Our only path to find prosperity lies through this valley of humiliation, through these days of tribulation. Are we so treading our prescribed path, and meeting the requirements of Him who is a swift witness against oppressors, that we may hope to abide the day of his coming, and, purified from our national guilt, be enabled to offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness? This is, to us, the vital question of the hour.

So demoralized had the nation become by direct participation in slavery, and by open or tacit complicity and benumbing contact with it, that from the beginning of our present troubles, it has been an anxious problem with the friends of impartial liberty, whether the administration could be brought to the adoption of a righteous policy in the prosecution of its righteous cause. The manifest unsoundness of its policy was a continual weakness and drawback. So low has been its moral position, that the prospects of the slave have been brightened by every reverse which our arms have sustained; and his hope of deliverance, through us, lay not in our present success, but in our present delay and disaster, and, in praying for his early liberation, we virtually prayed for the defeat of our armies. Meanwhile, God was holding us back from success, for no apparent reason than that we had not conformed to his plan; our accumulated resources were squandered, and our precious lives were wasted. Such a providential opportunity as seldom comes twice, or tarries long, had for more than a twelvemonth waited on the President. The power of striking down by one blow the legal status of the accursed institution, with which the Constitution, in a time of peace, had not clothed him, the law of self-preservation, in a time of war, had confessedly conferred upon him. And in thousands of burdened and prayerful hearts rose the daily inquiry, Would this golden opportunity pass away, bearing with it the hopes of our Republic, or would the President rise to the sublime level of his position? Turning from the phantom which had mocked him along the Border States, would be recognize, at length, this glorious vision of freedom? Would he heed the imploring cry with which our country, in her agony, joined her name with the sacred names of God and Humanity, in calling upon him to let the oppressed go free? Admonished by serious and inexplicable reverses, would be now accept the consecrated charge, and raise aloft the banner of Universal Emancipation, and let the breezes of the continent fan it? - assured that the deed would arouse in both hemispheres a popular enthusiasm, before which the squadrons of tyranny and of slavery would be as chaff before the whirlwind. Should this valley of Achor thus become a door of hope, and should we enter and sing there as in the days of our youth? or should the curse of an unavenged trespass be fastened upon us and trouble us forever? Would our Ship of State, amid welcoming cheers, sail on in beauty and majesty to her original destination - that LIBERTY which is her "Sabbath and port" - or to the grief and despair of patriotic hearts in our own and other lands, would it drift into "some endless bank of fucus and seaweed, and rot away amid foul odors on a sea where no wind ever blows?" In a word, should the rebellion be extinguished by exterminating its source and support, or should the sacred cause still lack, in the decisive hour, the inspiration which it needed and claimed from its chosen headinfusing into it a quenchless vigor, pressing it onward to certain victory, and crowning it with the benedictions of all good men and the lasting favor of Almighty God?

The problem which has awakened so much solicitude has, within the past month, received a probable and favorable solution. The President has issued his proclamation of a contemplated and conditional emancipation, not immediate nor universal—a document not placing us at once in full accord with divine justice—yet of vast significance as fairly reflecting a general movement of the public mind in the direction of universal freedom, irresistible as the drift of an Alpine glacier. Let us thank God, and take courage. To dissolve this Republic in the interest of slavery, or to consolidate and perpetuate it in the interest of freedom, are the only alternatives now before us, leaving no middle ground nor middle policy; and with the contest thus clearly defined, and relieved of the doubts which weighed upon us four weeks ago, we can, under God, resolutely and cheerfully meet the issue.

To the Association which has convened here on its sixteenth anniversary, will belong the honorable distinction in the future, already a source of intense satisfaction, of having never bowed the knee to the Baal of Slavery. It came into existence as a protest against every species of alliance with this abomination, and during these eventful years of our national history it has held fast and disseminated its faith, and on this basis has earnestly and successfully prosecuted the work, domestic and foreign, which the Master has been pleased to commit to its guardianship. The principles which constitute its vital force are emphatically indorsed to-night by the Providence of God, and the churches of every communion throughout our country, which have not been swept into the great Southern apostasy, are practically adopting them. The day which, to its founders seemed distant, though certain, has already dawned, and their position is justified before the world; and it is proper and suitable that this impartial tribute should be offered in the presence of this great assembly of its friends and supporters. Because this Society has thus remembered Christ's poor in the days which are past, Christ will remember it in the days which are coming, and so far as it can subserve his benign purpose, it shall be in favor with the Lord and also with men. He is honoring it now by assigning it a special work of faith and labor of love-a work of thrilling interest-among the freedmen just delivered from the house of bondage. And if its conductors and patrons keep in mind their dependence on his grace, and walk humbly, consistently, and prayerfully before him, he will graciously continue to employ it as a powerful auxiliary in the cause of Christian benevolence at home and abroad, when every thing distinctive or peculiar in its early organization shall have passed away with the occasion which called it out, and putting forth no exclusive claim, it shall rejoice in the sufficient glory of being one of a sisterhood of Missionary Societies, that with kindred aims and spirit, with mutual fellowship and cordial cooperation, are faithfully and unitedly seeking the glory of God in the conversion of a lost world to Christ. Assembled as we are, beloved, at a time when men have drunk the wine of violence amid the confused noise of embattled warriors, and the painful spectacle of garments rolled in blood, let us draw comfort from the reflection that all this explosion of Satanic rage is the authentic herald of the advent of Zion's King, about to take his scepter and assert his majesty, and ride forth, prosperously and gloriously, in his chariot of salvation. Lu Come, thou incarnate Word, instance of freedom, are; browe veliging with no brid now before us, leaving such tromos all they but One prayer attended you built, a silved on we make the driver than Come, and thy people bless, by the though by visually

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Seventeenth Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held in the Congregational Church at Hopkinton, Mass., commencing Wednesday, October 21st, 1863, at three o'clock P.M.

In the absence of the President, Rev. David Thurston, of Maine, the chair was taken by Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, President of Wheaton College, Illinois, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Association.

Prayer was offered by President Blanchard.

Rev. Henry Belden, Recording Secretary, read the minutes of the last Annual Meeting.

Rev. J. White was appointed Assistant Secretary pro tem.

Interesting letters were read by Secretary Whipple from the President, Rev. David Thurston, and from J. P. Williston, Esq., of Massachusetts, one of the Vice-Presidents.

The Treasurer's Annual Report was read by Lewis Tappan, Esq., Treasurer, with the Auditor's certificate appended.

A Business Committee was appointed by the Chair, consisting of Lewis Tappan, Esq., of New-York; Rev. W. B. Brown, of Newark, N. J.; Rev. Samuel Hunt, of Franklin, Mass.; Deacon John A. Fitch, of Hopkinton, Mass.; and Isaac T. Hutchins, Esq., of Danielsonville, Conn.

The following were also appointed a Committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year, namely: Rev. J. C. Webster, of Hopkinton, Mass.; Rev. W. Goodell, of New-York; Rev. Charles Chamberlain, of Eastford, Conn.; Lee Claffin, Esq., of Hopkinton, Mass.; and Rev. D. L. Furber, of Newton, Mass.

Abstracts of the Annual Report were read by Rev. G. Whipple, Secretary of the Foreign Department, and Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Secretary of the Home Department.

Hon. A. C. Barstow, of Providence, and Hon. Wm. Claffin, of Newton, were added to the Business Committee.

The hymn commencing, "Yes, we trust the day is breaking," was sung, after which an address was made on the wants, condition, and prospects of the Freedmen in the South-West, by Rev. S. G. Wright.

The Association then took a recess till evening service.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Rev. Messrs. Tyler, Furber, and Hunt took part in the introductory services. The Annual Sermon was preached by President Blanchard, from Revelation 6:2: "And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer." Rev. Dr. Arnold made the closing prayer. Adjourned till eight o'clock to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY MORNING.

The Association convened at eight o'clock, and spent an hour in devotional exercises. Rev. S. W. Magill, of Waterbury, presided; after which the business meeting was opened with prayer, by Rev. J. Brewer, of Massachusetts, Arthur Tappan, Esq., Vice-President, in the chair.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

On motion of Mr. Brewer, a vote of thanks was tendered to President Blanchard, for his Annual Sermon before the Association, and a copy was requested for publication.

Mr. Wm. Davis, one of the Freedmen from Virginia, being requested, made some remarks.

By request of the Vice-Presidents present, and by a vote of the Association, Hon. Wm. Claffin, of Newton, Mass., was invited to preside at the meetings of the Association. Mr. Claffin accepted the invitation, and made a brief address.

The Business Committee, by their chairman, Lewis Tappan, Esq., reported a series of resolutions. The report was accepted.

On motion of President Blanchard, the resolutions were taken up for discussion. After remarks by Rev. Messrs. Blanchard, Trask, and Brown, the first resolution was adopted.

Rev. H. T. Cheever read certain resolutions, which were referred to the Business Committee.

The second resolution of the series was taken up. A few remarks were made by Rev. E. Davis, and it was adopted.

The third resolution was then read. M. S. Scudder, of Granville, Mass.; A. Tappan, of Connecticut; Rev. Wm. Goodell, Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Rev. George Trask, Rev. W. B. Brown, and Rev. G. Whipple made remarks. It was recommitted for amendments.

Brief addresses were made by Rev. L. Thompson, of the Jamaica Mission, Rev. J. White, Rev. J. P. Bardwell, and Rev. W. S. Bell, missionary among the Freedmen in Virginia.

Mr. L. Tappan reported from the Business Committee further resolutions, which were accepted, and on which he made some remarks. The resolutions were laid on the table, for further consideration.

Rev. H. T. Cheever read a letter from Hon. I. Washburn, of Worcester, proposing to remit $500 to the Treasurer for the coming year.

Adjourned till two o'clock.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The Association met at two o'clock, and united in the celebration of the Lord's Supper, Rev. S. W. Magill, of Waterbury, Conn., and Rev. W. B. Brown, of Newark, N. J., officiating.

At the conclusion of these exercises, the Association resumed business. Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Secretary of the Home Department, presented a communication, in which he declined to be a candidate for reelection as Secretary, which was referred to the Committee on Nominations.

Mr. Tappan reported from the Business Committee a resolution, which, after remarks from several gentlemen present in its favor, was adopted. (See resolution 3.)

The fourth resolution was then passed.

A resolution was read by Rev. J. White, and in connection with it he made some remarks in reference to the Mendi Mission. The resolution was referred to the Business Committee, and subsequently reported and adopted.

The Committee on the Nomination of Officers for the ensuing year, reported as follows:

The Committee reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That we desire to record our deep sense of the value of the services rendered to this Association by Brother Jocelyn, through a period of ten years; our sincere gratitude to him for those services; and our regret that he feels it to be necessary for him now to retire from a position so long, so faithfully, and so ably filled.

They also recommended that the Executive Committee be authorized to fill the vacancy occasioned by the declinature of Mr. Jocelyn; also that Mr. Jocelyn be requested to continue in the office as Secretary till the Executive Committee shall make a new appointment.

The report was accepted and unanimously adopted.

It was resolved that the paper presented by Mr. Jocelyn be printed with the proceedings of the meeting.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh resolutions were severally read and passed.

After remarks by Rev. Mr. Magill, Rev. W. B. Brown, Rev. Mr. Mowry, of the Methodist Church, and President Blanchard, the preamble and resolution eight were adopted.

It was resolved that the annual reports of the Executive Committee, abstracts of which have been read, and the Treasurer's Report, be printed, under the direction of the Executive Committee.

Rev. L. Thompson, of the Jamaica Mission, made an interesting address, on the subject of West-India emancipation.

Rev. Mr. Green followed, giving an account of his connection with the Sandwich Islands Mission, and of the wants and prospects of the work among that people.

Mr. Wm. Davis, a freedman from Virginia, gave an earnest statement concerning his late experiences as a slave.

Brief and interesting addresses were also made by Rev. W. T. Richardson, of Beaufort, S. C., Dr. C. B. Webster, and Rev. R. M. Chip-

The resolution presented by Rev. Mr. White (No. 9) was then adopted.

Rev. G. Whipple moved a vote of thanks to the people of Hopkinton, for their hospitality, to the Society for the use of the house, to the choir for their services, and to the Committee of Arrangements at Hopkinton, for their provisions for the meetings, which was adopted.

The hour being late, the minutes were referred to the Secretaries of the meeting and to the Corresponding Secretaries, for revision and publication.

After singing a portion of the Missionary Hymn, the Association adjourned to meet at the call of the Executive Committee.

The following are the Resolutions as adopted by the Association:

1. Resolved, That, recognizing in the commission of the great Head of the Church, "GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD, AND PREACH THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE," the duty of missionary Societies and all ecclesissical bodies to labor for the removal of any obstacle that lies in the path of missionary operations, whether at home or abroad, the American Missionary Association, at this its Seventeenth Annual meeting, devouly acknowledges the overruling providence of God, in giving efficacy to the principles upon which the Association was founded, so that the wickedness of American slavery, and the duty of the Church to labor for its downfall, are now the prevalent sentiment of the professed followers of Christ in this country, as they have long been in other civilized and Christian nations.

2. Resolved, That the efforts put forth by this Association for the evangelization of Africa, the emancipated in Jamaica, the fugitives in Canada, the destitute and downtrodden in Slave States, have met with such encouraging success, as to call for our thankful acknowledgments to Him who has promised to break in pieces the oppressor and give liberty to the captives; and that the carrying out of the principles of the Association has been a preparation for labors in the extensive field now opening for the instruction and conversion of those in our land who have hitherto been denied the Bible, sitting in Darries and in the shadow of Death, Being Bound in application and Hrox.

3. Resolved, That the exigencies of the work in behalf of the ever increasing number of Freedmen in our land, calls upon this Association for renewed consecration and redoubled energy in its behalf, and that while millions may be demanded for its speedy accomplishment, we will this year aim at raising not less than one hundred thousand dollars for its immediate necessities.

4. Resolved, That the bundreds of thousands of our fellow-men, lately held in slavery, and now enjoying the blessings of liberty, and the millions proclaimed free by the Proclamation of the President of the United States—nover to be remanded to a state of Dondage—open a field for increasing missionary and educational labors, in which the Association has already engaged with great success, and which they desire/to pursue with increased energy, relying, under God, upon the sympathy, the generous offerings, and the prayers of the friends of man, and the friends of Christ, until the wilderings and the SOLITARY PLACE SHALL BE GLAD FOR THEM, AND THE DESERT SHALL REJOICE, AND BLOSSOM AS THE ROSE.

5. Resolved. That the state of the country, while it calls for deep humiliation and penitence on account of the sins of the nation, and especially the gigantic sin of American slavery, that have provoked a just and holy God to come out in judgment against it, calls also for devout gratitude to the Almighty Ruler of nations for the success that has been given to our Government and its military and naval forces, in the great conflict now waging with the infatuated and desperate men in rebellion against rightful authority, and in the prospect afforded that, with the holy of God, stavery, the pernicious cause of the rebellion, and the rebellion itself, will be speedily overthrown, and peace be established in rightcousness, justice and equity, under the sway of the God of Peace and Freedom, who is yet to reign in these United States, we humbly but confidently trust, over a penitent, regenerated, grateful, and obedient people.

6. Resolved, That masmuch as it has been declared by our Divine Lord that the first is the world, it behaves the friends of missions, while laboring with increased zeal, liberality and faith for the enlightenment of the ignorant and the salvation of the unconverted in our own land, not to neglect the urgent claims of the heathen world, but in emulation of the primitive church, to prosecute the work of spreading the Gospel in other lands, relying upon the divine declaration, I will be exalted among the meature of the world shall be converted to God.

7. Resolved, That while we reverently thank God for the wonderful progress made, during the year past, by our government, towards that recognition of human rights for which this Association has contended, there is much to be accomplished, as well in the Cabinet and Congress as in the field, before the principles of the President's Proclamation can be fully sustained; and that, for this purpose, the Administration needs both the moral and political support of a religious community; and that, further still, it is but fitting that this organization, as a recognized and honored exponent of the active Christian and missionary anti-slavery sentiments of the loyal States should, through its officers and members, and in all proper and legitimate ways, make its influence felt, in shaping the future policy of the government.

8. Whereas, God, in his Providence, has recently opened a wide field of missionary labor among the African race in our land, as in time past he had done in other lands, and whereas, from the principles of the Association, as well as from its past history and practice, peculiar obligations are laid upon us to enter this open door, therefore

Resolved. That we approve the action of the Executive Committee for the past year, in expending so large a proportion of the funds of the Association upon missions among this people, and that we recommend them to continue to make this people the peculiar and special object of their care.

9. Resolved, That this Association, regarding the evangelization of the African race as their providential work, while desiring to put forth efforts in behalf of the Freedmen in some degree commensurate with the vastness of the work, will not forget the claims of the Mendi Mission, but will endeavor to strengthen and enlarge that mission, as the way is opened in the providence of God; and that the missionaries in that field have our warmest sympathies in the trials and embarrassments through which they have passed.

LETTER FROM REV. DAVID THURSTON.

The following is the letter addressed by the venerable President, to the Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements:

LITCHFIELD CORNER, Me., Oct. 15, 1863.

My Dear Brother: I have greatly desired to meet once more our dearly beloved Missionary Association; but a domestic affliction must prevent my attendance at the approaching auniversary. Though absent in body, my spirit will be with you. My prayer is, that the Holy Spirit may preside over all your deliberations, guide you to the adoption of such measures, as the Lord Jesus, the great Head of the Church, will approve and succeed. I rejoice in all the good the Association has been the favored instrument of effecting. This is by no means small. It is a matter of devout thanksgiving to God that he has so kindly sustained us in our conflicts with error and sin; and that he has opened so wide a door of entrance, formerly closed, into a field so extensive and so rich in the promise of an expherant harvest.

I am glad the attention of the Association was so early and has been so successfully directed to the people recently freed from the crushing, oruel deep ism of slavery. Their need of benevolent and missionary effort, physically, intellectually, and spiritually, is affectingly urgent, Their condition appeals most fervently to every humane, philanthropic, and Christian sentiment and feeling for aid. Where can contributions to the bodily, mental, and moral wants of any portion of our race be made with more assurance of a grateful, useful reception, than to them? Their instruction and conversion to Christ may render them more serviceable in this country, where their labor is so much needed, than in any other.

The plan of expatriating them is a shameful reproach to our Christianity. If the government, as it is their daty, will arrange so as to secure and protect the rights of the people, all will be well.

Without boasting, we may congratulate ourselves, that the principles, avowed by this Association, have not been without effect in modifying the proceedings of some other benevolent organizations.*

The recommendation of our Missionary Association by the General Association of New-York at their late meeting at Gloversville, deserves a very grateful notice. After referring to "the vast and hopeful field for philanthropic and Christian missiona," they say: "For this great and blessed work, we have, at hand, in the American Missionary Association, an agency, experienced and prepared, knowing the field, and ready to occupy it, to the fullest extent of the coöperation of the churches." Truly do the New-York ministers say: "Never since the apostolic age, has there been open to the Church a field so vast, so urgent, so hepeful. A race is at our doors to be lifted from the lowest degradation to the level of our Christian civilization, a race plastic, quick to apprehend, prepared of God to receive the gift that we alone can convey to them; a race whose Christian development will be ours, as their destiny is ours also, a race whose evangelization here, will be the evangelization of Africa, and a grand march towards the conversion of the world."

May the Christians and philanthropists take hold of this work with a liberal and strong hand, and the blessing of God.will assuredly follow. When untying their purse and opening their wardrobe, they should bear in mind that inspired declaration: "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he batt given will be pay him again." Surely no one, who would make a safe investment, can ask for better security. Try it, friends. "Let all the tithes be brought in, and see if the Lord will not open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing that there be not room to receive it."

Very fraternally yours.

DAVID THURSTON.

LETTER FROM SECRETARY JOCELYN.

REFERRED TO IN THE MINUTES.

To the American Missionary Association at its Annual Meeting at Hopkinton, Mass., Oct. 22d, 1863.

Dear Brethern: The events of Divine Providence now impose upon this Association responsibilities and activities beyond its present executive power, and every day in the history of the multitudes delivered from slavery, in this country, increases the pressure. For a long time the correspondence and other labors required in relation to the Freedmen, and our missions and schools among them, have been so onerous that the Foreign Secretary has necessarily done a large amount of labor to meet the demand. Under these circumstances, it is the province and duty of the Association to take such steps as will enable it to meet the present need, and to provide for the future.

As early as the summer of 1862, I had strong doubts of the practicability of my continuing as Secretary of the Home Department; and, with the vastly increased and multiform duties of the office—most severe to the occupants in the debilitating seasons of summer and autumn, with the impracticability of the recess common to professional men in cities at that season,—I have no escape from the duty of resigning the post which I have, through your generous confidence, held for the last ten years.

^{*}I was about to add, "As well as of the National Government." I am reliably informed that the word "justice," was introduced in the President's Proclamation of Emancipation through this influence. Whether it is best to say this, I submit to your better judgment.

Permit me to ask, therefore, that the Nominating Committee would not consider me as among those who may be regarded as candidates for the office. As I believe that I may in other relations subserve the great interests of the Association, and that it should now select a man of peculiar qualifications and with a vigor giving promise of endurance, I trust that it will agree with me in my decision. And as no one officer can hope to most the artire decayed for his restrictions and ance, I trust that it will agree with me in my decision. And as no one officer can hope to meet the entire demand for labor which this great providential work will impose, and having the fullest conviction that the Foreign Secretary, Rev. Mr. Whipple, has already a high preparation from experience in the work among the Freedmen, let me suggest that the Association should not appoint Secretaries specifically for the Foreign, and for the Home Departments, but two joint Secretaries, the larger part of whose time will necessarily be employed hereafter in the work at the South.

It is a conviction not to be questioned, that this Association with its immortal Bible principles, is, if indeed it meets the high behests of its Divine leader, to be permanent, and to prevail, with numbers greatly increasing, and usefulness not to be computed. In view of this fact, I feel constrained to urge that action in every respect, which, in faith, looks to the future, as well as the present. Was there ever such a call made upon a nation, and upon the Church of Christ, as now comes from the millions stepping into nation, and upon the Church of Christ, as now comes from the millions stepping into freedom in this land; and in this day, from the cry of nations perishing, who must have the Gospel or perish? Let us with timely wisdom and faith, sacrificing all individual interests and preferences, meet the call of Christ and the perishing.

My relations with the Association from the commencement of its existence, and with its officers, have been most happy. I could wish that I might have better subserved its interests, but rejoice with you that God has so signally blessed us, and is honoring us with trusts so sacred, and, under his favor, promising so much for humanity, and the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour in the earth. Earnestly asking your prayers in my belief, and rejoicing to labor to the end of life in the great cause of humanity and half, and rejoicing to labor to the end of life in the great cause of human freedom and redemption, I am Beloved in Christ,

Your Brother,

RER'S REPOR

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

THE Executive Committee would commence the Seventeenth Annual Report, by recording their grateful recognition of the Divine favor in the preservation of the lives of our missionaries, even amidst much sickness; the increase of funds for carrying forward our work; the providential vindication, by the progress of events, of the Christian Anti-Slavery principles of the Association; the improvement in the tone of public sentiment in behalf of the oppressed; and in the general ordering of our affairs for the liberation of the enslaved, and the establishing of truth, justice, and freedom in our land; so that even in the presence of "the battle of the warrior," "with confused noise and garments rolled in blood," we may rejoice in the hope that "the year of (his) redeemed is come." We accept with thankfulness the continually enlarging Missionary field opening before us among the late bondmen of our land, and pray for renewed faith and an increase of Apostolic zeal, to meet this almost more than Apostolic work; and for Divine wisdom and guidance, that we may remain true to the principles of liberty, and the jealous regard for the purity of Christ's Church, and the honor of his cause, that through his favor, were embodied in our organization.

Three newly appointed missionaries have united with our Foreign Missions during the year, and two have returned after a short absence.

Two hundred and eighty-three life members have been added to the Association since our last report. The death of twenty-six life members has been reported to us. The whole number of life members from the beginning has been 3475.

From the Treasurer's report it will be seen, that the receipts of the fiscal year have been $57,404.68, against $47.062.60.

The estimated value of clothing, etc., for the Freedmen, not included in the above, is $14,700, making the total value disbursed by the Association $72,104.68, an excess over last year of about fifty-three per cent.

MENDI MISSION, WEST-AFRICA.

STATIONS: GOOD HOPE, MO TAPPAN, AVERY, VICTORIA. Missionaries.—Rev. H. H. HISMAN, Rev. GEORGE P. CLAFLIN, Rev. C. F. WINSHIP, Rev. E. J. ADAMS, DANIEL W. BURTON, SAMUEL J. WHITON, Mrs. HISMAN, Mrs. CLAFLIN, Mrs. WINSHIP, Mrs. BURTON, Mrs. Maile, Mrs. Whiton, Mrs. Adams.

Native Assistants.—Rev. George N. Jowett, John Johnson.

Mr. Richard Miles and Mrs. Miles resigned their connection with the Mission last October, and are now in connection with the Protestant Episcopal Mission, in Liberia. Mrs. Adams, wife of the Rev. E. J. Adams, has not yet joined the Mission.

The past year has been one of great trial to the Mendi Mission, arising from the sickness and absence of so many of its members. At the commencement of the year, Mr. and Mrs. Hinman were absent, occasioned by the severe illness of Mrs. Hinman. He rejoined the Mission in November. She remained in this country till May last. In January, Mr. Burton, who had previously acquainted the Executive Committee with the probable necessity of doing so, asked leave to retire from the Mission, and to return, with Mrs. Burton, to this country, on account of the long continued illness of Mrs. Burton, occasioned by her long residence in Africa. With much regret the Executive Committee accepted the resignation of these tried and experienced Missionaries, expressing their sympathy with them, and their sorrow at losing their services at the Mission. They arrived in New-York, April first, 1863, and are now in Galesburgh, Illinois. Mrs. Burton is slowly recovering, though it is feared that she may never be able to resume her connection with the Mission. On the eve of their departure from Good Hope, the Early Dawn, published by the Mission, contained the following minute:

"We regret to have to announce that Mr. and Mrs. Burton, who for nearly ten years had charge of this station, are—in consequence of the failing health of Mrs. Burton—about to leave for America, and do not expect to return.

"In behalf of the Mission we wish to say to our brother and sister, that while we acquiesce in what seems to be the plain indications of an All-wise Providence, we yet feel that their departure is a great loss to the Mission, whose welfare they have labored so long, so earnestly, and so effectively to promote, and a great loss to us, who have been blessed with their sympathy, their counsel, and Ohristian affection.

"We assure them, that though they are to be separated from us, their memory will ever live in our hearts; and our prayers to God will go with them, trusting that wherever their lot may be cast, they will dwell in the secret presence of the Most High, and abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

The Mission was soon after still further weakened by the removal of Mr. and Mrs. Winship.

In March Mr. Winship wrote that he had been compelled to seek relief, and was then at Freetown under medical treatment. His disease was a severe and weakening cough, resulting from a cold taken six months before, and at the time seriously threatening consumption. In April his physician advised his immediate return to this country, medicine did him no good, and his life would be much endangered by his remaining in Africa through another rainy season, in his weakened condition. Mrs. Winship accompanied him in his return. He appears to be improving in health, and hopes again to return to his much loved work in Africa. He left the Mission with much regret. In his letter communicating to the Committee the decision of the physician, he said:

"It is with feelings of sorrow, even with tears, that I pen these lines. Doctor Bradshaw, (of Freetown,) this morning says I must get away from this country as soon as possible; he can do nothing to help me, etc. . . So all hope of returning soon to my work has vanished. Who will take our places in the Bargroo? My heart bleeds when I think of that poor people left as sheep without a shepherd; and our number is so reduced that we are unable to send any one to them."

The Executive Committee had already made public the need of reenforcements for that Mission; and in May, Rev. E. J. Adams, Samuel J. Whiton, Mrs. Hinman, and Miss Lucy C. Danforth sailed from Baltimore to join the Mission. They arrived at Freetown July eighteenth, and at the Good Hope Station, Sherbro Island, August twelfth. Mr. Whiton and Miss Danforth were united in marriage at the Mission House, Padimba Road, Freetown, July twenty-ninth.

During the year, the authority and laws of an English colony have been extended over the Mission stations at Good Hope, the Bargroo and Victoria. The territory in which they are situated has been formally annexed to Sierra Leone. Some disaffection exists among the people, and some complaints are made that the treaties, ceding the territory to Great Britain, were not understood by the chiefs who were parties to them; but the transaction has been made complete, and our Missionaries, after the Apostolic example, advise the people that Christian principle, not less than sound policy, demands of them quietly to submit to the requirements of government, and cheerfully obey them. In relation to the new order of affairs they said:

"Our doctrine, as religious teachers, is the same now that it has been under the native government. We hold that the law of God is supreme, but we also hold that all the requirements of those in authority, which are not inconsistent with obedience to God, are to be cheerfully obeyed. As teachers of the people, we 'put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work.'"

The Church of England is extending her Missionary field in Africa. A church of that order is proposed to be established on the Sherbro Island, near Victoria. This would diminish the importance of that station for Missionary labor with the natives, and our Missionaries suggest its relinquishment to the Church Missionary Society.

The changes that have occurred at the Mission; the deficiency of laborers; the consequent overburdening of those that remained, have been unfavorable to success; and the apparent prosperity of the Mission has been less than in some former years. Some cases of discipline have occurred, throwing a deep shade of sadness over the minds of the Missionaries, and making familiar to them some of the severer language of the Apostle to the Gentiles, addressed to the churches planted by him. At times, however, the Missionaries have reported favorably. Discipline was working the purity of the Church. Before the prostration of his health, Mr. and Mrs. Winship were receiving much encouragement at their station on the Bargroo. And Mr. Hinman has more than once expressed his gratification at the progress in the Sherbro church. "Our Sabbath congregations," hesays, "are as large as I have ever seen them, and the prayer and class meetings are well attended, although there does not seem to be any special religious interest."

The number of scholars at the boarding-school at the Good Hope Station has been diminished. Some of them were sent to other stations of the Mission, and some have returned to their homes. When last reported it contained but eighteen scholars. The Missionaries thought it unwise to increase the number in the present weak condition of the Mission. The ordained Missionaries, they think, should be permitted to devote their whole time to more spiritual things, more direct labors for the conversion of souls.

At present, and probably for some time to come, the schools will not be increased, and may be diminished, by the removal of scholars whose profiting may appear the least probable. In the mean time special pains is being taken to teach the scholars not only letters, and religion, but also some useful and honorable employment. Almost every boy in the Good Hope School is learning some mechanical business.

The Mission continues the publication of the Early Dawn. Its influence is felt to be good; and its cost small, as it is printed wholly by two of the Mission scholars; the only cost being for paper and ink. Subscriptions received for it make it nearly self-sustaining. An edition of the Gospel of John, in the Sherbro language, has been issued from the Mission press, giving the people the word of life in language they fully understand. An edition of the same Gospel, prepared by Rev. Mr. Claffin in Mendi, is being published for the large number speaking that language.

The country along the Boom River, (on which the Mo Tappan station is situated,) and that along the Kittam, have been again disturbed by war. The second Sabbath in January, a war party came to a town on the Sherbro Island, near our Mission station, and took the place, with many prisoners. Not only were all the people of the town captured to be held as slaves; but also strangers and refugees from the Kittam, who were staying on the island; some of them were from the Mission premises. No property on which the attacking party could lay their hands was spared. The Mission could afford no protection to any one; all was excitement and alarm.

The leader of this war party was, however, taken by the English commander on the Island, and sent, with other prisoners, to Freetown for trial. It is hoped that the increasing influence of Christian Missions on that coast, the extension of English authority, and the destruction of slavery in the United States, will soon put a stop to the slavetrade there, and give to the people peace and quietness. Until the establishment of Missions on that coast, the bones and sinews, the bodies and souls of men, women, and children, were almost the only articles of export, and in the wars required for the support of this traffic, tribe after tribe of the native people has been blotted out, amidst horrors and barbarities, the full extent of which eternity only can adequately show. A fearful debt do the professedly Christian nations of the earth owe to that continent. American vessels, more than those of any other nation, have been engaged in this infamous business. Fearfully are we now suffering for our crimes against Africa and her children. Will not the Christians of America return to that land one Missionary, with the blessings of the Gospel, for each thousand of her children, torn bleeding from her bosom or slain at their firesides? Joy would thus be sent through all her borders, and the voice of thanksgiving soon be heard over all the land.

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The station at Salem Hill has been vacant through the year, owing to causes already detailed. Mr. Hinman is exceedingly anxious to return there so soon as the older stations are supplied with laborers. The Avery station, left vacant by Mr. Winship's return, it is proposed Mr. Whiton should supply. Mr. Claffin remains at Mo Tappan.

The Executive Committee have strongly desired to do more for Africa the past year, than they have been able to do. The providences of God have prevented. At a time when enlargement and vigorous labors seemed to be demanded; the sickness and retirement of Missionaries left the remaining company too small to hold the ground already occupied; too weak to sustain without injury the burdens thrown upon them; and the exciting scenes in our own country, the demand for volunteers in the war, the sacrifice of the hundreds of thousands of lives, the flower of our country, in our terrible struggle against the desperate assaults of the monster slavery, and the rush of many into the new Mission field opened in the South, have prevented our being able to send to Africa the help our over-burdened brethren and sisters needed. If the results of Missionary labor are less apparent than in some former years, we have no reason for being disheartened, but rather find occasion to strive so much the more to remove the cause, and to furnish the needed laborers. The field yet remains large and open, and so far as man can judge, promising of results. Rev. Mr. Claffin, in concluding his last letter, wrote:

"The openings that have existed still exist, the demand for teachers of the Gospel, which this people makes upon the churches of America, exists in the nature of things, and will remain till the character of the people changes. The character of the people will not change, till the healthful influence of Gospel light prevails among them. Hence the need that funds and teachers should be furnished with an increasing ratio.

"Oh! that the churches would continually feel that so long as darkness exists in this country, so long an increasing spiritual force should be sent to dissipate it."

"More laborers, ministers, and business men, are needed to fill these desolate wastes.
Will the Christians of America supply them, or must another generation go down to the grave with no saving knowledge of Christ?"

There is yet, we believe, a bright future for Africa, an earnest of which we think we discern in the providential overruling of affairs in our own country. God has arisen "to shake terribly" our nation for its transgressions, prominent among which have been its crimes against the people of that continent. Four millions of her people are to be made free at our doors, for whom we are permitted to labor. Thousands of them, when born into the Kingdom of God's dear Son, will leap with joy to be the bearers of the glad tidings of salvation to the land of their forefathers. But the Christians of America must not wait for them to do the work. Woe will be to us if we wait for any thing but the open door and Divine permission to enter it. We owe it to Africa; we owe it to her children here, and in the islands of the sea; we owe it to our own Christian character and manhood; nay more, we owe it to God our Saviour, to be diligent and earnest in our efforts for the salvation of that people, to prepare the way for the glorious coming of Christ, and the establishment of his kingdom there.

A partial preparation has already been made. Light is dawning, where, for centuries, the darkness of the second death has reigned. The slave-trade is giving way to lawful commerce; the eyes of Christians are being inquiringly turned towards her, their hearts are beginning to burn with the fire of Christian love; Christian Missions are beautifying her shores, Christian churches are springing up within her bounds; and there are now probably one hundred and fifty churches, with twenty thousand hopeful converts, on the western coast; and some knowledge of the Gospel has reached six millions of her children. But what are these among so many? Compared with her teeming population, they are as the small dust of the balance; but as a testimony of the grace of a merciful God, of his willingness to bless the feeblest labors of his children, the earnest they give of a glorious future for that long shadowed land, they are of inestimable value, red to enclose to the log fred at mond, dride mediannot be mataya

The unhappy divisions which were noticed in last year's Report, have continued. Were they purely internal, the missionaries would be better able to deal with them; but unhappily they form a base for continual plottings from without, to bring the whole church under a system of formalism which, from its loud professions of adherence to a literal interpretation of the Bible, and the stress which it lays upon a single rite, has strong attractions for the colored people of Jamaica. The evil influence of this among the people is augmented by the fact that it is favored by one who in former times was deservedly honored and loved. Reversing Paul's history, he "now seems to destroy the faith which once he preached." He once labored to build up the people in the truth of justification by faith, now he preaches a doctrine which practically means "justification by baptism alone."

This important church is at present in a critical condition, and needs the prayers of God's people that it may be preserved in the truth of the Gospel. They have been accommoded out to enopour with behavioring when

Mr. Penfield's health has of late been exceedingly precarious, and he needs relief from care, and Mrs. Penfield has been compelled to return temporarily to this country. It is to be hoped that they both may again, in renewed vigor, with the sanctifying blessing of God and his favoring grace, see much good wrought in this important and interesting community. The church has increased in numbers during the past year, fourteen having been added on profession of faith.

a floring law your continued by and thought and continued and the party of the part Eliot.

This station is laboring under the disadvantage of having no resident pastor. Mrs. Thompson's health, which for a considerable time had been suffering, became last spring so seriously affected as to render it necessary that she should be removed at once to the United States, and Mr. Thompson should accompany her. Although improving, she is still so far from being restored that the time of their return is extremely uncertain. The pulpit at Eliot is temporarily supplied by the brethren of the mission, and the church is under the special charge of Mr. Wolcott, the Superintendent of Richmond. Several brethren of other societies have kindly given a Sunday or two each, to Eliot.

Reviewing his eighteen years' connection with Eliot, Mr. Thompson is able to reflect with thankfulness, that in that time the numbers of its church members have more than doubled; that harmony of feeling and concert of action almost uniformly have prevailed; that every year has witnessed the awakening of some new moral or intellectual interest; and that the Eliot Church and Richmond Industrial School are so related as to be of inestimable mutual benefit. He mentions also the interest taken by the people in the prospects of their enslaved brethren in this country. The young men delegated him, at their own expense, to convey their congratulations to the Freedmen around Washington and Fortress Monroe.

The unconverted portion of the black people of Jamaica are as selfish as other unconverted men; secure of their own freedom, they care little for the freedom of others, and are shy of owning affinity with the enslaved. But the many thousands of the Jamaica people, in whom religion has kept alive the sentiments of humility and gratitude, appear to be profoundly interested in the fate of their brethren here. This is shown by the crowded audiences that outside of the bounds of the mission gather to hear on this subject, and the liberality with which they were ready to help.

Miss Veazie, the teacher at Eliot, has lately returned home. By the advice of the Mission about a year ago, the station schools were thrown entirely upon the people for support. Adverse circumstances have prevented the success of the experiment, and some of the missionaries think the people can not yet without a government tax, assessing all alike, support the schools. We are confident that American Christians will have no wish that these schools should be crippled for want of the small sum needed to eke out the support of their teachers. name it all the room from the art of months at heard and has

Miss Woodcock still continues the School at Sea View, which is in a flourishing condition. Her health has of late been seriously affected, but she has been able to teach the full time.

Rock Biver.

There is no report given of the school at Rock River, except the single remark that it has increased till it has become the largest school in the Mission.

Providence.

Mr. Joseph S. Fisher accepted a call from Providence Church, as mentioned in the last year's report, and has since been ordained and installed by a council convened for the purpose.

The statistical report of this church for the past year has a discouraging aspect. While only three members have been received, twenty-two have been excluded. Most of these had been previously suspended, and failing to satisfy the church of their repentance, were afterwards cut off. There is a large proportion of young people in this congregation, and the "bands" which were so rife in the time of the revival, produced among them an excitement which they hoped was conversion; but it has not been abiding. Mr. Fisher remarks that the church is probably stronger in influence for good than while these members were in it. They have done far more for all good objects than during the previous year, when their numbers were considerably larger.

The Sunday-school includes most of the congregation, old and young. Mrs. Fisher has a class of large girls, who have within the year learned upwards of ten thousand verses of Scripture.

A valuable Sabbath-school Library, obtained during the year, adds much interest. The mission-house, which includes the chapel, has also been repaired and beautified, greatly to the satisfaction of the people. It has been done entirely by them.

The distinction generally observable in respect of spiritual matters between those who were brought to God just after emancipation and those who have joined the church since, is very marked at Providence. There is a nucleus of faithful souls who learned to love the Gospel when persecution for the Gospel's sake had hardly ceased, and these do most to stay up the hands and heart of the pastor. As a church, they are a peculiarly affectionate, peaceable people. May the Great Shepherd ever care for their wants, and give them spiritual prosperity."

Mr. Fisher's daughter has kept a school for the younger children. about half the year. Being small, it is not included in the schedule.

· Chesterfield.

The report is rendered by Mr. Douglas, who has the temporary charge of the church. Mr. Venning, its pastor, left the island in June, for a visit to his native country, England, from which he had been thirty-four years absent. The visit is producing beneficial results for his health, impaired by long and faithful labors.

Mr. Douglas says:

"There is reason to believe that the Gospel has not been without its leaven-like and powerful influences for good among us. There are some visible evidences of this. Peace and harmony have for the most part prevailed among the members of the church. There have been a few exceptions to this. Most of these have since given satisfactory evidence of repentance, and been restored.

evidence of regentance, and been restored.

"God has graciously preserved the church from disturbing and distracting influences from without, an agreeable contrast between the experiences of this year and last. The attendance upon the Sabbath, of the Sabbath-school, and public services, has been encouraging. Our chapel-room, which was last year enlarged by a small addition, has usually been well filled with attentive and apparently interested hearers. Some were unmistakably deeply interested, fed, and profited.

"The interest in the Sabbath-school is pretty well sustained. The acquisition of a Sabbath-school library, which has been made, has added much to it. Besides the Sabbath-school at the station, there are several small ones held in out-districts about us, by members of the church roofs or ways resource. We have seek care to up the presence of school as the station, there are several small ones held in out-districts about us, by members of the church, mostly our young people. We have also kept up the practice of having a meeting of the Sabbath-school teachers, once a month, at which they give reports of the out Sabbath-schools, read essays prepared upon Bible subjects previously appointed, and talk and pray for the Sabbath-schools.

"Our young men have recently begun a Young Men's Christian Association, designed for mutual improvement.

"The day school, under the care of Mrs. Douglas, has been usually prosperous. On January first, the school fees were raised a little, as a step towards drawing the people on to self-support. Although the school has been smaller than usual, during the term now closing, yet probably as much real good has been done as when the number was larger. Of those who recently united with the church, some are pupils in the day school."

Hermitage

As a missionary field, continues to be about the same as last year. The people, mostly African born, are very degraded, the darkness seems thus far almost impervious to Gospel truth. Mr. Dawes, the native young man, aided there, seems like a faithful missionary among the people.

Brandon Hill.

Mr. Wilson says: "Part of the last year was marked by as high religious interest as any year since I have been here. It was noticed mainly in the quickening of the members of the church, and, I think, in bringing many of them to higher piety. The small number of accessions would show that there was no great awakening among the ungodly. Five have been excommunicated, but we have reason to hope that most of these will be restored."

The people have undertaken to build a new chapel. The materials, and the labor of bringing them, are entirely contributed by themselves, except some generous help from their Chesterfield brethren. Mr. Wilson regards their cheerful and hearty interest in this work as affording good proof that their hearts are in God's cause. The congregation and the Sabbath-school are both increasing, and it is hoped that a more commodious house will be filled with a considerably larger number of hearers. Mr. Wilson says many of the people of his charge are disposed to do all they can, by lightening the burdens of the Association in Jamaica, to enable it to do so much the more for the recently liberated in this country. On the whole, the temporal and spiritual state of Brandon Hill appears exceedingly encouraging.

Richmond.

Mr. Wolcott writes, after the August holidays, that the school has an unusual number of new applications. They will be able to receive most of the boys, but must decline receiving a good many of the girls, for the want of adequate female assistance. This is much to be regretted, for it is with the female that the regeneration of family life must begin, and if it were necessary to make a choice, their Christian training should even take precedence over the other sex.

The August meeting at Richmond was an occasion of great cheerfulness and interest. It was attended by several gentlemen from Kingston, among them the Hon. Richard Hill, who has been so warm and steady a friend of the school from its start. The exercises, as reported in the Jamaica Guardian, were of a highly creditable character.

Mr. Wolcott gives also some statements respecting the general interests of the Mission and of God's work on the island. United meetings of the Scottish, Wesleyan, and American brethren were held during five days of the second week in August, corresponding with the January meetings recommended by the Evangelical Alliance. The attendance was good and the interest deep. Mr. W. speaks of having been especially impressed by the remarks of one Wesleyan brother in the ministry, a colored man, who stated that within his memory there was but one chapel in Jamaica, that of the established church in Kingston. Then one other was built a few miles out. But through the island there were no chapels for the people, nothing but darkness and heathenish wickedness. "Now," he said, "there are chapels and ministers more than you can count. On every hill-top and in every valley are seen the doors open that lead to prosperity, spiritual and temporal. Praise the Lord! What hath God wrought!" Mr. Wolcott says he could hardly believe that the compass of his own life; nay, of his own manhood, had witnessed such a change. Often, in considering how far Jamaica is from what she ought to be, he had failed duly to consider how marvelous the elevation from what she was.

"Grant (he says) that many estates have been ruined, and that more are likely to be, the question still remains: Are the people ruined? The planters sayabley are unable to continue production at the present low prices of sugar. Well then, if Emancipation has helped to cheapen production, have the millions of consumers any reason to complain? The planters must have recourse to some other branch of cultivation, or conduct the present operations more economically. How much room there is for this, will be known by any one who has been witness of the extravagance of their actual methods."

It is the unanimous opinion of the Mission and of the brethren of other societies with whom they are familiar, that the highest usefulness of the Mission demands a speedy reinforcement of American laborers. Matters are now in such a condition that a prompt filling up of the missionary force there, is likely to have the happiest and most lasting results, and a neglect of this may have the most serious consequences.

Great interest is now felt in our country in the spiritual good of the Freedmen. It must not be forgotten that these churches in Jamaica under the care of the Association, are the oldest churches formed among our emancipated people by Americans. The success of free society in Jamaica will give courage and hopefulness to the prospects. of emancipation here. The link which connects American Christians with Jamaica may be, in Divine Providence, a most important one, holding their attention more closely and continuously to an island whence they may draw lessons of hope, of needed caution, and sobriety of expectation. As to the intrinsic value of the work, souls there are as precious as souls here, and churches of the Lord there already planted and increasing, may well hope not to be forgotten by those who would plant churches in the lately emancipated regions of our own South. We trust that we may be able to maintain this Mission in healthy life, and that among the more imposing movements of the present, it will continue to draw affectionate regard from those who have cherished it for Christ's sake.

SIAM MISSION.

BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries-Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, M.D., Mrs. BRADLEY.

Mr. Odell, who has been filling the place of Superintendent of the printing office, expects to remain in that position another year.

The expenses of this Mission have been met by the funds in its hands at the commencement of the year, and the income from the printing office. Dr. Bradley has again published an Annual Calendar, which contains much religious and valuable information. He has published more than half a million of pages of religious tracts, Bible history, etc., in the Siamese language. Concerning the work of translating the Scriptures, Dr. Bradley says:

"As none of my brethren (of the other Missions) have felt prepared to undertake the translation of the Books of Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, and Isaiah, I have, by spending an hour or so daily, been translating them from the English, (with the help of the best Hebrew scholars I could find.) I am now on the 26th chapter of Isaiah, having completed the other books.

"I intend to publish a small edition of each at my own expense in the course of this year."

Of the little church connected with the Mission Dr. Bradley writes:

"We are being sorely tried with the conduct of some of our church members. One of them, who was at first the most interesting, has been suspended from communion for giving his wife, the mother of three children, a writing of divorcement. . . There is no doubt he was terribly tried with her gambling babits, and the troubles that were continually growing out of them. We still have hope that ere long he may be restored. Another young man, by his frequent falls, troubles himself and us very much; we are fearful that we shall be obliged to cut him off. The other native members show but a feeble Christian life. We feel very sad in view of their low attainments in piety and their similarity to the heathen around them, and it pains us exceedingly to reveal such discouragements, but faithfulness seems to demand that we should make known our leanness and the absence of the Spirit's quickening influences. The declensions and falling from Christian steadfastness among the native members of all the Mission churches here is fearful."

Dr. Bradley speaks of the death of one young Siamese, who had been a compositor in the printing office, who gave cheering evidence of being a Christian. He died in the belief that he should soon be with Jesus in heaven.

The Siamese people, and the history of missions among them, present a peculiar anomaly. For many years the Gospel has been faithfully preached by zealous and able missionaries; the people are many of them readers, and have been supplied with parts of the Bible and other religious truths in their own language, which they have read till some of them seem to have a historical knowledge of Jesus; their kings and governors have been educated in part by Christian missionaries; missionary women have been invited to teach in the king's palace, in one of which there is now a school of thirty pupils; and yet, although there has been here and there a witness that God has not forgotten to be gracious, but has given souls to the ministry of his servants, Boodhism reigns supreme in the palace, and controls the religious affections of the people; the hearts of the great mass of them seem no more moved by all they have heard of the true God and eternal life, than if no missionaries had ever set foot in their kingdom, Yet the missionaries, for the most part, are not discouraged; they believe the seed they have sown, which they have watered and are yet watering with their tears, will spring up and bring forth fruit unto eternal life. They yet say to their souls, in the language of inspiration: "Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him who is the health of my countenance and my God." They expect yet to praise Him for his wonderful works in Siam. Who will say their faith is not the gift of God?

KALEPOLEPO. Helper, Walnel.

Since our last Report, Rev. J. S. Green has finished the thirty-fifth year of missionary life, the last twenty of which he has been the pastor of Makawao. Seldom has it fallen to the lot of any man to labor so long in one mission field, and more seldom still to witness the changes that have passed under his notice.

Only a few years before he reached the islands, though the gods of Hawaii had begun to be rejected, the name of Jesus, so sweet to the believer, had not fallen upon the ear of one of the people; the iron hand of despotism lay heavy on all, crushing them beneath its weight. None of the common people had any idea of either civil or political rights as belonging to them; they had nothing they could call their own; and if their shadow but fell on their despotic rulers, life was the instant forfeit. Indolence and improvidence caused the land to lie waste; and polygamy, concubinage, the promiscuous intercourse of the sexes, and infanticide, laid the axe at the root of the social tree, and turned what should have been the quiet and bliss of the family relation into a very hell of discord and strife. Now, through the labors of the missionaries of the cross, in which Mr. Green has borne a constant part, personal civil rights are secured to the people, the ferocity of the once wild Haiwaiians has been tamed, their pollution cleansed, and the appellation Christian is justly claimed for the Hawaiian nation. In view of all this the missionary gratefully exclaims: "What hath God wrought!"

Thus far, however, it has been found impossible wholly to remove the blight that past pollutions brought upon the people of the Islands. Slowly they are wasting away; even in a year of remarkable health, the deaths exceed the births, and the decrease in the number of children in the schools is painful. This year there has been a falling off from the last of nearly one hundred, and the number now is but about one half of what has been sometimes reported.

Rev. J. Porter Green was ordained to the Gospel ministry at Bangor, Maine, July twenty-first. He and his sister, Miss Mary E. Green, expect to embark for their island home early in November. They hope to commence immediately a seminary for the instruction of Hawaiian females. A friend in Massachusetts has generously given $500 to purchase the needed furniture and apparatus. The same friend had previously given an equal sum to meet the expenses of the mission for the current year.

Mr. and Miss Green were both born at the Islands, and until about two years since had never visited the United States. He has spent the greater portion of his time in the Theological Seminary, Bangor, where he was ordained. They have both spent some time laboring among the Freedmen of the South. They now return to the work of their choice.

The following is from Rev. J. S. Green's annual statement concerning his mission. It covers the time from Feb. 7, 1862, to Feb. 7, 1863, when the twentieth year of his labors at Makawao closed:

"Mr. P. Niu is still a Government Superintendent of native Hawaiian schools in this district. Under his supervision our schools seem to have been conducted with a good degree of efficiency, though there is a constant but slow decrease of pupils. An Egg-lish school of thirty or forty Hawaiian children, of both series, has been taught by C. B. Andrews for a year or more; but it will soon be discontinued, I presume, the parents being convinced that their children can not acquire the English language while they board at home, and talk volumes of Hawaiian where they talk paragraphs in Euglish.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION.

"While the salvation of the soul, the securing of the immortal interests of our people, has been the primary object of my instruction, other means have been employed to benefit them as physical beings. All classes have been exhorted to habits of industry, to provide for themselves and families a full supply of wholesome food, to huild better houses, to teach their children, by precept and example, industry and cleanliness, and thus secure health and competence. I am happy to say that there has been a visible change in some respects. The business of wheat-raising has greatly increased the industry of the people of Makawao and Kuia, though in the present state of the market the ravages of the cut-worm have nearly eaten up the profits. There is an improvement in the method of building, and quite lately more clothing was purchased than formerly. Just now every thing of cloth is enormously high, and many are unable to buy. A good deal of wheat is being sown, but the market does not promise a very rich return for industry.

MEANS OF GRACE.

"The precious Gospel of Christ, the hope of a lost world, is our dependence for the salvation of our poor people. In this we may well rejoice, seeing it is so honorable to God, so safe for man. Blessed be God, the Gospel is adapted to such poor, ignorant, polluted creatures; we rejoice that it is so, we glory in it.

"This Gospel has been proclaimed to Hawaiians and to foreigners at Makawao dur-

"This Gospel has been proclaimed to Hawaiians and to foreigners at Makawao during another year. And now, at the close of it, I would commit the work of the station to the Lord Jesus Christ, beseeching him to make the exhibition of his truth 'mighthrough God, to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ.'

"From the MARQUEAR ISLANDS nothing has been heard of late. I can not therefore report any thing from our missionary Hapuka. I hope soon to hear, and will keep you informed. I trust you will continually remember our brother and sister, who are out off in a great measure from Christian sympathy.

"Allow me, in concluding my annual report of labors at this remote station, to congratulate you on the opening fields of missionary labor into which the providence of God is aviving you to enter. How suitable that our Association should be the first to enter that field. It is eminently proper that an Association which has always been outspoken on the subject of oppression, ready to plead with God and man in behalf of the enslaved, should continue to sympathize with them, and labor for their temporal and everlasting salvation.

"I bid you God speed in your labors among the emancipated. I bless God that my children have been permitted to labor for a little season for the 'contrabands' so called. I see only one reason why they should return here and labor for the Hawaiians, that is, their familiarity with the language of the Islands. This makes them worth much more here than a new man could be, while one unacquainted with Hawaiian would be worth just as much among the enslaved. But I trust that in so good a work there will be no want of laborers."

CANADA MISSION.

Missionary.—Rev. L. C. CHAMBERS.

The labors of Mr. Chambers at London and St. Thomas, Canada West, have met with the divine favor, and the churches appear to have prospered under his care. Nine members were added to the church at London, and seven at St. Thomas.

Mr. Chambers has been seven years in Canada, nearly five years of which have been in connection with the American Missionary Association. He speaks in grateful terms of the aid given him by it. Without that aid he could not have given himself wholly to the ministry.

Mr. Chambers is connected with the Colored Methodist Conference in Canada. Having been stationed at London, as long as they allow any of their ministers to stay at one place, he was at the last meeting of conference transferred to St. Catharine's. He finds there a large church and congregation. His commission from our Association terminated with his removal from London, about the first of July.

The hostility that has always existed in the minds of some Canadians against the colored people, has become exceedingly bitter since the proclamation of freedom by the President of the United States. An apprehension was felt that there would be a general irruption of the negroes into Canada; and as if to forestall this, the people in some parts of the province generally refused to give the colored people work, and renewed efforts were made to exclude them from the common schools, even where in past years they had been freely admitted. There is now, however, some reason to hope that the era of kind feeling, which seems to have opened towards the colored people in this country, may extend into Canada also.

Some aid contributed by a friend in England has been given to the school in Canada, taught by Mrs. Carey.

OJIBUE AND OTTAWA MISSION.

GRAND TRAVERSE BAY, MICHIGAN.

Missionaries.—Rev. George N. Smith, Mrs. Smith.

Mr. Smith continues his labors at the three points, Northport, Onnumuneseville, and the Head of the Harbor. Two Indian members have been added to the church, which last year was reported as numbering fifty-two members. Some improvement in the condition of the people is indicated: there has been much less drinking, better order has prevailed, and there is apparently more attention and seriousness. In the social meetings the Indians have shown increased freedom in taking an active part, and their prayers and remarks are reported as both interesting and edifying.

The Indian payment of last fall, managed by Hon. D. C. Leach, Agent, was so conducted as to reflect great credit on the Government, and give much satisfaction to the Indians. Mr. Smith says: "This is (generally) a time of great demoralization: if the agent brings a bad influence, or his influence be not positively good, then drunkenness and licentiousness follow to an alarming extent, so as to discourage, and sometimes wholly dishearten the missionary: but if the influence be right, and seems to flow from the central authority, (the President,) the missionary feels that he has a strong external sanction to his efforts—a help that he can turn to good account."

The improvement of the Indians has also been shown in their political action. Formerly, the mass of the Indians have been controlled by a class of disloyal men, given to drink, who have kept grog-shops free to both whites and Indians; thus paralyzing the prohibitory law, and giving a down-hill tendency to every thing. At the last general election, there seemed to be a revolution in this matter. The Indians went to the polls and voted, as became men and Christians. Mr. Smith says: "I know of but one exception among our members. We carried a good majority, (over thirty,) and it is equal to such a majority hereafter for temperance, good order and religion, against intemperance, liquor-selling, immorality, and every species of wrong."

Among the whites, there has been another panic relative to the Indians, and another council held. Some people seem determined to create an indignation against the Indians, by arousing the fears of the whites, but the missionary feels certain that those among whom he labors are innocent. The State seems also to regard them as loyal and trustworthy, and has enlisted from among them sharpshooters to operate after the plan of the Berdan regiment. Some of the recruiting officers have done much hurt by dispensing liquor freely, and at one time Mr. Smith thought the flood-gates of intemperance were in this way again to be opened. At a later date he wrote that his fears were not realized, only one church member was known to have fallen. "I feel sure," Mr. Smith says, "that the people are becoming stronger to resist temptation."

A part of Mr. Smith's labors are among the white population. Their number has diminished very much, by the absence of those who have gone as volunteers into the army.

have gone as volunteers into the army.

The developments of the past year serve but to increase the convictions long since formed, that no trouble need be feared from any of our North-western Indians, if the government agents sent among them shall be just and benevolent men, who will administer existing laws, and enforce existing treaty stipulations, for the suppression of intemperance, and to insure impartial justice to the Indians. True, the evidence is very strong that the dreadful Indian outrages in Minnesota were stirred up by Southern rebels; but the evidence is even stronger, that the influence of these men would have failed if the Indians had not been prepared to welcome it, by a just sense of wrong and outrage, for which they had vainly sought redress. The Christianity of the country owes it to these Indians, as well as to the cause of Christ, that an influence should be brought to bear on the Government to repress the spirit of vengeance now breathed out against these Indians, and to secure for them agents ready to treat them with justice and humanity.

THERE have been employed during the year, independent of the missionaries and teachers to the Freedmen, twenty-one missionaries and two colporteurs, most of whom have been on the borders near the Slave States, from Southern Pennsylvania to Kansas, and in Slave States. They have had under their care thirty churches. Several of them have itinerated. From their reports, the number of hopeful conversions, as nearly as can be ascertained, was 167: of admissions to the churches, on profession of faith, 75; by letter, 27; the whole number of church members was 732; the amount of contributions to benevolent objects, not local, was $494.98; the number of Sabbathschool scholars was 1165; six revivals have been reported; several of our missionaries on the borders, near the slave States, have been evangelists or missionaries at large, having extensive districts through which they labored.

The Rev. James McFarland, in Southern Pennsylvania, and in adjoining districts in Virginia and Ohio, has been engaged in preaching in many places, often among the colored people, and in disposing of large quantities of religious and anti-slavery books and tracts, with evidence on every hand of an awakened conviction of the sin of slavery, and of the claims of the slaves and the Freedmen.

Rev. J. W. West has labored in the Free Presbyterian Church at Georgetown, Brown County, Ohio, near Kentucky, with evidence of good accomplished in various directions, notwithstanding the distracting events of war and threatened depredations of the enemy.

Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, of the Kentucky Mission, has labored the larger part of the year with the Presbyterian Church at Decatur. Brown County, Ohio, and the vicinity, near Kentucky. He has had much encouragement, and has aided in establishing an academy, that promises to exert an important influence on the slave country near, and in behalf of freedom. colards, and for his personal indoes for

During the last year, the Rev. John G. Fee has resided at New-Richmond, Ohio, and preached mostly to two churches in that region, with success in the hopeful conversion of souls to Christ.

He has also preached and lectured there and at various places in Ohio and Indiana against slavery, in favor of the President's Proclamation, advocating immediate and universal freedom, developing the fundamental principles of Government, and showing how the sin of slavery has involved us in the horrors of the rebellion. For two months he has successfully presented the claims of our Association in behalf of the Freedmen.

Rev. J. G. Brice has prosecuted his agency in Southern Ohio and parts of Indiana with success, and has labored for the salvation of souls. Some conversions have resulted. He laments the deglension of religion, the prevalence of infidelity, profanity, Sabbath desecration, intemperance, and licentiousness, but says: "Educational interests are preserved, and a wonderful change, most cheering and hopeful in its influence, has taken place, in opposition to slavery and in favor of the colored man."

Rev. J. H. Jones, at Decatur, Indiana, has three churches. A church edifice has been completed at West-Chester. His field is large and the work arduous. He has given two sons to the army. The pre-slavery spirit is still active, but the enemies of Government and humanity are succumbing.

Miss E. E. Johnson's school for colored children at Evansville, Ind., is in a promising state; the pupils are advancing in knowledge, the people are growing more kind and interested in their education and general improvement, and the anti-slavery sentiment has been increasing. The raids of the enemy near the border have served to increase the opposition to slavery.

Rev. Levin Wilson, in Posey County, has continued his labors in that and adjoining counties, and in Illinois, with some success in the conversion of souls. Additions have been made to the Hopewell Church at New-Harmony. The region has been noted for hostility to abolition and hatred to the colored man. Much opposition to the Government exists, but it is more subdued, and there is a gain in the liberty sentiment and feeling of the people.

Rev. James S. Davis has labored in the Congregational church at Hoylston and Richview, Ill. The church at Hoylston was favored with a revival last winter, and his labors in the region have been blessed.

James M. West, at Ashley, is acting as a colporteur in several counties. He has had less opposition than formerly, and a much greater desire is manifested for Christian reformatory books and tracts, which he circulates, and for his personal labors for the salvation of souls, and in the cause of temperance, justice, and freedom.

Rev. William Holmes, at South-Pass, is itinerating in several counties. The reports which he gives of his labors are of much interest, coming as he does in contact with Knights of the Golden Circle and other enemies of the Government, and of colored people and their friends. He gives many incidents showing the animus of slavery, which is virulent, even where the system itself is not in operation. A change, however, in favor of truth and righteousness is being effected, and Christians are rejoicing in the hope of better days.

Rev. W. H. Westervelt has preached half of the time for the Crawfordville Congregational church, Washington county, Iowa, and the remaining half itinerated in the southern counties, laboring in protracted meetings. At three points revivals were enjoyed, and fifty-two persons were hopefully converted. (Of these three were soldiers.) Concerning slavery, he remarks: "The last year has bruised the serpent's head. Not only has the war been waged against rebellion, but it has corrected public sentiment. I have seen soldiers go out haters of the colored race, and in a few months write back that they were practical abolitionists."

Rev. John Cross has charge of the First Church of Christ at Amity, Page county, South-Western Iowa, and has extended his labors into other counties, in some instances into Missouri, with an increasing interest on the part of the people to hear the Gospel. He preaches and lectures on the subject of slavery. The treasonable Knights of the Golden Circle in his vicinity, and the guerrillas, by their violence and depredations, have occasioned a reaction in favor of the cause of right-coursess and freedom. A revival of religion was enjoyed last spring, and several young persons, mostly of the Sabbath-school, were hopefully converted.

Rev. J. W. Fox, about the first of February, aided Rev. J. W. Sturtevant, the paster of the Congregational church at Hannibal, Mo., in a special religious effort among his people. The Lord graciously blessed the labor of his servants, and fifty persons were hopefully converted. His labors among the Freedmen in different parts of Kansas, visiting and preaching to them, addressing and assisting schools among them, have been of important service. He has taken great interest in the freedmen's churches at Lawrence, Atchison, and Topeka. He found colored teachers at Topeka and Lawrence, and a purpose among the people and the officers at all the places named to give them early and ample advantages for education, and to favor their churches. There is a conviction that this people are to be attached to our soil, and they are highly valued as a laboring people, are much needed in the State, and should be educated.

One of the churches at Lawrence was burned in the late massacre and conflagration by the Quantrel banditti. Aid is being sought to help them on in their enterprise. He remarks: "The sacking of Lawrence was terrible. The Freedmen suffered much. I was in town the day before, and took from one of the stores that was burned the Bibles and Testaments you sent for the benefit of the Freedmen. I saw and conversed with some who were murdered next day." A large number of elementary books were many months since sent to them by us, which have been used in the schools. We have also sent Bibles, Testaments, slates, etc., for the people. It is a source of great gratification that Kausas is taking a leading part in the education of the colored people.

At our last Annual Meeting, two of our missionaries, forced out of Kentucky, Rev. J. G. Fee and Rev. George Candee, were present. Rev. J. A. R. Rogers had been shut up in the mountain counties by the presence and raids of the rebel army, but was soon after enabled to reach his family in Ohio, since which he has been at Decatur, except while on a visit to Illinois and to the Freedmen at St. Louis.

Rev. George Candee for the first half of the year was engaged in the work of an evangelist, with much success, when he was called by us to St. Louis, as missionary among the Freedmen.

Mr. Fee, during the months of July and September, visited the Mission churches in Madison and Lewis counties. Many of the brethren were absent in the army, but those who were at home rejoiced to see Mr. Fee again, and hear the Gospel from his mouth.

He found the people in Lewis county loyal, and alive to putting down the rebellion. Here, for years past, our missionaries and colporters had sowed the good seed of the kingdom, and this is now the most loyal county in the State.

Rev. Mr. Mobley has remained in the State, and labored in Laurel, Clay, Madison, and other counties. Although his residence was near the lines of rebel incursions, he has been preserved, and the churches at South-Fork, Clover Bottom, and Berea have been kept from harm. He preaches often at Berea, and there as well as at other points there is an earnest desire for the word of life. The congregations are generally increasing, as is also the anti-slavery sentiment of the State. Some conversions have taken place, and the congregations are attentive and solemn.

FREEDMEN.

In introducing the report of their labors in behalf of the Freedmen, the Executive Committee desire to express their gratitude, with devout thanksgiving to Almighty God, for the proclamation of the President of the United States, January 1st, 1863, declaring the freedom of all the slaves in rebel States; and to record their fervent prayer, not only that the provisions of this proclamation may be carried into full effect, but also that the general Government and the governments of all the States may speedily obey the voice of God's providence, "to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound," "throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof."

FORTRESS MONROE, HAMPTON AND VICINITY.

Since the last Annual Report the work in this section has gone forward with encouragement. Rev. Mr. Lockwood continued his labors until October, 1862, and afterward acted for a time as an agent in Pennsylvania and New-Jersey. After he left Fortress Monroe, Mr. Palmer Litts preached to the church at Hampton and at the Fortress, until the arrival of Rev. Mr. Stone in July, who now preaches to them; Mr. Litts's term of service having expired, he has returned to Oberlin. During the winter a revival of great interest took place, under his labors, at Hampton and Fortress Monroe, and twenty were hopefully converted. Numbers have been united in marriage, and a rising sense of the sacredness of this holy estate is observable among them. The people are remarkably free from the use of intoxicating drinks, and are less addicted to profaneness and Sabbath-breaking, than the people of many districts in the free States; although many of them, following the habits of their former masters, are disposed to regard themselves at liberty, after going to church, to give the rest of the day to visiting. The Sabbath-schools have a happy effect in promoting a more suitable observance of the Sabbath.

The Sabbath-school at the Fortress numbers eighty-five, and at Hampton four hundred and fifty; of whom one hundred and fifty are adults.

The week-day school at Hampton has been conducted by Mr. Charles P. Day and Miss Lucy Martindale, in the building formerly known as the old Court-House. One was also taught in the Tyler House by Miss E. Yeates. The whole number of scholars is four hundred, of whom one hundred are adults, besides two hundred and forty-five in the night-schools, two hundred of whom are adults. Mr. Day estimates the whole number of men, women, and children taught to read since he took charge of the schools in May, 1862, at one thousand five hundred. Many of the night-scholars are quite aged, but are determined to learn to read their Bible before they die. The children have all been supplied with Testaments, and the families have nearly all been visited and presented with Bibles. The Scriptures, so far as practicable, are read by the whole school.

Mrs. J. N. Coan has performed much valuable missionary labor at the Tyler House and Hampton, visiting among the sick, distributing clothing to the needy, and having charge of the mission family. She is now with Mr. Coan at Norfolk; and Mrs. (Rev.) J. P. Stone has taken her place at the Tyler House and Hampton, where she and her husband are zealously laboring for the freedmen.

The school at the Fort has one hundred and fifty scholars and seventy night-scholars. There are six monitors from among the colored people in the schools. A school is taught by Miss Benton across the bay at Newtown, and a private school near the Tyler House by Mr. Simpson, a colored man. The industry of the people is manifest, and in nothing more than the fact that they have erected in the district, including Hampton, the Tyler House, and Newtown, nearly five hundred tenements, small, it is true, yet comparatively comfortable to the fact that they have erected in the district, including Hampton, the Tyler House, and Newtown, nearly five hundred tenements, small, it is true, yet comparatively comfortable.

Large numbers work for the Government, and many are in the army. Preparations are now making by the Government to remove the people, under the direction of Captain C. B. Wilder, from the vicinity of the Tyler House to north of Hampton, where a village is to be built, every house of which shall have a half acre of land adjoining, and the farms in the vicinity of which are to be extensively worked by the people. Opportunities will also be given them to purchase confiscated lands and lands sold for taxes.

The prospects of the people never were better than now, and considering all the arrangements made for their improvement and guidance, and the means of religious and intellectual training, satisfactory results under God, such as will cheer the hearts of the friends of the freedmen, may be confidently hoped for.

In the fall of 1862 the United States soldiers were withdrawn from this post, and the colored people removed to Crancy Island, and the teacher, Mr. John Oliver, soon after made efforts for the establishment of schools at Portsmouth and Norfolk. Mr. W. O. King, from Oberlin, has ever since labored at Crancy Island in teaching a weekday and Sabbath school, and in religious services on the Sabbath and at other times. Good progress has been made in his school, and there have been some hopeful conversions among the freedmen. The larger number of the people have been scattered, and although there has been a large increase from Suffolk and their Union village, they are now mostly employed by Government, or in the army; as few, except women and children, were left, they are being removed to the new settlement near Hampton.

After the removal of the colored people from Craney Island, Mr. Oliver labored for a time at Portsmouth, and established there a school of about two hundred children, in whose instruction he was aided by two colored young women of the place.

Rey. G. Greely was commissioned, in February last, as a missionary for the Freedmen, and immediately commenced his labors by taking charge of a colored Methodist church, which had requested us to send them a minister. He also took the school commenced by Mr. Oliver. He was joined about the twentieth of February by Miss Harriet Taylor. She found the school remarkably orderly and studious, considering the very brief time they had been under instruction.

In March Mr. H. S. Beals took charge of the school, relieving Mr. Greely, that he might devote more time to pastoral duties. Miss Drummond also joined the mission at that time, and the school was divided into three distinct departments, all conducted, however, in the colored Methodist church. The church building is large, built of brick, and the church itself numbers about four hundred members. The Sabbath school numbers about five hundred, of whom fifty are grown people.

The day-school numbers about three hundred, of whom twenty are adults; a night-school of sixty is also held, of whom forty are adults. About one thousand have received some instruction in letters, of whom six hundred have learned to read, some of them slowly, but four hundred with considerable ease; one hundred of them are in a Bible class in the Sabbath-school.

A revival has occurred under the labors of Mr. Greely, and fifty hopeful converts have united with the Church. The conversions were generally very clear.

Several officers and men of the One Hundred and Fortieth New-York volunteers, have given efficient aid in the Sabbath-school. A "Human Aid Society" has been formed among the colored people of Portsmouth, for the support of the poor and suffering. They meet weekly—sometimes three hundred being present. The average weekly collection of the Society is about twenty dollars. At times there has been great distress and suffering for want of clothing among the new-comers; but large amounts have been supplied them.

Some assistance was given to a school taught by a soldier and by colored persons, at the Union village. This village contained one thousand five hundred freedmen, one hundred and seventy small tenements, and a school-house, all built by themselves. A missionary and his wife were appointed for them; but on the change of our military lines the whole settlement was broken up, and the people were removed to Craney Island, Portsmouth, Suffolk, and other places. This breaking up occasioned the freedmen great loss and suffering.

In May last we commenced a mission and school at Yorktown. The school was held in the colored Baptist church. Rev. John B. Lowrey and his brother, Rev. Robert Lowrey, have preached there, and taught the school of three hundred and fifty scholars. In August, however, they were both taken ill, and returned North. Arrangements are making to have the school carried forward. The population of freedmen is large. They have been subject to much suffering and sickness; but it is hoped that their comfort will be cared for by the military authorities, and their improvement not hindered but advanced. the self fund smill that the moissin self to the self fund of the self to the self fund of the self to the

In April, 1863, Rev. Geo. N. Green was sent as a missionary, with instructions to establish schools in the two colored churches which had been offered for the purpose to Mr. Oliver. Mr. Green called on Gen. Viele, who confirmed to him the license given Mr. Oliver to open the schools. At the first session of the day-school about three hundred and fifty scholars came in, and three hundred others in the evening. On the third day there were five hundred and fifty at the day-school; five hundred others at the evening. The school was now divided, and a part of it transferred to the Methodist Church. Mr. Tyler and Miss Pitts took one school; Mr. Coan and Miss Chase from Boston the other.

Fifteen colored assistants were engaged, and the energies of all the teachers were taxed to the utmost. The anxiety of the people for instruction in letters is very remarkable. The number in the day-schools has been as high as twelve hundred, of whom only twenty-five were adults; but in the night-schools, after the fatigues of their daily labor, four hundred grown people have been seen, making up half of the eight hundred in attendance. In the three Sabbath-schools there were fifteen hundred, of whom five hundred were adults. Mr. Coan supposes that three thousand different persons have received some instruction since the schools were established.

The schools have been a decided success. They and the whole Mission there owe much to the labors of Prof. Woodbury and wife in arranging and systematizing the work of the Mission, and getting every thing in practical working order. Many of the scholars have shown rare capacity for learning; many who when they entered did not know the alphabet, now render assistance in teaching. The monitors have separate instruction, and are kept in advance of the scholars. A large number of those who have been tried as monitors have succeeded well.

Mr. Green reports that his first Sabbath congregation can hardly have numbered more than seventy-five hearers. The second Sabbath there were five hundred in the afternoon, and the third Sabbath one thousand, and the congregation has continued large. There has been no special revival of religion, but the great increase in the congregation bears witness to an increase of interest. Eighteen cases of hopeful conversion are reported.* The Methodist church has the largest congregations. Mr. Green says: "Their general improvement in religious matters and in self-government has been very rapid, and they seem fast developing the ability to regulate all their affairs." He thinks when they become even partially educated they will exhibit an ability that would do credit to white men of much higher attainments. Six hundred colored soldiers have gone from Norfolk; three hundred have gone as army laborers, and six hundred are in Government employ as stevedores, etc.

The freed people are reported as remarkably free from the vice of drunkenness. Mr. Coan says he has not yet seen an intoxicated colored person of the weener off pricket of made debla angular visiting

Mr. J. P. Jackson, Mr. H. C. Sanford, and Miss R. W. Smith have been located on confiscated estates. The first named has had the superintendence of a farm at Rolleston, in Princess Anne County, lately owned and occupied by Gov. Wise. The farm superintended by Mr. Sanford was near Suffolk, and much exposed to the inroads of the rebels. The freedmen were finally compelled to abandon it, leaving a large part of their crops. The schools on these farms have been small, and made up from the families of the laborers; but either in day or night schools, or on the Sabbath, instruction in letters and religion had been provided for all. Miss Smith reports a few instances of hopeful conversion. Concerning the work, as a whole, she says that it presents every encouragement to those who enter upon it for the glory of God and the good of the people. It is believed that all who engage in it with these motives will testify that the grounds of hope for success increase with their experience, though there are times when opposing causes seem almost insurmountable.

As to industry, all reports from this region speak well of the industry of the people, when they can obtain employment with reasonable hope of compensation. One of the superintendents says that the larger portion of those in his employ are a pattern worthy to be followed by all. "I never," he says, "saw a company of the same number, were their complexion ever so white, that would labor more faithfully, or diligently, or cheerfully."

In June last, our Mission established an orphan asylum under the care of Misses R. G. C. Patten and Mary J. Doxey, aided for a time by Mr. J. F. An appeal from the Mission at Norfolk was published in our October paper. One of their number, Rev. W. S. Some of our missionaries at Norfolk have, at the request of the military officers, aided them in taking the census of the colored people in that military department, recently ordered by Government. They report the number at twenty-seven thousand-nineteen thousand of them are in the immediate vicinity of Norfolk, of whom fourteen thousand were but recently slaves.

A large number of confiscated farms have been taken possession of by the Government, and placed under cultivation by the freedmen. The farms near Fortress Monroe, Hampton, and the vicinity, are under the general superintendence of Capt. C. B. Wilder; those near Norfolk and Portsmouth under the superintendence of Dr. O. Brown.

Considering the embarrassments they have had to overcome, and the very few facilities furnished them, the efforts of these gentlemen have been successful. The experiment of using the freedmen for their own advantage and that of the Government, furnishes strong grounds for confidence as to the future. It is the purpose of the Government to make the plan of operations general, and to furnish the seed, tools, etc., necessary to its complete success. The Government has already acknowledged the advantage arising from employing the freedmen, not only in working upon fortifications, or other military labor, but also in cultivating the land. At every point where their labor has been used, it has effected a pecuniary saving. omes rult love pu-

NORTH-CAROLINA.

Three teachers have been sent to Newbern, North-Carolina, to act under the general direction of Chaplain James, "Superintendent of Blacks." One of them, Miss E. James, will have a general superintendency of the schools on Roanoke Island. The school in which the other two, Miss Burnap and Miss Hosmer, are engaged, has one hundred and fifty scholars, eighteen of them adults. There are also two Sunday-schools in which they take part, containing six hundred and twenty-five scholars. As soon as a person is able to read he is presented with a Testament. A few weeks ago fifty were taken into one of their churches. How many of them were really converted remains to be seen.

"Those coming to this region," it is said, "have nothing, and are in need of all things. They sought freedom at any price, and obtained it at the cost of their all. They are destitute of clothing of all kinds." Their teachers say they are willing to be taught, and there is great reason for encouragement. Those who labor with and for them feel that it is "a most blessed work." I promoned and men's

There are nine thousand freedmen residing at Newbern, and many thousands more at other points in the department of North-Carolina. Two regiments of colored soldiers are full, and a third forming. Chaplain James, under appointment of Government as superintendent of the blacks in N. C., has begun a colony on Roanoke Island under favorable circumstances. The following extract from a letter written by him to the Congregationalist shows with what encouragement:

"There are from eleven to twelve hundred negroes now on the Island. They have come here from Plymouth, Elizabeth City, Newbern, and from the country around these come here from Plymouth Elizabeth City, Newbern, and from the country around these and other points. For the present they are living in close quarters, too much huddled together in barracks, formerly occupied by soldiers. But a large tract of, well-wooded land has been laid off in streets running at right angles, and upon these streets lots of nearly an acre (forty thousand feet) have been assigned to the various families desiring them. We have already staked out the outlines of an African village of grand proportions. It would gratify their friends at the North could they see the energy and zeal with which the freedmen enter upon the work of clearing up their little acre of land, by cutting the timber upon it, and preparing it for their rude log-house. They are so animated by the prospect of a homestead of their own, and the little comforts of freehold that they alway avery space moment by night as well as by dwall are as a freehold, that they labor every spare moment by night as well as by day, and are as happy as larks in their toil. Let the unbeliever declare that the negro does not desire happy as larks in their toil. Let the unpeliever declare that the negro noes not usure his freedom, and has no wish to secure the privilege of owning personal property and real estate. The axes which I sent on a month ago, and which are now ringing merrily in the green woods of Roanoke, give the lie direct to all their reasonings, and falsify all their assertions. So do the singing voices of these happy men and women, who now really believe that they have powerful friends, and ask nothing more than a decent chance to make themselves wholly independent of government aid, and be thrifty, wealthy citizens.

"We are beginning in the very wilderness to lay the foundations of new empire, but the results when carried out to their proper results no mortal mind can foresee. We sow in faith, and expect to reap in joy."

Many of the people here, beingth from and since, Mr. Blate claim BOUTH-CAROLINA.

At the time of the last annual meeting, we had two missionary teachers at Port Royal. Ten missionaries and teachers have since been sent out. They have been stationed at Beaufort, and on neighboring plantations, at Hilton Head, at St. Helena, and Ladies Island.

E. S. Williams was sent with special reference to supplying the freedmen with the Scriptures, in connection with other missionary labors. But he and his wife were stationed by Gen. Saxton at St. Helena, where he preached, distributed the Bible, and assisted Mrs. Williams in conducting a school of one hundred and fifty scholars. A lady sent from Boston, aided in the school. A worthy colored brother, called Uncle Cyrus, since taken to the presence of his Lord, also gave help, for which he had compensation from us. Mr. Williams cays: "The people hailed with great joy the opportunity of getting the Bible; every man, woman, and child seemed eager for one, and determined to learn to read."

Subsequently he stated that he gave a Bible to every couple on their being legally joined in marriage, writing their names in it, and adding: "From the American Bible Society, New-York, per American Missionary Association."

Rev. Mr. Root and wife have been stationed near Beaufort. Mrs. Root, who is an experienced teacher, has a day-school of thirty-seven scholars. There is a Sabbath-school of twenty-seven. She says that the only difference which she finds between her present scholars and white children is, that the former learn faster, being more anxious to learn. The hope of reading the Bible is the greatest inducement to effort. Miss Clary teaches in the same school. Mr. Root has had the pleasure of welcoming some new converts into the church.

Rev. W. T. Richardson reports that many of the people have been removed by the Government from Beanfort out to the plantations. About fifteen hundred remain. The schools have comprised two hundred and eighty scholars; the Sabbath schools, one hundred and eighty. All have been suspended through the hot weather. Many scholars, however, have taken their books with them, and studied from day to day.

The religious views and practice of the people are becoming more settled and scriptural. Mr. Richardson has not yet formed a church, but has it in mind to do so.

He does not know what to say as to improvement in morals among those less immediately interested in religion. Their notions are improving, and he hopes for a corresponding change in practice. He bears honorable testimony to their general sobriety.

Many of the people have bought farms, and some, Mr. Richardson says, will probably raise enough to pay for them in one season. Many of them exhibit much shrewdness in getting and keeping property.

Mr. Richardson deplores a disposition among many officers to treat the colored people with the old arrogant prejudice, but bears witness, on the other hand, to a truly Christian desire to help and elevate them on the part of many others.

The "Praise House," at Beaufort, has been the central point of religious worship. It has been used for preaching and prayer-meetings on the Sabbath, for prayer-meetings through the week, and for week-day school. In all these meetings Mr. McClue has been particularly useful from his ability to teach and to lead in singing, for which all, both children and grown people, have special aptitude. In his last letter, Mr. Richardson says: "Tell Brother Tappan that the bell he sent down here* for the 'Praise House,' is the only one in Beaufort that rings for religious services. Both the large churches are now used for hospitals.'

Rev. Mr. Knight, who was sent out to superintend the general distribution of the Bible, and for other missionary labor, after fairly entering on his labors, became an officer in a colored regiment, thinking he could perform effective missionary labor there.

Miss Kellogg and Miss Carter were first stationed together at Lawton Place and Hilton Head, where they had a school, varying in number from eighty to one hundred, which made rapid progress. Their reports are among the most interesting, and show progress in every department.

We have passes from Gen. Saxton for six missionaries and teachers, which number we hope to supply soon.

The probability of greatly enlarging missionary operations in South-Carolina, will depend much upon the success of our army and navy there. This is the principal seat of the operations of the National Freedmen's Relief Association of this city, which, by the employment of superintendents of labor and teachers, conferred incalculable benefits upon multitudes of the freedmen.

ST. LOUIS.

During the winter we were made acquainted with the condition of the freedmen at St. Louis, and as preparatory to the establishment of a mission there, secured the kind aid of Rev. W. W. Patton, who had given us valuable information about the freedmen on the river below. We went to St. Louis, and met the ministers of various denominations, presenting our design of establishing a mission and schools there. The design was heartily approved by most of them, as also by the "Ladies' Contraband Relief Commission." Rev. George Candee, one of our Kentucky missionaries, then laboring as an evangelist in Wisconsin, was requested to proceed to St. Louis, as a missionary to the freedmen. Toward the end of March, Mr. John L. Richardson, of Pennsylvania, was appointed a missionary teacher. Miss Lydia Hess was appointed about the same time. Miss Barbour was engaged as a teacher for a short time.

Mr. Candee found large numbers of freedmen at and near the old United States Hotel, which was used by the Government for the people. They were quite destitute, but were aided by the Ladies' Association of St. Louis. By Gen. Curtis's direction, they were brought from down the river by Superintendent Sawyer, in companies of several hundred each, and the early part of Mr. Candee's time was occupied in caring for them, and accompanying them into Iowa, where many found homes among the farming population. He also preached, and performed much missionary service at the old hotel. The school was opened by Mr. Richardson and Miss Hess, but the constant changes in the population rendered the work of instruction more difficult and less thorough. Great good has been done, nevertheless,

Early in the summer a small school was opened at Brooklyn, across the river from St. Louis, under the charge of Mrs. M. L. Woodworth. As it increased in importance, her husband, Dr. Woodworth, engaged also in teaching it. It continued prosperously until broken up for a time by a mob. It has since been renewed under the care of Miss

The hotel at St. Louis, where the school was held, not affording accommodations sufficient for the number of scholars, a large and convenient hall was furnished, but the night before it was to be occupied, it was burned by incendiaries.

The colored population of St. Louis is large and very respectable, having several churches and ministers of different denominations, and some schools. The number of the freedmen remaining there is not known. They are scattered very much among the colored residents of the city.

St. Louis, as the chief city of a slave State, now coming into the condition of a free State, and as a city closely connected with the South-west, is to be regarded as a point of great importance for our operations on behalf of the freedmen.

He has, however, since accepted a chaplaincy in the army and relinquished this particular work. Teachers connected with the Society of Friends have taught a good school there.

Rev. Mr. Wright commenced his labors at Columbus, Kentucky, December first, 1862, among more than two thousand freed people, visiting Cairo occasionally. At that time many of them had worked for Government from one to seven months, and had received no pay. Light rations of beef and pork only had been given them, except that a few of them had received a few cast-off garments. They were likewise subject to much abuse, and not a few of them were given up to rebel masters-many of them were much discouraged. The great body of the people were soon after removed down the river, and Mr. Wright went to Memphis. Rev. Jno. Eaton, Jr., General Superintendent for the Department of Tennessee, reported at that time a little more than seventeen thousand under his general oversight. The number has since greatly increased. At one time over nine hundred came in in one day. Mr. Wright's direct missionary labors have been most arduous-visiting daily from cabin to cabin; administering to the wants of the sick and needy; imparting religious instruction, and doing all in his power toward lifting up a degraded race. Special attention has been given to furnishing every family containing a member able to read with a Testament or Bible an anod; sloodes out to a sixt

Here, as everywhere else, there has been a strong desire to learn to read, and an apparent fondness for religious instruction.

The schools have been under the immediate instruction of Miss Humphrey, Rev. S. F. Porter and wife, Miss Mitchell, and Miss Childs. Owing to the ill-health of some of the number, full statistics have not been obtained. Miss Humphrey has been the longest engaged, and has taught at Camp Fiske and Shiloh. More than twelve hundred are reported as having been connected with the schools, more than three hundred of whom were adults.

Rev. Mr. Porter and wife labored chiefly on President Island. He was occupied in preaching, in visiting from hut to hut, and in occasional preaching. She was engaged mainly in the school, but also visited from house to house, instructing the women in sewing and domestic duties. Her school numbered two hundred and fifty; the Sabbath-school three hundred, of whom fifty were adults. Mrs. Porter says that the children are anxious to learn, and the grown people eager to learn to read. This disposition is almost universal.

During the winter of 1862 there was an almost continuous revival at Camp Shiloh. Hopeful conversions, Mr. Wright says, occurred frequently, but no report of the numbers has been made. A large farm on the Tennessee shore has been tilled by the freedmen; and President Island, twelve miles long, and mostly under cultivation, has been assigned to the "Contraband Department." The same favorable testimony that has been given elsewhere as to the industry of the blacks. where paid, is given here also, and was a first sold for soldier

Very special instruction has been given by all the missionaries in this department upon the importance and sacredness of marriage, and these efforts have had the happiest results. One day in August one hundred and fifteen couples were married at the post of Memphis, and on the following Sabbath thirty-three more. A correct sentiment now prevails.

The several chaplains appointed by General Grant superintendents in his department, have shown themselves devoted to the interests of the freedmen, and have done all in their power to help forward the work of the missionaries and teachers. All who are connected with the work are very hopeful regarding it.

At and near Corinth, Mississippi, there have been eight mission aries and teachers. Here, as elsewhere on the Mississippi, some have been obliged from illness to leave their work. Only four of them have sent us statistical reports. Rev. Mr. Pierce, who with his wife were our first missionaries there, has taken a chaplaincy in a colored regiment.

In three of the schools there are five hundred scholars, studying spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography. They are improving rapidly, and will compare favorably with any class of learners. Every scholar who learns to read is presented with a Testament or Bible. "Not less than a thousand persons have learned to read since last spring." Nearly every man, woman, and child has a book, and many a soldier has violated the slave-laws of Mississippi by teaching them.

The military authority is doing all it can to give the people comfortable houses, and has granted almost every favor asked for the benefit of our work. For sanitary purposes the boys between nine and four-teen are formed into companies, officered by boys, which are required to do a certain amount of "policing" about the school-houses every day.

Rev. Mr. Olds says there was no religious organization among the people when he went there. About the first of June a church was formed, a union of nearly all religious denominations. A very harmonious feeling exists among the people. At times there has been deep religious feeling. On the first of July twenty united with the church, and there have been instances of conversion more or less frequently ever since. Mr. Olds mentions four colored ministers who have been slaves all their lives until within the last ten months—men, he says, not only of rich religious experience, but of real ability. He meets them every Monday morning to expound unto them the way of God more perfectly, and to instruct them in all matters concerning ministerial labor, such as the true aim of preaching, the planning of sermons, conducting social meetings, and the like. They show themselves much interested in these meetings.

Mr. Olds, who, besides many years experience as a pastor in this country, has labored as a missionary in Jamaica, says:

Mrs. Olds accepted an invitation to become matron of the Hospital, and for two months found there the principal sphere of her labors.

Since receiving the above we have been pained by the intelligence of Mrs. Olds' death. No particulars have reached us, except that she died after a brief illness. She was a devoted friend of the colored people, and has labored much for their spiritual and temporal welfare, first for many years in our Jamaica Mission, and lately among the freedmen at Corinth.

In the whole Field,

More than seven thousand scholars have been connected with the day and night schools, and nearly five thousand with the Sabbath-schools. The whole number of missionaries and teachers that have been employed this year has been eighty-three, and nineteen monitors or assistants. A few have retired, and some have commenced but recently. Others are under appointment, to enter upon the work soon.

Our personal observation and the accumulated testimony from missionaries and teachers, and other reliable sources, with remarkable uniformity establish the following facts:

- 1. That the freedmen are truly loyal, seeking the good of the Government, and praying, even amidst injury and obloquy, for the prosperity of the Union cause, and ready, under any suitable inducements, to enlist in its behalf.
- 2. That they are industrious; not that there are none among them idle and willing to shirk labor, (this would be to prove them not of our race,) but that for even moderate wages, promptly paid or made sure to them, they work well for Government or others; and it has already been acknowledged that their services have been a source of profit to the Government.
- 3. That they are remarkably free from the vices of intemperance and profanity, not given to quarreling, cheerful, grateful, uncomplaining, orderly, easily led, and almost universally eager to learn to read, and ready to listen confidingly to religious instruction from their Northern friends.

The vices that are most common among them, and they are great ones, are such as appertained to their former state. That they should be deceitful, lying, when a lie seems expedient to deceive a superior or shield themselves from blame, is a natural outgrowth of the despotic system under which they have come up. Men who, without any semblance of right, have been deprived of all their earnings, of every thing they should have called their own, and that, too, by their teachers in religion; can hardly be expected always to regard the property rights of others. But upon woman, worst of all, has the demon of slavery laid its polluting hand. The conjugal relation has for them been set at naught; by a tyranny inexorable as death, they have been subjected to the brutal passions of any white man in whose power they for the time were placed, until in multitudes of them the instinct of chastity has been almost destroyed. That this should not be universal is a testimony both to God's grace and the really martyr spirit of some of his colored children.

[&]quot;I am happy to say that I feel greatly encouraged in this as a field of labor. It has seemed to me that there is not another in the wide world that promises equal results to the earnest Christian laborer. Here we find a people who are almost wholly devoid of skepticism; they acknowledge the claims of Christianity and their own obligation. Here we have a race, almost a nation, that are to be enlightened, elevated, and blessed by the religion of Christ Jesus. And seeing such prospect for a large success in our labors, I am greatly encouraged."

But the testimony of missionaries, teachers, superintendents, and others is uniform, that all these vices are developed more toward the whites than their own color, and that there is the strongest ground to hope that by a proper course of training, judicious instruction from loving hearts, the inculcation of self-respect, and the sacred sanctions of religion, these vices may be rooted out, and the opposite virtues planted and nourished.

In view then of all the exhibitions made of this new and interesting field of mission effort, we hail with pleasure and adopt as our own the carefully considered utterances of the General Association of the State of New-York. They are words of truth and soberness, and should be received as a trumpet-blast from watchmen on the walls of Zion, summoning the sacramental hosts of God's elect to the work prepared for them.

"But in and through these various movements (of Providence)—the hostile no less than the friendly—affecting the condition of the colored race, we discern the opening of a field of philanthropy and of Christian missions, which summons our churches to the faith, and zeal, and self-denial of apostolic times; for never since the apostolic age has there been open to the Church a field so vast, so urgent, so hopeful. A race is at our doors, to be lifted from the lowest degradation to the level of our Christian civilization; a race plastic, quick to apprehend, prepared of God to receive the gift that we alone can convey to them; a race whose Christian development will be ours, as their destiny is ours also; a race whose evangelization here will be the evangelization of Africa, and a grand march toward the conversion of the world."

The hundreds of thousands of the already freed are but the advanced guard, the earnest of the millions yet to come. In view of the magnitude of this work, the perils that encompass the freedmen, the immense influence which their future will have on the future of our whole country, and on the character of our Christianity, the American Missionary Association may well feel that a solemn responsibility rests on it to make that people prominent and special objects of their care. The providence of God demands that we should with renewed energy and new consecration enlarge and extend our efforts. We must lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes, to embrace the increased work laid out for us. Looking back on the past with emotions of gratitude that we have been enabled to do so much for the honor of Christ and the salvation of souls, and rejoicing especially that from the commencement of our organization we were counted worthy of pleading the cause of an oppressed people at home and abroad, on the principles of the word of God, of justice and of freedom, and of laboring, even amidst obloquy and opposition, to secure their personal liberty, as well as their eternal salvation, thus preparing us for this new field and furnishing facilities for entering it, we feel bound by every tie that binds us to our fellow-men, every principle and every emotion that draws us to the cross of Christ, to rouse every energy, strain every nerve, put forth every exertion possible, to meet the exigencies of the times, that the Gospel of salvation, the civilization of Christianity, freedom, education, purity, and truth may be given to these freedmen, to Africa and all her children, wherever scattered, and to the world.

NORTH-WESTERN FREEDMEN'S AID COMMITTEE, AT CHICAGO.

A Committee representing several denominations of Christians, and called the "North-Western Freedmen's Aid Committee," auxiliary to the American Missionary Association, has been formed at Chicago.

They have issued an appeal in behalf of the freedmen, in which they refer to the labors of this Association in behalf of the African race, in Africa, the West-Indies, Canada, and in this country, as preparing it to prosecute successfully the great work it is now engaged in, in behalf of the freedmen. They refer to the fact that the Association is a union of evangelical Christians, and quote the ninth article of our Constitution, as follows:

Art. IX. Churches and other missionary bodies, agreeing to the principles of this Society, and wishing to appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, shall be entitled to do so through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed

They name the wants of the freedmen, especially along the line of the Mississippi River, and appeal to the friends of humanity and religion, in the North-West, for their contributions.

The Committee is composed of ministers of eight different denomi-Polymond R. Perry, Bancon, A. Silton, nations, as follows:

Rev. R. Patterson, D.D., Reformed Presbyterian; Rev. J. R. Shipherd, Congregational; Rev. E. A. Pierce, N. S. Presbyterian; Rev. N. Colver, D.D., Baptist; Rev. N. D. Williamson, Reformed Dutch; Rev. H. N. Bishop, D.D., Episcopalian; Rev. C. H. Fowler, Methodist ; Rev. J. P. Stewart, O. S. Presbyterian.

The Committee say:

The Sanitary Commission has kindly agreed to forward, gratuitously, any contributions of needful stores for the freedmen, addressed to "Sanitary Commission, Chicago, Freedmen's Aid Committee."

Donors will please send, by mail, an invoice of each box or parcel, stating how sent, addressed to "Rev. C. H. Fowler, Secretary North-Western Freedmen's Aid Committee,

"Ann I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering, and to conquer."-Rev. 6:2.

CHRIST JESUS is yet to conquer this world. He is to bruise Satan, its prince, under the feet of his saints "shortly," and subject its defiled and turbulent millions to his reign of purity and peace.

Such was the promise made to Eve, such the concurrent predictions of all the prophets, and such the very end and object of Christ's mission on earth. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." (1 John 3: 8.)

But in achieving these stupendous results, his methods are infinite, and therefore, to us, often strange and unaccountable. "His way is in the sea, and his path in the great waters, and his footsteps are not known." (Ps. 77: 19.) Yet there ARE methods in the movements of God, and the Apocalypse is a symbolic revelation or uncovering (αποκαλυπτω) of some of those methods by which Christ is subduing the world to himself.

Indeed the whole book of Revelation resembles the scenes of a prophetic kaleidoscope, in which the instrument receives twenty-one turns. After a brief, august introduction, with letters to seven churches, we have, for the body of the book, seven seals opening, followed by seven trumpets sounding; and these again by seven vials poured out; and under each of these twenty-one symbols there is given, in other symbols, a state of things, or scene in the world's drama, produced by the movements of Christ. So that the whole book is, what the first sentence declared it, a "Revelation," (not of this or that wonderful person or event but) a "Revelation of Jesus Christ," his person and providence.

Perhaps we can not know fully the mechanism of prophetic mind. The prophet sees a scene and describes it, then another, and still another; and as words fail for such descriptions, symbols take their place. Just as you can describe a political party, an administration, or character, by a single picture better than by a whole volume of words; so in prophecy, a single object or living creature is made to stand for a whole scene or movement. Thus beasts stand for conquerors; an harlot, gayly attired, for a corrupt Christianity; stars stand for pure teachers; earthquakes, for revolutions; a horse and his rider, with the rider's commission, for an epoch; sunbeams, for Christ's glory; and clouds and thunders, for his frowns.

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

"Lo! all these are but parts of his ways, and how little a portion is heard of him." (Job 26: 14.) All prophecy and all knowledge are but glimpses of Christ through the openings of his providence, and can no more give us his whole scheme, than glimpses of a farmer, seen through his orchard trees, can give us the policy of his farm.

Yet there is a regular march of events through these stupendous visions, in which they succeed each other in regularly recurring series, like figures in a circulating decimal. Thus, the "white horse" of moral purity and truth stirring up the impure and maddening the profane, is followed by the "red horse" of war, "to take peace from the earth and that they should kill one another." Then follow the "black horse" and his rider, with the balances, to mete out justice to oppressor and oppressed; and the "pale horse" of famine, exhaustion, and general misery follows him.

According to the judicious and pious commentator Scorr, the rider of each of these horses is not a real but pictorial personage; not a mere phantasm, either, but a something put before the prophet's mind to show successive steps in the development of his providence, so that each horse and rider, as indeed the whole book, is what the first sentence declares it, "The revelation of Jesus Christ."

And surely such was the order of the Saviour's movements in the days attending and immediately succeeding this revelation given by John.

. The Apostle was in the little isle of Patmos, in the Ægean Sea; sent there an exile by the Emperor Domitian "for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ."

And he there received these visions, for his own consolation and that of his brethren of the seven churches, whose "companion in tribulation" he calls himself. The vision, or rather panorama of visions, is a presentation of Christ as the God of providence. The Saviour, as "Lion of the tribe of Judah," stands in the picture before John, unrolling a parchment and breaking its seals. And as seal after seal of that "book" or roll gives way at his touch, a scene of providence opens on the Apostle's eye! an age seen in an instant, pictured by a single group!

First, the outburst of the pure and holy gospel truth, which, according to Tacitus, penetrated the whole known world in some thirty years, is seen as a "white horse" and his conquering rider, who is still "To conquer." The very vagueness of the utterance is sublime, for these words "To conquer" include all the victories of Christ from that vision down to his final triumph. He is "to conquer." That is his definition and vocation-what he is to do!

Next comes the "red horse" of war, which follows this conflict of opinions; and next the "black horse" of calamity, with his rider carrying the balances, to reconstruct society upon the new principles of justice and right which the Gospel has revealed. Then follows the "pale horse" of pestilence, exhaustion, and famine, whose rider is Death. And when this scene is shifted, the "martyrs" or witnesses for Christ, who had doubtless looked for the millennium to follow immediately after these convulsions, cry out impatiently, "O Lord! how long?" but are bid to wait yet for a little season until their fellowservants and their brethren should be fulfilled.

We shall not follow the seals throughout, as our object is less to interpret what is difficult than to apply what is plain. Suffice it to glance forward from this place in the visions to the end of these desolations. When the seals are all opened, the woe trumpets sounded, and the vials of wrath poured out, the millennial morn is at length opening-

> "Whose glory, with a light that never fades, Shoots between scattered rocks and opening glades."

If we turn over from this sixth chapter to the nineteenth, preceding the twentieth or millennial chapter, in which Satan is bound, this same "white horse" appears again, but his rider is changed. It would seem that no person of ordinary sensibility and sense can fail to be deeply impressed by this august and awful vision, the opening of the skies, revealing Christ as conqueror, followed by the armies of heaven. Let us stand and gaze upon it with John:

"And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness doth he judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called the 'Word of God.' And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, 'King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.' (Rev. 19: 11-16.)

"The Scripture," saith MATTHEW HENRY, "hath many fulfillings." And Lord Bacon has uttered the same thought in the words: "Prophecy hath a springing and germinant fulfillment running through ages." And the teaching of the late Professor STUART was to the same effect; that "The Apocalypse contains the fate and fortune of the Church, down to the close of time." Let us then draw near, and discover if we can, though it may be but little, what these magnificent and awful visions mean; and whether they have any relevancy or application to events of the present day.

The time was during the reign of the bloody and brutal Domitian, an emperor whose youthful amusement was impaling flies in his window with a bodkin. The age was red with persecution, and John was the "companion" of his Christian brethren in "tribulation." Alone on the Ægean isle, doubting, almost despairing of the final triumph of the Cross, until he was "in the Spirit upon the Lord's day."

But, being "in the Spirit" he sees things, as it were, with the eyes of God. Admitted behind the scenes of providence, he beholds Christ working out the problem of the world's renovation. Scal after seal in the roll of his providence gives way at his touch, and events march out in pictorial symbols before the prophet's eyes; from truth and holiness to war; that is, from the white horse to the red; through war to justice; that is, the black horse with the balances; followed and enforced by the pale horse of desolation, famine, and death! The scene then passes through other judgments—from seals to trumpets; that is, to woes more startling still; and from these again to "vials full of the wrath of God."

And when at last by this dire and terrible process of truth proclaimed and judgments intermingled, all obstructions to Christ's kingdom, the Beast and the False Prophet—Rome and Mohammed—all spurious church governments, rites, and all lying revelations—shall give way; then the heavens are opened and Christ himself appears as conqueror, upon the "white horse;" his "many crowns" representing his many victories, his body-guard the "pure and white" hosts of heaven, clothed and mounted like himself; the Church on earth purified and ready to welcome her Lord; Christ then enters upon his reign amid the mingled acclamations of the saints in heaven and those on earth which John heard; "As it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thundering, saying; Alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! Let us be glad and rejoice and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." (Rev. 19: 6, 7.) My beloved brethren, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." For, I repeat, "The scripture hath many fulfillings;" and Christ is working out the world's renovation by repetition of his methods. The judgments which John saw in his day and which came in his age and the ages following, are repeating themselves in this. For Christ works in providence as the painter upon canvas, first sketching the outline, next the rough draft, and next the shades and coloring, till the picture intended is complete.

From Moses to Christ, and indeed ever since, the property-ownership of men has been giving way before the light of God. Moses, indeed, left some restrictions upon personal liberty standing, as he needs must at a time when the whole world around him was like one wide state's prison, and the social and political state of men resembled that of convicts under keepers. But the code of Moses so exterminated human bondage that it turned the Jews into a nation of abolitionists, and all Palestine into a harbor for runaway slaves, which he forbid to be returned to their masters, in the words: " Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant that is escaped from his master unto thee." (Deut. 23 : 15.) So complete, indeed, was the Mosaic extermination of bondage that, as Albert Barnes has shown, our Saviour, in his three years' ministry in Judea, probably never saw a slave! And his own system of Christianity was a freer system still, in which the Jewish distinctions of Gentile and Jew, bond and free, male and female, were done away. (Col. 3:11, and Gal. 3:28.) For in Christ Jesus there is neither Greek nor Jew, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, male nor female.

But from the rise of the papacy in the earlier centuries, "the beast and the false prophet," that is, spurious church government, rites, and lying visions, like mistletoes on trees, have slowly drunk up the sap of Christ's system, and left in place of it cold, dead, crabbed ecclesiastical despotisms administered by priests; and thus have turned Christ's "perfect law of liberty" into a shelter of all the grinding despotisms which have cursed the world, American slavery included. The fact needs but a single utterance to show that false religion is everywhere the parent and protectress of false government. Jefferson Davis and Braxton Bragg, the papers inform us, have both been recently "confirmed" by these priestly human rites, in their rebellion against God and Christian civilization; the failing courage of treason seeking support from spurious religious rites.

But for the last half-century and more, in England, in Russia, and even in benighted Turkey and Algiers, the truths of nature and of God have been penetrating and perforating these systems of despotism, and specially its worst form, Slavery; that form of human misery which is inclusive of every vice. And this spread of light among the nations, this going forth of the "white horse" of truth with holiness for his rider, has turned these States of ours into a scene for the reproduction of apocalyptic vision. The seal suddenly broken, the "red horse" of war has followed, and our whole land now trembles and bleeds under his hoofs. The "black horse" with the balances of justice to the enslaved is already on his way with an "Emancipation Proclamation" inscribed on his forehead, and the "pale horse" of national exhaustion will certainly follow. But we know that when these terrible scenes and judgments are passed over, the Conqueror with the "many crowns" will come.

The declared object of these portions, and indeed of the whole Apocalypse, is the encouragement and consolation of God's people in the "tribulation" of the days of Domitian, then present; and the record is given us for our consolation whenever the like tribulation repeats itself. Nay, the portions of the visions then future have a running and special application to us.

During the reign of Domitian, the Christians were accused of being rebels to the Roman government;—of murdering and even of eating their own children in their secret meetings;—and the punishments inflicted for these supposed crimes, as given by the historian of their martyrdom, were, "confiscation, banishment, broiling over slow fires, racking, burning, scourging, stoning, hanging, worrying with dogs and wild beasts, and tearing with red-hot pincers." (See Fox's Book.) So perished Dionysius the Areopagite (see Acts 17: 34) and a multitude of others. And, when slain, as in a single instance in the late rebel raid on Kansas, their friends were not permitted to bury their remains. (Fox, p. 18, 1.)

I have no desire, by drawing gloomy pictures of our affairs, to damp the national ardor and patriotism nowhere more conspicuous than in the present rulers and people of Massachusetts. But, as sober men, we must view God's stern realities as they are.

Let us then glance briefly at the a tribulations" of the present day, and see if we have any to compare with the days of Domitian. And.

"When God resolves to scourge a nation's sins,
"Tis in the Church the leprosy begins,"

In more than one half of our territory, and more than half of our population, the Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Methodist Church governments, are declared by such men as Drs. Bacon, Hawes, and Beman to be in a state of open apostasy from that "righteousness" which is the basis of Christ's Kingdom on earth. And their brethren of the loyal States of the same denominations, generally admit and affirm the truth of their apostasy, while Rome, the "Man of Sin," always and everywhere apostate, North as well as South, steadily pursues his way of darkness, cruelty, and blood; as in the recent riots in New-York, where men who were robbing, pillaging, and murdering, were addressed by their Bahop as "brethren," and denied by implication to be "rioters."

In the rebel States, the daily press informs all its readers, that all the persecutions of the days of Domitian have been let loose on the loyal population. I speak not only of the four millions of blacks, to whose sufferings we have become almost insensible by familiarity; but of the loval whites as well. No details of cruelty and suffering are needed with men of sense and reflection, to set the "tribulation" of conscientious loyal people of the South before them, but the single, notorious, horrible fact, that they are to-day, and have been from the first, recruited for the rebel armies by hunting them with dogs. Fourteen young men escaped from Lowndes county, Mississippi, one of whom is now at my own house, who fled from Jefferson Davis's first conscription to avoid fighting against the flag which he and they were sworn to honor and defend. They were hunted with dogs for fifty miles, and owed their escape to their crossing a cane-brake which had been burned over, where the ashes obstructed the noses of the hounds!

It has been said of Agassiz, that if you give him a single scale, he can construct and give you the whole fish to which the scale belonged. I give you the single fact that dogs for hunting white men are a part of the regular recruiting service at the South! You can construct the whole state of society from it.

Then look at our own situation at the North. A million of our sons and husbands, the centers and supports of present and future families, are, and will be, taken from their places, subjected to the pestilent influence of camp life, to return after years, with moral natures weakened, worn and distracted, if not to lie down in bloody graves. Think of the value of one well-ordered house, all the ten thousand sweet and binding influences which hang upon the father and husband as their center and make up an honest man's idea of home! Think of a million of pale young women whose dark dresses are daily increasing in all our congregations! Think of all these homes made desolate or impossible! Already God's deliverance of our nation's bondmen has cost us, as once in Egypt, almost the first-born of every house:

"There is no flock however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no family howe'er defended,
But hath one empty chair."

Indeed! indeed! my friends, these are the "days of vengeance which are in God's heart;" but, glory be to his name! it is because "the year of his redeemed is coming." (Isa. 63:4.) True we are now only in that period symbolized by the vision of the "red horse" of war; but the "black horse" and his rider with the balances of adjustment, is already on his way; and the pale horse of rebel exhaustion will soon follow, (for they will fight while and as long as they can,) and we know that this whole providential cavalcade is led by him on the white horse, who is gone forth "conquering and to conquer," because those who are with him are called and chosen and faithful."

My respected friends: THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION has been born of God for an hour like this.

Not to disparage the "Christian," the "Sanitary," and the Freedman's Commissions which have sprung up during the war, and which must, more or less, fluctuate with its fluctuations, (for there is more than work for all,) the occasion requires some special notice of the Association in whose anniversary we are met.

The readers of the religious press have seen in the "report" presented by Dr. J. P. Thompson and adopted by the N. Y. State Association, in which this Association is expressly named, as also in the resolutions of Dr. Bacon adopted by the "American Board" at Rochester, which refer to the Association without naming it, that the eyes of American Christians are turned to this body more than to any or all others, to do the work of evangelization made possible by the

This Association sprung up seventeen years ago, in 1846. When organized it absorbed into itself four other organizations which the march of events had produced for specific ends some years before. These were: "The Amistad Committee," "The Union Missionary Society," "The Western Evangelical Missionary Society," and "The Committee for the West-India Missions."

Each of these four bodies has its separate interesting history which might form a separate discourse. But it is not necessary to revive the discussions or to recall the difficulties under which these four agencies, which merged in the "AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION" sprung up. On the subject of slaveholding and slavery, we are all now "of one accord" and "in one place." We are placed "by act of God." before this system of abominations, and we must conquer or fall before it.

Nor need we impinge against the proper province of the "American Home Missionary Society," and the "American Board."

In its origin this Association was compelled to cover the whole ground of Missions, foreign and domestic, for the purpose of presenting to the American Churches and the world, the possibility of Missions divorced from slaveholding; and of supporting those self-denying Missionaries who "remembered them that were in bonds as bound with them."

But this Association has already withdrawn from the vast Home Mission field of the North-West and West; leaving it to the American Home Missionary Society, so ably represented by Dr. Badger; and the "American Board" if freed from the presence of a few men who oppose the Emancipation policy of our excellent government might, for aught I see, reassume the foreign department as the other has the Home.

Let us then pause and look at the field of the American Missionary Association. Four millions of blacks and colored people, freed and to be freed, with from one to two millions of "poor whites," who can neither read nor write, are to be taught "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," and the theory and practice of Christian civilization.

Without wearying you with statistics, which you can all consult in the Abridged Census for 1860, there is a non-reading and non-writing population, now opening to and thrown upon the hands of this Association, equal to one seventh part of the entire American people! A population, sufficient to make three or four States as large and populous as Massachusetts, who, if colonized, and placed in States by themselves, with all demagogues and human harpies weeded out, could not read the lettering upon a guide-post or village shop; or write a notice for an election, or a vote, or read one if written for them! Of course there would be non occasion for post-offices in such States, because there would be none to write letters or read them if written!

The vastness of this field can perhaps be best conceived, by dividing our entire population, men, women, and children, North and South, rebel and loyal, into clusters of six persons each, and giving each cluster one human being to educate and saye! The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers, oh! how few!

And then think of the pressing nature of this august work.

The Freedman now believes us his friends. Long crushed and kept down by the mighty power of this great nation, the whole United States have done to them, what the miserable faction of slaveholders never could, namely, We have crushed these people into complete subjection to authority; and the means of drunkenness and infidelity, bad books and worse lecturers, have been kept from them by their condition. Such is the freedman of to-day; gentle, docile, mild; his submission to his owner may be easily transformed by instruction and the power of God into submission to Christ.

But, galvanized with freedom, maddened by war, corrupted by example and furnished by wages with the means of vice, there are more legions of devils hovering over and ready to enter into every one of them than haunted the Gadarene Demoniac! We must trim the gospel ship for war with these invisible hosts! We must "clear the ship for action," by throwing out of the Church of Christ whatever HE has not put there! "The Bride, the Lamb's wife," must throw off the ornaments which other lovers, men and devils, have put on her, and "make herself ready" for her coming Lord! We must give and toil and pray; and, as Wellington said at Waterloo, we must go into this struggle, "to die but not to yield!"

Then behold how God has fitted this Association for this vast and mighty work. Whoever and whatever does service in this war must strike with our conquering captain upon the "white horse." And does any one, who knows the Scriptures, doubt that, if Christ were here on earth, his most ardent sympathies would be given to the oppressed?

Pardon the expression, brethren, Christ is here on earth, "conquering and to conquer." And he has wonderfully fitted this Association for this specific work.

For, in the first place, like Christ himself who founded no churches, it is unsectarian and undenominational, it welcomes all laborers who love Christ, and excludes, by its constitution, all who openly hate him in his chosen representative, the least of his human brethren on earth.

Then this Association was "chosen in the furnace" where God always chooses his effective instruments.

And we know that when John from the dimness and doubt of his prison, sent disciples to ask Jesus, "Art thou he that should come or do we look for another?" Jesus answered them, by showing them, standing all around him, blind men seeing, deaf men hearing, lame men walking, lepers cleansed, and dead men raised to life; but the crowning proof of all that the Son of God had come, was that which is the peculiar mission of this Association: "The poor have the Gospel preached unto them." For who is so poor as he who does not own himself?

Christ hath "made propitiation for sins that are past." Let his act of oblivion cover them. But for us one and all, old and young, gentle and simple, let us do with our might THIS work which God hath given us to do. The Reports of the Secretaries show us how well it is already begun. Let us perform it unto the day of JESUS CHRIST. AMEN!

thion. Such is the freedomen of to-day; gentle, double, mild; its

Used, getting and the freedom, maddened by war, corrupted by manager and firmbehed by wages with the nature of vice, there are note legions of device however, over not ready to enter into every one

THE Eighteenth Annual Meeting was held at New-Haven, Connecticut, in the Centre Church, commencing October twenty-sixth, at three o'clock P.M.

The meeting was called to order by Rev. George Whipple, Senior Corresponding Secretary, who read a letter from the Rev. David Thurston, President of the Association, now in his eighty-sixth year, explaining his unavoidable absence, and giving his views of affairs in Church and State.*

Professor C. D. Cleveland, of Pennsylvania, one of the Vice-Presidents, was requested to preside. He read selections of Scripture from Luke fourth and Matthew twenty-eighth.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Dutton, of New-Haven.

The Chairman then delivered a brief address.

The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read by Rev. Henry Belden, Recording Secretary.

An abstract of the Annual Report of the Executive Committee was read by Secretary Whipple, and the Report referred to a committee, consisting of Rev. Dr. Dutton, Rev. H. Bingham, Rev. J. Brawer, Revi Dr. Hawes, Rev. J. C. Webster, Rev. Dr. Bacon, Hon. A. C. Barstow, and Rev. S. W. Magill.

A Business Committee was appointed, consisting of Rev. M. E. Strieby, Rev. Dr. Bacon, Rev. S. C. Leonard, Rev. Dr. Hawes, Rev. J. C. Webster, L. Tappan, and I. C. Hutchings.

A Committee on Nomination of Officers for the ensuing year was appointed, consisting of Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Rev. Dr. Dutton, Arthur Tappan, T. C. Fanning, and Edwin Booth.

A letter from Rev. A. Benton, of Beloit, Wisconsin, was read.

The Business Committee reported in part.

The Business Meeting was adjourned to half-past nine o'clock tomorrow morning.

WEDNESDAY EVENING SERVICES.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. Bacon, Rev. J. C. Webster, and Rev. Dr. J. P. Thompson. Dr. Bacon read the hymn entitled, "Christ's kingdom," the division of the Hail to the Lord's Anointed," which was sung congregationally, accompanied by the organ; Mr. Webster read the Seventy-second Psalm and offered prayer; Dr. Thompson read the hymn, Water Dreitland at the Con-

A meeting for prayer was held at half-past eight o'clock a.m. An hour was spent in devotional exercises, Rev. S. S. Jocelyn presiding. At half-past nine o'clock the business of the Association was resumed. The presiding officer, Professor Cleveland, read lessons from the Scriptures, and prayer was offered by Rev. W. T. Briggs, of Massachusetts.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

The following were appointed a committee to examine the report of receipts and expenditures: Hon. A. C. Barstow, Rev. G. Whipple, Rev. Dr. Dutton, S. Deming, Esq., and Rev. G. Trask.

The proposed amendments to the Constitution of the Association, advertised in the October number of the American Missionary, were then considered and adopted.

The Business Committee reported a series of resolutions, which were read, and, on motion of the Chairman, laid upon the table.

Rev. E. Davis, District Secretary, Massachusetts, then, by request, transport for the rows addressed the Association.

The resolutions were taken up for discussion. Remarks were made on the first by Rev. George P. Claffin, of the Mendi Mission, Rev. G. Trask, Rev. J. Brewer, Messrs. A. C. Barstow and Lewis Tappan, Rev. J. W. Alvord, and Rev. W. T. Briggs. After which it was unanimously adopted.

The second resolution was discussed by Messrs. Whipple, Webster, Dutton, Learned, Alvord, Barstow, and Fanning, and adopted.

The third resolution was adopted without debate.

The fourth resolution was then read, several verbal alterations were made, and, after some remarks by the Chairman, it was adopted.

The fifth resolution was discussed by the Rev. R. C. Learned, Rev. I. H. Pettengill, Dr. Dutton, Rev. J. Brewer, L. Tappan, Rev. A. Underwood, Rev. M. E. Strieby, Thomas Ritter, M.D., Hon. A. C. Barstow, and Rev. J. C. Webster; afterward, on motion of Rev. J. W. Alvord, it was recommitted. Adjourned.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

At two o'clock the meeting was called to order.

By request, Rev. G. P. Claffin addressed the Association, urging the claims of the Mendi Mission upon the Christian benevolence of the churches.

The sixth resolution was read, and, after remarks by Messrs Brewer, Strieby, Dutton, Magill, and Webster, was adopted.

Dr. Dutton, Chairman of the Committee on the Annual Report, made the following report, which was adopted:

"The Committee on the Annual Report take leave to say that they have examined that Report, and unanimously express their approbation of it, and of the work which it clearly narrates. They especially rejoice in the great increase of the labors so successfully performed by it among the rapidly increasing multitude of the emancipated; and they recommend that the Report be published under the direction of the Executive Committee."

The Association united in celebrating the Lord's Supper with a large congregation of Christian brethren and sisters of different Churches; Rev. Dr. Joel Hawes and Rev. Dr. Jonas King officiating. Both made interesting and appropriate remarks. At the conclusion was sung the hymn commencing:

"The promise of my Father's love."

It was a highly interesting occasion.

Business was resumed. A vote of thanks to Rev. Dr. Thompson was passed for the discourse delivered last evening, and a copy requested for the press.*

The fifth resolution, amended, was reported again by the Business Committee, and adopted if an infinity three last three productions and the

THURSDAY EVENING.

The Association met agreeably to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Bacon,

The Business Committee, by Mr. Strieby, Chairman, reported the seventh resolution, which, after remarks by Mr. Strieby and Dr. Bacon, was adopted.

An able address was then delivered by Hon. Francis Gillette, of Hartford, Connecticut.

Rev. M. G. Strieby offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That as our collections in money and clothing have nearly doubled the past year, over the preceding year, amounting to about $140,000, we feel called upon to endeavor to increase the amount the coming year to $200,000; and as our corps of missionaries and teachers among the Freedmen numbered last year two hundred and fifty, we should this year strive to send out three hundred and fifty.

Mr. Strieby supported the resolution in a short address, in which he forcibly and feelingly stated the urgent wants of the Association for money to sustain the teachers that are now waiting to be sent forth to different fields of labor. It was subsequently passed.

Addresses of unusual eloquence were made by Rev. J. M. Manning, of Boston; Rev. Sella Martin, of New-York; and Rev. J. P. Gulliver, of Norwich, Connecticut.

On motion of Secretary Whipple, the following resolution was

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to the Center Church for the use of their edifice, and to the people of New-Haven for their generous hospitality in entertaining the members and friends of the Association who have attended

NAME OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

The meeting, which, from the beginning, had been conducted with great concord and unusual interest, closed with singing the Doxology, and the apostolical benediction by Dr. Bacon.

RESOLUTIONS.

1. Resolved, That we gratefully acknowledge the mercies of God to us as a Missionary Association during the past year; in so largely sparing the health and lives of our missionaries, Christian teachers, officers, and members; in the great increase of our means of usefulness; and in the continually expanding field of our labors.

means of usefulness; and in the continually expanding field of our labors.

2. Resolved, That we recognize with adoring gratitude the wonder working providence of God that changes a mighty conflict, instiguted by rebellion in the interests of Slavery, into an instrumentality of emancipation and abolition, and that opens before us and demands a missionary work in the United States affecting two races, and that, in the end, will bless two continents.

Resolved, That as Christian citizens, we are called upon to sustain cordially and effectively, the Government of our country in the endeavor to suppress rebellion, to vindicate the supremacy of the elective franchise, and to extend the blessings of civil and religious liberty over all the land.

A. Resolved, That the causes, the history, and the results hitherto of the great conflict in which the people of the United States are now contending for their national unity and their constitutional self-government against this atrocious shaveholders' reclaim, for both the expectation of any conclusion of the conflict which will not sweep away from the area of the rebellion all the obstacles to perfect freedom of thought and utterance and of effort for the establishment of Christian institutions; or of any reconstruction of the State governments there otherwise than on the basis of the self-evident truth that all men are created equal, and are endowed by their Creator with certain inslicable rights among which are life liberty and the propriet of hearders.

struction of the State governments there otherwise than on the basis of the self-evident truth that all men are created equal, and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

5. Resolved, That, holding ourselves in readiness in obedience to our flaviour's command; "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," to enter any field divinely indicated, we recognize in the history of this Association; its sympathy with the enslaved; its labors for the Freedmen of Canada and Jamaica, and the hopeful commencement of missionary work in Africa; a fitness for the special efforts in which it has so largely engaged for the last three years; and a providential call to pressforward in and greatly enlarge its charitable, educational, and evangelical labors aircady begun among the Freedmen in the South; and in the elevation and Christianization of the colored people in whatever country or clime they may be found.

6. Resolved, I hat this Association cordially reciprocates the fraternal faciling felt and expressed toward it by other missionary bodies, home and foreign, and it rejoices in the sympathy so widely and cordially expressed in the labors of this Association among the Frederican, to which, in the general opinion, it has been so distinctly called by divine Providence.

7. Resolved, That the crowning excellence of the work of this Association among the Freedmen is its strictly evangelical and yet undenominational character, as no teachers are sent forth who do not furnish credentials of Christian standing; and in accordance with/the great Christian aim, it seeks to reach the people where they are, and to lift them, by charitable and educational means, as well as by the preaching of the Gospel, to the high plane of Christian civilization.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

THE American Missionary Association assembles at its Eighteenth Annual Meeting, while the judgments of God still hang over our country, and the storm of war continues to rage. We have occasion, however, to thank the Almightv Ruler of heaven and earth, that he has so far shaped the counsel of our Government in recognition of the rights of the oppressed, and given such prosperity to the national arms, that we may hope that but few more terrific thunderbursts of battle shall be heard before the clouds shall roll away, and the bow of peace be again seen in our sky. May we not hope also that the sun may not then look down upon a single slave in our land, to raise his manacled hands and invoke from heaven another storm of retribution? During the last year - emerging from the smoke of battle-an increasing number of colored refugees have come through the lines of the enemy, claiming our Christian charities, and asking mental and spiritual illumination. To these, much of our energies as a Missionary Association have been given, and with most gratifying results. The experience of the past, and the revelations of Divine Providence, open out still more clearly the vastness of the work to be done, in its relations to their individual, temporal, and eternal welfare, to our country's prosperity, and especially to African civilization and evangelization.

Recognizing the Saviour's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," we yet see, in the past history of this Association, in the deep interest its members have always had in the slave, in the hopeful work it has done among the freedmen, and in the encouraging beginning of its Gospel labor in Africa, a call of Providence to give much of our energies, in the future as in the past, to this interesting race of people. It is with devout thanks to God, that we are permitted to-day to review the labors of the past year among them, and to point out its encouragements and prospective enlargement.

WASHINGTON AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Your Committee would here gratefully record their acknowledgment of an overruling Providence, which, through the successive steps of the Government, the prohibition of slavery in the national territories, its abolition in the District of Columbia, the proclamation of freedom to the slaves in the rebel States, (and to all in the service of Government,) the enrolling of colored soldiers in the armies of the Union, and the pledging to them equal rights and privileges with the whites, has ordered all our national affairs in favor of personal liberty and righteous, constitutional, civil government.

Sixteen missionaries and teachers, of whom three are ordained ministers, have been aided by our Association in this region, including Washington, Lincoln Hospital, Giesboro; and Camps Casey, Todd, Wadsworth, and on Arlington Heights. They have had connected with their labor seven schools, including the work done for the soldiers, having something over seven hundred scholars. The most important school, in view of its locality and the number of teachers and scholars, has been recently established, under the care of Mr. Coan and others from Norfolk, Va. The school at Camp Barker, in a house purchased of the American Tract Society, New-York, numbering over two hundred scholars, now under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, colored, has been longer established, and is prosperous. The preaching of the Gospel among the freedmen here has been blessed; but owing to the changing character of the adult population, the results are less apparent.

This field is an important one. At the seat of Government, under the eye of the national legislature, a successful enterprise may attract the attention of the members of Congress and officers of Government, and suggest to them things needed to be done for the permament welfare of these people, and aid in the solution of the mighty problem now before the nation. Most especially do we feel the importance of having the experiment here tried, under the influence of religious and evangelical men, that there may not be another failure by an attempt to educate and civilize the colored man, leaving out, as in the Government schools for the Indians, all knowledge of the Gospel, the essential element of all true civilization. The large number of freedmen and other colored persons in this field, would warrant a great extension of our efforts here, but the cost of sustaining them is greater than at any other point, and we must be content to fall far short of meeting the wants of the people.

Farther up the Potomac, at Harper's Ferry, we had established a school with two teachers. It had just got into successful operation, when the late rebel raid drove out the teachers, destroyed their property, and broke up the school. They will probably locate elsewhere,

In Eastern Virginia, at Fortress Monroe, General Butler first startled the nation by calling its attention to the forsaken or escaping slaves as contraband of war, and therefore not to be returned to their disloyal masters. There our labors for them may be said to have commenced, and this has been the radiating center of our operations. The home of ex-President Tyler, the destroyed village of Hampton, and the abandoned plantations of rebel owners, have been the chief places occupied by our missions and teachers on this side of the James. The large school at Hampton, under the charge of Mr. Day and others, is the oldest of our mission schools, and its progress has more than once drawn tears from the eyes of sympathizing friends, and silenced the cavils of those who oppose the education of the blacks.

At Norfolk, Portsmouth and vicinity, south of James River, the numerous schools, under the general superintendence of Professor Woodbury, with a large corps of excellent teachers, have given entire satisfaction. The whole number of teachers has been sixty-four, four of them ministers. Not the least important of these schools, have been those established in the farming regions, under the immediate direction of Captain Brown, Superintendent of Freedmen for this section. The plantations of Governor Wise and many other proud and aristoeratic masters, once cultivated by the unrequited toil and wet by the tears and blood of their slaves, are now cultivated by and for the freedmen, while their children are taught in the parlors and mansions of their fugitive masters. The success of the schools has been such, that resident secessionists and rebel sympathizers are beginning to clamor in behalf of their own children, lest they should be left behind by the children of their former slaves in the race after knowledge.

As a testimony at once to the philanthropy of the commanding generals and the value of these schools, it may be mentioned that Brigadier-General Shepley, Military Governor, with the sanction and approval of General Butler, has determined to provide schools for all the colored children in this department. For this purpose, about one hundred and twenty teachers will be needed; for the greater number of whom they will look to this Association. School-houses, dwellinghouses, and rations for the teachers will be provided, but the teachers themselves and their small salaries must, for the present, be supplied by the Christian philanthropy of the North.

A very large evening-school was held at Norfolk for the year previous to May thirtieth. At that time, Mr. Coan, who was Superintendent, reported the following. We quote it as showing that, even under such disadvantages, with a school numbering nearly four hundred, a large number of teachers engaged in teaching in the same room at one time, and the many things that must continually draw off attention, much may be accomplished:

Our special thanks are due to the teachers of the Educational Commission for their voluntary labors in this school.

We have also had much aid from soldiers, especially from members of the Twentyfirst Connecticut and Twenty-seventh Massachusetts regiments. From these and other regiments not less than one hundred different officers and privates have aided us; some from three to four months, others but a short time, but always to the mutual benefit of both teacher and pupils.

Frequent instances of religious interest and hopeful conversion are reported. In August, from one section of this field, a teacher wrote: "It is estimated there have been recently one hundred conversions." From another quarter: "Two of my pupils have given evidence of acceptance with God." And from still another: "Many are inquiring after Jesus."

The following anecdote will show at once the prosperity and the liberality of some of these blacks. Mr. Harris wrote:

"Brother H-, having left his family in Washington, received intelligence that his child was dead and that his wife was sick. He immediately left for Washington, which was about one week ago. Last Sabbath a letter from him was read to the church, statwas about one week ago. Last Sabbath a letter from him was read to the church, stating that his name was enrolled, and, in all probability, he would be drafted; that he could not leave the city until after the draft without first procuring a substitute, which he could get for five hundred dollars, two of which he could raise himself. He asked his church to send him three hundred dollars. They nobly responded, by raising two hundred and thirteen dollars in the afternoon and evening of the same day, and the appointed Tuesday evening following to raise the balance. They accordingly met and gave the amount required, and eight or ten dollars over.

"I was glad to witness the cheerfulness with which all seemed to give, but especially to see groups of children coming forward with their pennies and five-cent scrip. I have spent some time very pleasantly at Taylor's Farm, where are eight hundred freed people looking cheerful and doing well."

Mr. James F. Sisson, alluding to the same matter, says:

"Please remember that the major part of these contributors were slaves when our present war began. With rare exceptions, the people are very poor. This was strictly an Anglo-African affair. A speaker at the last-mentioned meeting gave three reasons why the church and congregation should raise the three hundred dollars: 'We can not spake our minister, we shall be sustaining our government, and we shall answer the law.''

Of their physical wants one of our teachers wrote in September:

"At many of our cabins are little piles of lightwood, which busy little hands have gathered, with bare and sometimes bleeding feet, waiting to purchase a pair of shoes, a pair of pants, a little dress, etc. To-day two mothers came to me, saying: "What shall we do for our dear little ones? The nights are becoming chilly, our houses are open, and our children almost uaked." Both of these mothers went bitterly. Another woman has crept softly behind the building where we hold our Sabbath service, to listen to our songs of praise and prayer, because she was unwilling to walk in with bare feet.

"There are three hundred of these helpless women and children, eating without a knife or fork, sleeping less comfortably than a Northern house-dog in his master's barn. I have no heart to look on sufferings without power to relieve them. I love these people—I love to teach them. But my health and constitution suffer with this human suffering unrelieved. My nerves are not strong enough to see these naked limbs uncovered, these aching hearts uncomforted. If any thing ever drives me from this field of labor it will be because I must look continually on human suffering without the power to alleviate."

The Presbytery of Mahoning, Pa., and the Free-Will Baptist Home Missionary Society have sustained in this part of Virginia missionaries and teachers, acting under the commission of this Association, who have labored with success. They propose to increase their work.

At Ferry Point, the Marine Hospital, a large and commodious building has been assigned for an orphan asylum, under the immediate care of two of our teachers. Their self-denying labors have been successful in saving scores of abandoned or bereaved colored children, many of whom have already been placed in protecting homes.

Miss Marcia Colton, formerly a missionary among the Choctaw Indians, has care of the abandoned women, who are shut up on Craney Island, which is used as a penitentiary and place of refuge for this class. Her isolated situation is such as to demand the sympathies, the prayers, and the support of all the friends of virtue and religion.

In Eastern Virginia, on both sides of the James River, we have had eight ordained missionaries and ninety teachers. Four of them have died in the work. A few others have retired; some with impaired health. Their places must be filled, and an increasing number should be supplied. The places are ready, the teachers are waiting, but at present the funds are so low that delay must occur.

In North-Carolina, the schools under the superintendence of Rev. W./T. Briggs, though much interrupted by the capture of Plymouth and Washington, and the raids upon Newbern, Washington, Beaufort, etc., have still been successful. Proficiency in learning and numerous instances of hopeful conversion have been reported. On Roanoke Island especially, the work of the Spirit is said to have been remarkable; the whole school, in some instances, manifestly believing that Jesus was near. One of the latest letters from there says: "The Lord is doing a great work here. Christians are doing an earnest work, and many are being converted to God." The interruption of our schools by the causes referred to proved to be time not wholly lost. The hundreds of white refugees then thrown into Morehead City and Roanoke soon filled the hospitals, the churches, and schoolbuildings with their sick and suffering, and gave our teachers much opportunity for special missionary work, the good of which, as Mr. Briggs said, it is impossible to over-estimate. They became, he says, both medical directors and Sanitary Commission; visiting the poor refugees morning, noon, and night, like angels of mercy, and, while ministering to their bodily need, are not forgetful of their spiritual wants. They are also doing more to break down the prejudice against them as "teachers of contrabands" than they could possibly do in any other way. This prejudice is powerful among the "poor whites," and also pervades more or less our military.

Four ordained missionaries and fourteen missionary teachers have been here employed. One, Miss Getchell, died at her work.

The review of the year we may give in the language of Rev. Mr. Briggs, who, acting under commission from us, superintends all the schools:

"Just one year has clapsed since the first free day-school was opened and instructors sent from the North for the express purpose of teaching. In review, we can not repress the exclamation: 'Behold what God hath wrought!' After surveying this district, (North-Carolina,) and traversing the field for more than six months, I confess to an agreeable surprise at the success of this grand educational work. The master-mind who inaugurated it, and whose stamp it still bears, continues to give to it wise counsel and the weight of his official position. Schools have multiplied, and more than forty different teachers have been sent into this district. With a full share of difficulties always incident to a new enterprise, coupled with those peculiar to this, it is a marvel that there have been such steady progress and enlargement of the work. Of course, much is due to the teachers, who, as a body, have proved worthy of the societies under whose auspices they have been sent. They are a noble band; and whatever the future may yield, it must be a lifelong satisfaction to have been identified with this year of labor. Should the present prospects continue or brighten, no doubt the number of schools may be doubled before the first of January. Even this will not nearly meet the demand. This work has not been begun a moment too soon; it could not be. Wherever colored children can be found in sufficient numbers, there it is time to begin a school. I can not for my life see how one who has at heart the welfare of his country can fail of deep interest in the work of elevating the negro race; it bears vitally on our national prospects; we must not be indifferent to it. The freedmen are providentially thrown upon our hands, and the simple question is, whether they shall be an element of strength or weakness. The humble efforts of teachers now scattered through the rebellious States within our lines, will tell mightily on the future of this nation; especially if, in connection with their proper work of training the intellect, they coupl to support himself and become a worthy and honored citizen, has been wonderfully strengthened by the observations of the past six months. There is something grand in the lifting of a race from servitude to the enjoyment of liberty and equality, and opening to them a fair field in which to rise or fall. The American Missionary Association, the Freedman's Association, and the Educational Commission, are doing a noble work, and the charities flowing through them are as parely patriotic as those of the Sanitary or Christian Commission. In a quiet way, they are solving the greatest problem of the age, and preparing the highway whereby this nation may pass safely through her final struggle. I could never have believed, if I had not seen, that such a system of education among the freedmen could have been inaugurated in so short a time, and through the humanizing influences thus begun, I have no doubt this abused race will be prepared to exchange the house of bondage for the Canaan of liberty, and more than folialit all reasonable expectations."

SOUTH-CAROLINA AND FLORIDA.

In South-Carolina, where, thirty years ago, the first portentous rumblings of the coming earthquake were heard, and where more recently the volcanic fires of rebellion burst forth, to lay waste and desolate so large a portion of this country-following our victorious armies through Port Royal entrance-our missionaries and teachers have entered, with others, to spread their peaceful and healing influence. The Sea Islands have been taken possession of in the name of God and humanity, and are to be permanently held, we hope, mainly by the blacks and their immediate friends. King Cotton has been dethroned, and is now made humbly to serve for the enriching and elevating of the late children of oppression. Under the beneficent administration of the Military Governor, General Saxton, all that could well be done for the protection of the people and the prosperity of missionary and educational efforts has been done; and the rich fruits that have followed must bring to him, as well as missionaries and teachers, an abundant reward.

We have had here (eight of them for a short time only) thirty-one missionaries and teachers, of whom five were ordained ministers, with fourteen schools and one thousand one hundred and fifteen scholars, ten Sabbath-schools and eight hundred scholars. The Sabbath-schools have been the means of much good. In two nightschools, not enumerated above, there have been three hundred adults. of ages varying from eighteen to sixty, whose improvement has been truly gratifying, showing that the adults may and will learn. In their meetings for social prayer, which have been seasons of much interest, soldiers and people, black and white, have freely mingled. A Free-Will Baptist Church has been organized, and contains about eighty members. Rev. Mr. Richardson says: "The people greatly need sound religious instruction—the application of plain Gospel truth. Their faith and zeal are more apparent than their Christian brinciple. The consciences of many of them are defiled by indulgences fostered and sustained by the corrupt examples of their religious guides while in slavery." Many of them, however, look up with faith and reverence to the living and true God, and no class of persons so surely win their love and confidence as their true and faithful living teachers. This furnishes joy and comfort to those laboring for their purity, and encourages them to give line upon line, precept upon precept, without which it seems impossible to lift them from their low estate. Many have thus been enlightened and strengthened to do right, and some, it is hoped, have been led to turn to Christ as the true and living way. "The work," says Rev. Mr. Richardson, our Superintendent of schools there, "has been just begun. The offerings of the nation, the prayers and tears of the Church have yet to be poured forth in overflowing streams for the redemption of this people."

The salaries of six of our missionaries in South-Carolina are paid by the F. B. H. M. Society, by whom they are commended to our Association. In temporal things the people are reported as generally doing well. Some are gaining property fast, becoming owners of land and raising cotton for themselves. The cotton crop has been good, and many of these colored planters will reap a rich reward of their labors. Where the freedman is established upon a farm of his own, he succeeds. He is both happier and more ambitious than when retained as a laborer for the white man.

In Florida, Rev. Mr. Greeley has labored as a missionary, and Miss T. Barcalow as a teacher.

LOUISIANA.

To New-Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Port Hudson, twenty-six missionaries and teachers have been sent. Eighty of them have returned North; a majority of the remainder have passed under the care of the Board of Education appointed by General Banks, to receive their pay from it.

The education of the freedmen in Louisiana was commenced by General Banks. His plan of schools was at first designed as plantation-schools. Subsequently it was made to apply to free district-schools in the cities of New-Orleans and Baton Rouge, under a Board of Education selected by himself. The educational order gives a preference to residents of Louisiana in the selection of teachers, it suitable ones can be found; but accepts the services of well-qualified teachers from any quarter. The School of Medicine was assigned to the use of missionary teachers sent out by the Association, in which a large school, numbering at one time nearly six hundred, was gathered. In this building a Sunday-school was started, under the superintendence of Chaplain Conway, aided by an assistant superintendent and other teachers from this Association, officers in the army, and ladies residing in New-Orleans. In this school, numbering about nine hundred and fifty, started expressly for the freedmen, nearly one fifth of the number has been whites. Seven thousand five hundred copies of the Scriptures, or parts of them, were granted to the American Missionary Association for the use of this Board of Education, and will be distributed under direction of its members. We obtained also, from the American Sunday-School Union, Philadelphia, a grant of a one hundred dollar library, and forwarded to the Union Sunday-school. There are now seven thousand seven hundred colored children in the schools of this part of Louisiana under the Board of Education; about two thousand seven hundred in New-Orleans; the progress of the greater part of whom is marked and decided. At Baton Rouge, a large school was started and is still successfully carried on by our missionaries. Two of our teachers were sent among the soldiers at Port Hudson. One of them left there with the removal of his regiment; and the other has since been compelled to leave this work by illness, and is now in New-Orleans.

EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

General Banks expresses himself highly pleased with the results of educational efforts among the blacks. The people lay hold of the opportunity to educate their children with great avidity. The only unchangeable stipulation, he says, which they make, as the essential condition on which they will consent to labor, is the education of their children. He bears an honorable testimony to the good behavior of the freedmen, their improvement, and general success.

There are at present some serious hindrances to our work in Louisiana; but we hope the obstruction may be removed, and the channel of benevolent effort there flow in a continually widening and deepening stream.

As a testimony to the capability of the blacks and the progress of the schools, we quote from the Board of Education:

"The country schools are prosperous and thronged, and although they have been in being but a few months, they are rapidly demonstrating the capacity of the African to receive our civilization. Children who eight weeks ago were beginning the alphabet, are now reading in First Readers, and solving with facility problems in the primary rules of arithmetic.

"The more intelligent of the planters are comprehending that whatever dignifies their laborers is a reciprocal benefit to themselves; and the instances are continually increasing where the planters not only willingly, but cordially, aid the Board in the location of schools on their plantations.

"The pupils display great eagerness for knowledge and facility of acquisition. Their perceptive faculties are particularly good; too much so, perhaps, as in the reflective faculty and memory they seem somewhat deficient. No severity of discipline is used or required; the threat of expulsion from the privileges of instruction being sufficient to tame the most mounting spirit. The weekly report of the teachers shows that the number of instances of absence and tardiness are less than, and the average daily attendance fully equal to, that in the white schools.

"SUCCESS OF THE SCHOOLS.

South, it is better to have that labor instructed than brutalized, and to spend in schools in order to save in prisons. In these schools careful attention has been paid to the correct vocalization of the elementary sounds; the pupils have been trained to a clearness and purity of tone creditable to Saxon voices. The advanced classes have finished the primary books of reading and geography, and are now reading the Third and Fourth Readers with facility. They have acquired the knowledge of arithmetic as far as long-division and fractions, the multiplication-table, the use of the outline maps, and can write with commendable neatness. Such are the general features of these schools. Even if they were now closed, the work of self-instruction, with the more advanced classes, could go on, and nothing can eradicate the knowledge they have thus gained.

"THEN AND NOW.

"Three years ago it was a crime to teach their race. Now they read the Testament and the newspaper. They are learning the geography of the world. They are gaining the knowledge of figures, with which to do the business of labor and life. They are singing the songs of the Union and freedom. They show a healthy mentality, and have made it appear to reasonable minds that they are very much like the rest of mankind, and are thus entitled to a fair chance in the world.

"The result of this new chapter of human experience will be a general resurrection of buried mind through the worn and wasted South. Our military expeditions do the pioneer work of blasting the rock and felling the forest. Education follows to sow the grain and raise the golden harvest. The most glorious work is now opening—to lift up the freedmen with instruction, counsel, culture. The day of antagonism is over, and that of befriending begins. Behind the advancing lines of our forces follows the small pacific army of teachers and civilizers; and the school-house takes the place of the whipping-post and scourge."

E. M. W."

And one of our missionary teachers, at Baton Rouge, says:

"The cause of the freedmen is prospering. Wherever schools have been established, the colored people are learning to read and write with great success. If any one thinks that the negro is not capable of being educated, let him visit any one of the schools in this Department, and I think he will be convinced that the color of the skin does not affect the mental capacity. I have as intelligent children in my school as I ever saw anywhere in the North. I never saw children show greater eagerness for learning. It is a real pleasure to teach them. I am happy when surrounded with their dusky faces and glistening eyes.

"The Common-street School (New-Orleans) is in a flourishing condition. It is the finest colored school in this Department. The Sabbath-school, held in the same building, is a grand success. The last time I attended the school there were a thousand pupils in attendance."

To the industry of the blacks and their ability to take care of themselves, Mr. Couway, the Superintendent of Free Labor in Louisiana, says, in his report to General Canby:

"The number of blacks employed on plantations is about 35,000, of whom about one fourth are first-class hands, receiving wages at eight dollars per month, besides board, clothing, medical attendance, schooling for their children, and one acre of ground, worth five hundred dollars, to raise cotton. The wages paid to the laborers is, as a whole, more remunerative than has been ordinarily paid to farm hands in the North who work by the year.

What has been always there will be an average of about fifty dollars to cach one of the 35,000, in addition to their little crop of cotton, corn, sugar, potatoes, etc., which will average to each more than is due them for wages. There are besides 15,000 of whom he has no return, and 30,000 in the city of New-Orleans; making a total of 80,000 blacks there who are working for wages under the educational and labor system established by General Banks in Louisians."

Of the religious state of some of these people, Mr. Wright wrote from Van Buren Camp, La., in January:

[&]quot;A better day is now dawning here. The progressive triumphs of our arms have purified the political atmosphere. Many who were blind, now see; and the community are fast perceiving that as the negro, bond or free, must still furnish the labor of the

"We have formed a Union Church of forty members. Many others were anxious to join, but my acquaintance with them was too slight to judge of their fitness. Our meetings are increasingly interesting.

"It is beyond expression gratifying and delightful to witness the earnestness with which many of this people listen to the reading and explanation of the word of God. I find among them men and women of deep religious experience. One old man, who was sold away from Kentucky thirty years ago, remarked to me one day, after giving an account of his religious experience, that he thought this 'low country' the best place in the wide world for 'de followers of Jesus. Up in old Kentuck times was too easy—too easy. No much whipping and persecuting dere. All quiet, den all grow cold, and dey follers de Lord afar off. But down here it is persecution, socurging, whipping, yes, even often beating us to death, because we pray. Now all these troubles and trials dey drives us to de Lord. Many, many times I has been thrown on the ground and whipped two hundred blows, and I did not know what for it was done. But by and by master tell me: "Now don't you pray no more on this place; if you do, I shall whip you harder." But all dat only make me happier. Many times when I have been whipped, just as soon as I could get my breath, I would begin to pray for my persecutor; and then my warm blood was lying on the ground. But as I staggered away into the brush to pray, the Lord would come near, and F was so happy that I could shout aloud. And so I think,' said he, 'this is the very best place for the Christian.'"

MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

At Vicksburgh, Natchez, and other points up the Mississippi River, Little Rock, Pine Bluff, and Helena, Arkansas, Memphis and Nashville, Tennessee, and Cairo, Illinois, we have had seven ordained ministers and thirty-eight teachers. Along this line there has been a greater amount of physical suffering, destitution of clothing, want, sickness, and death, than in any other part of our work. The success of our armies in the South-West is liberating many thousands of the blacks, who are pouring into our line in a condition of almost utter destitution. For most of them Government temporarily provides food, but of this they are often deprived by their removal from place to place, and their supply of clothing and the provision for their intellectual and spiritual wants must come from their Christian friends in the North. Hundreds, if not thousands, perished last winter and spring in consequence of their shelterless and naked condition, and thousands will, for like causes, follow them this winter, if Christian charity does not increase. Said a chaplain in this department: "You ask, What do the Freedmen most need? If there is any thing needful for a human body or human soul, they need that. Escaping from their masters in all cases in which they are not relieved by the presence of the Union army, and in most cases when they are, they are compelled to abandon all the little possessions which they may have. The poor and scanty clothes they wear are most commonly the only things which they bring away. The draft on the beneficence of the North is to increase in amount and in urgency with every new success of our arms. Victory will call for gratitude, and it will demand both work and sacrifice. Every defeat of the rebels will release multitudes from the house of bondage."

Clothing for the destitute must be had, and blankets more than any other clothing. The cold nights bring to the unprotected, in that climate peculiarly, pains, colds, pneumonia, and death.

It will be a shame to our Christianity if we permit the people to die in want and suffering.

The same causes that have led to so much physical suffering, have also greatly marred the educational and spiritual work among them. The well-ordered camp at Corinth, and the Christian church established there, were both broken up just at the commencement of an unprecedentedly cold winter, and the people scattered. About fifteen hundred of them went to Memphis, where they were compelled to dwell in tents, with no means of warming themselves except by making a fire on the ground in the tent.

In January, Rev. S. G. Wright and others formed a Union church at Van Buren's Camp of forty members. Many others wished to join it, but his knowledge of them was too limited to warrant his receiving them. Mr. Wright bears high testimony to the Christian character and humble devotedness of some of these people. Afterward, Mr. Wright wrote from Natchez that there were there frequent conversions. The people at Natchez suffered greatly, and the schools were at one time broken up by the persecuting spirit of a health officer, sustained by the commanding general. Both were afterward removed.

The same testimony is borne here as elsewhere to the earnestness of the people, and the readiness with which they learn.

MISSOURI AND KANSAS.

These two States, once in deadly antagonism from a determination of slaveholders to control the settlement of Kansas in favor of slavery, now, in the progress of the rebellion, have their interest linked indissolubly together. If the rebellion shall be crushed—and it would be sin to doubt it—Missouri must become a free State. Many of her best men and women see this, and are uniting their energies to educate and elevate the blacks. Kansas, though a free State, has, from her position, become a city of refuge to the slaves of rebel masters in Arkansas and Missouri; and the necessities of the Freedmen there are as great, and the needed work for them as arduous and urgent as in Missouri.

In Kansas and adjoining parts of Missouri two ordained missionaries and seven teachers have labored among the Freedmen. Schools have been successfully sustained at Wyandotte, Quindaro, Kansas City, and elsewhere. The pupils display an aptitude to learn not inferior to that of the whites. When the people can find opportunity for remunerative labor, they are ready to aid in the support of their religious teachers and schools.

In Leavenworth, the Baptists (colored) raised a subscription of three thousand dollars for a house of worship, mostly from among themselves, and every black man but one had been a slave. The Union Congregational Church at Lawrence have rebuilt their church, destroyed by Quantrell. The colored people in other places are doing nearly as well. In Westport, three colored men paid fifty dollars for a school during the summer. The Legislature of Kansas has placed the colored schools of the cities under the control and protection of the school boards.

There is great destitution and must be great suffering in this region, unless their wants can be supplied by philanthropists of the North.

A friend writes from Leavenworth concerning several companies recently come in, varying in number from twenty-five to eight hundred. These people are entirely destitute, having neither food nor clothing, nor the means of obtaining either. Many of them are sick and helpless. So numerous are they, that every place in the city that can be used for them is crowded to a most unhealthy state. And yet many are without shelter.

Rev. Mr. Copeland wrote from Kansas City: "There is much destitution among the poor, and this destitution is increasing from the rapid influx of Freedmen from Arkansas and different parts of Missouri. Wyandotte has trebled its colored population within the past year. Wages are low, work scarce, and provisions enormously high, so that when I visit the poorest families it is painful to hear the continued cry for bread. As cold weather approaches, without much aid, there will be a vast amount of suffering."

Eighteen missionaries and teachers have labored in St. Louis, Carondelet, Jefferson City, and adjacent places in Missouri—five of them for only a short time.

Impressed with the importance of St. Louis as a center of operations for the Freedmen, Rev. Mr. Candee devoted much time in efforts to promote general education among the colored people of that city. In April, he reported the organization of a Board of Education, consisting of ten colored men and four whites, some of them among the most influential men in the city. Its object is to establish a system of free schools in St. Louis and throughout the State. They will have much to contend with, and must, for some time, look to their friends in the free States for the means of paying the teachers. It is hoped they will soon be able to provide for their board.

One of our teachers has spent the most of her time in the hospitals, and has met with very encouraging success. She reports many hopeful conversions, and much earnest inquiry after the way of salvation. Concerning the general character of the people, she says: "While I have found that they are possessed of very many faults and vices, the bitter fruits of slavery, that often they are deceiful, and hypocritical, and untrue, yet at the same time I have found them possessed of capabilities and noble traits which have often surprised me. Slavery has sown many tares, but their hearts are a garden well worth the weeding. Let but the good seed be cast into this tropical soil, and a glorious harvest will be reaped both for God and the world."

KENTUCKY.

We close this survey of the deeply interesting work among the Freedmen with an inspection of Camp Nelson, Ky., where Government has kept a body of more than five thousand colored troops. Here our carnest brother Fee and a corps of efficient helpers—in all, five ministers and thirteen volunteer assistants—have been training these soldiers in school and by the preaching of the Gospel. Their progress has been most gratifying, both in letters and in moral and religious development. Mr. Fee says that, riding through the camp, (six miles in circumference,) he saw several companies resting from drill. Quite a number were poring over their primers, or first readers, but not a card was to be seen. And he adds: "In the four thousand colored men here, I have not seen one intoxicated, although I have seen white men drunk. At night, the camps of these colored men are scenes of continual prayer and praise, with frequent preaching."

We invite special attention to the work of educating these colored soldiers in which our missionaries are engaged, not only here, but in parts of Virginia, North and South-Carolina, Louisiana, and along the Mississippi, and indeed wherever they are stationed for recruiting and drill. We think it almost impossible to overestimate the importance of this work. It will have a bearing upon any possible attempt at the future reënslavement of the blacks. The colored soldiers are picked men, strong in body and active in mind. They have arms in their hands, the physical guarantee of permanent freedom, and our schools will arm their minds with knowledge, the talisman of their former masters' power over them. Thus armed and educated, the blacks may be annihilated, they can never be reënslaved. The Christian education of these soldiers will, when the war is ended, be the mightiest lever in the elevation of the race. As one of our missionaries has well said, "The colored soldiers will be leaders among colored men," the heroes, the models of admiration and imitation. If they are uneducated and degraded, ignorance and vice will prevail. If educated and religious, their return will give an irresistible impulse and influence to our schools and to all the means for the regeneration of their people, and tell decisively upon the great problem of American social and political life-the status of the colored race. If these representative men of the blacks are only ignorant though armed giants, an almost inevitable necessity will plead for keeping them as nearly as possible under their former restraints; but if they are enlightened, they will go before their people leading them onward to their proper position in the body politic, not by cringing on the one hand, or violence on the other, but by virtue of their heroic deeds in the field, their industry and thrift at home, and their intellectual and moral worth as men and citizens. Of their teachableness and future influence, Mr. Rogers says:

"The teachableness of the colored soldiers, their eagerness to learn, and their rapid progress, were alike surprising and gratifying. I have never seen more rapid progress made by any persons than by them. From what I saw and learned of the white and colored population of Kentucky, I was led to feel that the future progress of Christianity and all that is good depended in this State as much upon the black race as the white. I have been tardily led to this conclusion. God often chooses the weak things of the world to confound the mighty. I can but think that the black men to whom Brother Fee preaches there — and he preaches to not a few of either the black or white race — are destined to exert a great influence."

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY has made large grants of Bibles and Testaments in aid of our work. These have been sent mainly to Washington, D. C., Eastern Virginia, South-Carolina, and Louisiana, A few have been sent into Western Virginia, North-Carolina, and to Missouri and the West. Except those sent to New-Orleans, and to Captain Wilder at Fort Monroe, they have been distributed by the missionaries and teachers of this Association. Our endeavor has been to place a Bible in every cabin where there was one person that could read. School Testaments have been given to all the school-children who had become able to read them. Some have been given to colored soldiers, and in some instances they have been used to strengthen the family tie, and encourage men and women living together to Christian marriage; presenting to a couple so married a Bible, having the names of both written in it, the record of the marriage, and the fact that the Bible was presented to them from the American Bible Society by the American Missionary Association.

The joy that some aged Christians have expressed when they first became possessed of a Bible of their own has been truly affecting. The prospect of learning to read and owning the Bible has been one of the strongest incentives to effort with many, and has stimulated some to pray over every lesson.

THE WORK INCREASING.

This great charitable, educational, and religious work, demanded alike of the philanthropist, the Christian, and the patriot, and second in importance and urgency to no other whose claims have ever been laid before the Christian Church, it will be seen is continually magnifying and extending itself upon our hands. At our last annual meeting, we reported the employment of eighty-three missionaries and teachers for the Freedmen. Within the year just closed, there have been two hundred and fifty, and the demand for the year to come is still indefinitely greater. We seem as yet to have reached but the borderground, or at best to have penetrated only the outer fortifications of the blasting and blaspheming power of American slavery; and, on the other hand, to have but tapped the great fountain of Christian benevolence, and the vast reservoir of consecrated but yet unemployed female intellect. In the providence of God, the war power of our Government and the bayonets of our soldiers have so far battered down the walls and pried open the doors of the great prison-house of oppression, that a million of its wretched inmates, startled and cheered by the voice of a merciful God, bidding them "come forth," have rushed over its crumbling walls and through its opening doors, and been met by bands of Christian men and women, cheering them with words of kindness and sympathy, and leaving in their hands the charities of a benevolent people, and the words of eternal life. In the providence of God, the time seems near at hand when the rebellion will be crushed, the number of the freed blacks multiplied, and the work demanded of Christian benevolence become such as the world has never seen. God grant that his people may be found prepared for it, ready to give, if need be, even the spoiling of their goods, in gratitude for his mercy and obedience to his command.

HOME MISSIONS.

REGERESSION AND CLUTE RESPECTED

• THE number of home missionaries employed has been fifteen, and three colporteurs, one in Brazil. Four of the home missionaries have been laboring much of their time among the Freedmen in Kansas, Missouri, and Kentucky; three of them mainly for the whites of those States; one among the German population in Brooklyn; one in a Welsh population in Western New-York; one as an evangelist and agent of the American Missionary Association in Ohio; and the others in nortions of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, immediately bordering on the slave States, near the strongholds of the traitorous order of the Sons of Liberty.

Rev. J. Copeland has given up his congregations, and is now laboring wholly for the Freedmen in Kansas and Missouri. Rev. Mr. Fox devotes one fourth of his time to them in other parts of Kansas. Rev. G. Candee has labored almost wholly among them in St. Louis and elsewhere, Mo. Rev. J. G. Fee devotes a large share of his time to the thousands of soldiers at Camp Nelson, and Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, though having charge of a church in Ohio, has regularly visited Bethesda, Berea, and the scenes of his former charge in Kentucky. Rev. Mr. Holmes is laboring in a region so intensely in sympathy with rebellion, as to furnish a company which joined the rebels at Paducah, and have since fought against the Union. Once no friend of the Government could preach there with safety. Now a great change is manifest, and Mr. H. has more calls to preach as an evangelist than can fill.

Mr. Blanchard reports a great change in favor of freedom in Missouri, where he labors. In Kentucky, a rapid change is taking place. The power of slavery is broken. The churches at Berea and Bethesda are growing in intelligence and attachment to principle, and are rapidly approaching that second period in the missionary work when the energies and self-reliance of the churches become developed and they become a power in the land. In the providence of God, the persecutions they have endured have aided in the production of this result. Tensioning a since been red ut to mental and reduced

Brainerd.

In the last annual report it was stated that the condition of Mrs. Penfield's health had compelled her return to this country. In the winter her case became so alarming, that her husband was hastily summoned home. She lingered till April, when she entered "into the joy of her Lord.' She had labored five years in Jamaica with more than ordinary self-denial, zeal, and affectionate interest in the people. Her friends have the satisfaction of believing that her life was prolonged rather than shortened by her residence in a tropical country.

Mr. Penfield is still in this country, but will return soon to the Mission. Meanwhile, his place has been supplied by Mr. Venning.

The condition of the church for the past year has not been a happy one. The dissensions of the community have again been rife. The absence of the regular pastor has made matters worse. On the other hand, the intrigues to bring the church under the influence of false doctrine, to which reference was made last year, have been checked, and the church retains its numbers and its outward unity. There is not a little talent, vigor, and zeal among its membership; what is chiefly wanted is the healing spirit of meekness and brotherly love.

Eliot.

Since Mr. Thompson's return to this country, in the spring of 1863, the pastoral care of the church has chiefly devolved upon Mr. Wolcott. Under this, the church has continued in peace and has maintained its numbers. Mr. Wolcott, however, burdened with his many cares at Richmond, has not been able to devote himself to the people at Eliot as a settled pastor would; under the circumstances, the fact that the church has not decreased in numbers or been torn by any disputes is a matter of thankfulness. The contributions of the people to the cause of religion have diminished in consequence of the vacancy in the pastorate.

Mr. Thompson's health is such as hardly to allow him the expectation of returning to Jamaica. It is to be hoped that Eliot will soon find once more the advantage of undivided pastoral care.

Chesterfield.

Mr. Venning left Jamaica in June, 1863, on a visit to his native country, England. He returned in October, in consequence of Mrs. Venning's ill-health. Mr. Penfield leaving for home, Mr. Venning assumed the temporary charge of Brainerd. Mr. Douglass has therefore had charge of Chesterfield church and station until quite lately.

The statistical report of the church shows fourteen excommunica tions during the year, causing, with the deaths, a slight decrease in the number of members. It is the full belief, however, both of Mr. Venning and Mr. Douglass, that the exercise of discipline has both developed and increased a state of spiritual maturity in the church, very much in advance of former times. They have shown in the cases of discipline a discrimination, a mingling of tenderness with due severity, very different from those alternations of zeal and torpidity which often distinguish similar occasions in the Jamaica churches. Mr. Venning notices particularly their candor, and the absence of party or family feeling in the examination of these cases—a cheering indication that the meekness of wisdom has some prevalence in their souls.

There is a record of very great harmony in the church and community through the year past. Mr. Douglass also speaks with gratification of the great assistance rendered by the deacons in maintaining every good thing and discouraging evil, as well as of their cordial unanimity in the discharge of the important duties with which they are here charged.

The money contributions of the people during the past year have largely decreased. This is owing, in part, as at Eliot, to their constitutional negligence in the absence of their regular pastor, but also, in great measure, to the failure of the crops. The prospect of abundance for the next year is very encouraging.

The day-school has continued small, Mrs. Douglass having been able a part of the time to do little more than take a general oversight, leaving much of the instruction to a native teacher.

Mr. Venning writes:

"I am glad to be able to say that the last company of young persons we received into the church at Chesterfield give better evidence of the root of the matter being in them than most that we have received of late years. One reason for this is that most of them have Christian parents, who sent them to our day-school and Sabbath-school, which makes all the difference between the two classes of youth among us, namely, the ignorant, degraded, and hardened, and the intelligent, well-behaved, and virtuous. I would say to every missionary society, Never hesitate to support schools and teachers whereveryou send out missionaries, so that adult converts may have the means of securing a godly education to their children, remembering that in most fields nearly the whole of that good thing which the children ever receive is given them by the teachers sustained by missionary societies. Otherwise they must grow up in gross ignorance and degradation."

Mr. and Mrs. Venning have returned to Chesterfield, and he has now resumed charge of the church.

Brandon Hill.

Mr. Wilson writes from this station: "Although the church has received no accession of numbers during the year, yet I never viewed the state of things here more hopefully. Our congregation has been somewhat larger than it was last year, and the probability is that it will be still larger for the year to come. In our Sabbath-school is a large number of young people, some of whom are already members of the inquiring class, and others, from the interest they show in religious things, will doubtless soon join it. I have never felt that I had so much of the confidence and good will of the church and of the people as at the present time. I have never felt that they were so ready to cooperate with me. They never appeared more earnest or more desirous to do all they can in the work of the Lord, or more desirous to lead true Christian lives. Our Sabbath-school is larger and far more interesting than it has ever been before. One reason is that the teachers and the church generally take a more hearty and active interest in it.

"Notwithstanding the hard times, our people, or at least most of them, have given quite freely for religious purposes."

The day-school has been closed since January first, for want of a suitable school-room. The people are now building a new school-room, which will soon be opened.

Mr. Wilson concludes his letter by saying: "We feel that the Lord is with us here, and we believe that he is assisting us in his work. We rejoice in what he has done, and believe we shall see still greater things."

Providence.

The report of this church shows a slight decrease. The hopes entertained two years ago, when a large number of young people were admitted to the church, have been sadly disappointed by the relapse of many of them into evil ways. Mr. Fisher says: "The state of the young people in this country is deplorable. To think that the old people among us, who have been a great part of their days in slavery, are better Christians than the young people, is a sad reflection." The young people of Providence are in a neighborhood which gives peculiar encouragement to every evil disposition that is in them.

There has been a small school taught by Mr. Fisher's daughter, no detailed report of which has been given.

Rev. J. P. Green and Miss Mary Green reached their homes at Makawao, January twenty-second, and found a hearty welcome from the people. They enter at once upon missionary labors.

Before leaving this country, Mr. J. P. Green interested some friends here in an effort which he proposed to make for the purchase of a building and establishing a seminary for the education of Hawaiian females. The building has been secured, with some adjoining lands, and the seminary will soon be started. Many of the missionaries on the islands regard this enterprise as one of great importance, and

Mr. Green writes of great perplexity among his people as to means of support. Wheat-raising has hitherto been their principal dependence. This, owing to low prices, has become so unprofitable as to force them to turn their thoughts to something else; but with great perplexity as to the prospect of finding any thing else on which they can depend permanently.

The statistics of the churches Mr. Green is, at present, unable definitely to give. Many have died, many have removed, and many have been suspended from fellowship. The unhappy decrease in the numbers of the people still continues, with scarcely a hope of arresting it before it ends in the extinction of the Hawaiian race.

Mr. Green, in his last letter, describes the course of his exercises. Of these perhaps the most interesting is his early Sabbath morning Scripture exercise. In this, which is attended by the most inquiring minds of the church, he pursues such a course of thorough, searching questioning as to bring out all their thoughts. Those who attend this exercise, he remarks, are evidently growing in the knowledge of divine things. " No exercise," he says, " do they value more than the early Sabbath morning Scripture reading, and none, I think, is more profitable."

Mr. Green speaks of the annual exhibition of the schools in his district, and of the generally creditable appearance of the children in their exercises. He names mathematics particularly as something in which the Hawaiians delight and easily excel-

The monthly concert is maintained, and the people have, during the year, contributed sixty dollars to the Marquesan Mission.

Mr. Green speaks of the great interest which his more intelligent people take in our present struggle, and their fervent hope that the rebellion, and its evil cause, may soon be alike extinguished, and our country, to which, under God, they themselves owe all, may itself, purged from sin and exalted by righteousness, become the glory of all Rev. Missionaries—Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D., Mrs. Bradley.

Mr. Odell, who formerly filled the place of superintendent of the printing-office, has returned to this country, on account of failing health. The entire care of the office now falls on Dr. Bradley, who earnestly pleads for help. He calls for two assistants, one of them a practical printer, to aid him in the office and the Mission.

The expenses of this Mission have been met by the income from the printing office. During the year, Dr. Bradley has printed nine hundred and sixty-six thousand pages of religious tracts, and it has only been for want of funds that he has not yet printed his translations. of Job. Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, and Isaiah.

Dr. Bradley preaches twice on the Sabbath, and holds daily, morning and noon, religious services for the people about him. Occasionally he labors in different parts of the city, giving, almost daily, tracts to applicants at his house or office. All who purchase books are presented with portions of the Word of God and a few tracts. The little native church is watched over with great solicitude. One of its members, Sampan, eighteen years old, appears remarkably well, and Dr. Bradley hopes to train him for the ministry.

A son of Dr. Bradley is in this country, pursuing a course of education to fit him for missionary labor in Siam.

OJIBUE AND OTTAWA MISSION.

Missionaries-Rev. GEO. N. SMITH, Mrs. SMITH.

This Mission, as its name indicates, is among Indians of two different tribes, Ojibues and Ottawas, living in the north-western part of Michigan, on Grand Traverse Bay. A portion of Mr. Smith's labors are with the white population, and his church is composed of both. Some seasons of peculiar religious interest have been enjoyed during the year. At one time, Mr. Smith said, "our native members are growing in Christian consistency of life, and might, in this respect, compare not unfavorably with more enlightened communities. They are also steadily industrious."

Two native Indians and six whites have been received into the church, which appears to increase in stability and usefulness. A larger number of communicants are reported as present at the communion seasons than in any previous year; and the freedom of the Indians of his charge from the use of intoxicating drinks, even at the "Indian payments," the most trying of all occasions, is mentioned as a special cause of thankfulness. The reports of this and preceding years give the most satisfactory assurance that this little church in the wilderness, of something more than fifty members, is a branch of the true vine, bearing fruit to the honor of God, to endure to eternal life.

STATIONS: GOOD HOPE, MO TAPPAN, AVERY, AND VICTORIA. Missionaries-Rev. H. H. HINNAN, M.D. Rev. George P. Claylin, Rev. C. F. Winseip, Rev. E. J. Adams, Samuel J. Whiton, Mrs. Hinman, Mrs. CLAPIDE, Mrs. Mais, Mrs. Wisseir, Mrs. Whiton.

Under appointment—Mrs. Adams, Miss H. Marson. Native Assistants-Rev. GEO. N. JOWETT, JOHN JOHNSON. under colonial authority.

Rev. Mr. Winship and wife have been in this country throughout the year. Rev. Mr. Claffin and wife, having previously obtained the consent of the Committee, returned to this country in April last. They had been in Africa more than four years, and were much debilitated by the effects of the climate. They brought with them one of the scholars from the Mission school, Henry Ward Beecher. Mrs. Mair, also, by the advice of physicians and the recommendation of the Mission, is now in this country. Her health is much improved, and she expects to rejoin the Mission with renewed power for exertion.

The absence of such a number from a Mission previously too weak for the work required, is detrimental to its progress, and has thrown a heavy burden on the remaining missionaries that threatens serious injury to their health. The health of Mr. and Mrs. Hinman is so much impaired that they are recommended to seek relief by a visit to the United States. The need of a reinforcement to the Mission is thus clearly indicated, and the Executive Committee would joyfully welcome to this field two ordained missionaries and their wives. Some addition to their number seems necessary to save from being crushed those now on the ground.

Good Hope station has been graciously visited this year, and a few souls, it is hoped, have passed from death unto life. In March, Mr. Adams wrote that there seemed to be quite a religious interest in the mission family at this station, and eight of the older scholars made a profession of religion. One of the oldest boys at the Mission seemed to have his heart set on the Christian ministry, and manifests his earnestness by going to some of the native villages and talking to the people about a Saviour. He also teaches the school formerly under the care of Rev. G. N. Jewett, which is doing well.

The station at Mo TAPPAN, under the charge of Mr. Claffin, has been closed, for the present at least. It was found impossible to carry it on during his absence. On Mr. Claffin's return, he will probably be stationed in one of the most important native villages, and thus be brought into more intimate contact with a larger number of the people.

The AVERY STATION, for a long time vacant after Mr. Winship's return, has been placed under the charge of Rev. George N. Jewett, a native, who has for many years proved his faithfulness to the cause of his Saviour.

At the request of a Christian friend from Sierra Leone, who has been at a considerable expense in fitting up a building for school and religious services, the Mission will reoccupy the ground at Victoria, vacated for a time in the expectation that it would be occupied as a mission station by English missionaries, Sherbro Island having passed under colonial authority.

Mr. Whiton will take charge of the school at Good Hope. He has also three regular places for preaching — at York Island, Kielab, and Bonthe. These services are represented as seasons of interest, the chiefs usually attending, one of whom declares he can not do his heathen ways any more, but "prays to the missionaries' God every time."

It can not be supposed that a heathen people have any intelligent desire for Christian missions and Christian instruction, knowing what the claims and spirit of the Gospel are. To suppose this would be to rank them higher than the unconverted in a Christian land, whom evangelical Christians regard as opposed to the prevalence and spread of vital Christianity. Yet even these heathen see some of the benefits that always attend the establishment of Christian institutions in any land, and, with more or less enlightenment, they desire and ask, often with affecting earnestness, for the presence and labors of Christian missionaries among them. They are often ready to make concessions for this end.

Thus explained, Africa presents an open field for missionary labor. The petitions coming from neighboring chiefs and peoples for missionaries and teachers are often very affecting, and nothing but the want of men and means prevents an indefinite extension of missionary work there. Throughout the limits of British Sherbro, and along the Bargroo, Jong, Boom, and Kittam Rivers, there are large and accessible fields where the missionaries would be gladly received by the people and chiefs. Some of these chiefs have given proof that they appreciate in some measure the claims of the Gospel by their labors for the suppression of war and the establishment of peace and their regard for the Christian Sabbath. Mr. Claffin reports the death of one of these, Bea Bungo, who, in the last days of his life, on his death-bed, frequently prayed to God for forgiveness "for Christ's sake."

The Committee would repeat the conviction expressed in previous years, that God has yet some great good in store for Africa, that a great work is to be done for her, in which American Christians must largely engage, and that the providences of God are even now pointing them in that direction. He now calls upon us to bring all the tithes into the storehouse, to prove him and see if he will not pour out a rich blessing on that people. To attempt the conversion of Africa with the few feeble missionaries sent there, while a hundredfold more instrumentalities for evil go forth from us every year, is as wise as would be an attempt to subdue our great rebellion by the sending forth a single brigade of soldiers. Why will not the church give her sons and daughters to carry the Gospel into that dark continent with a zeal and self-sacrifice more nearly proportioned to the magnitude and importance of the work?

The problem of evangelizing the numerous and stalwart races of Western and Central Africa has never yet been solved. The solution of it, we think, is to be greatly facilitated by the elevation of the emandipated blacks of this continent, who, when converted and educated, may, as missionaries, ministers, and teachers, carry the Gospel to their fatherland and found a Christian empire on the continent where the slave-hunt had threatened perpetual barbarism.

Three hundred and sixty life-members have been added to the Association since our last Report. The death of thirty-eight life-members has been reported. The whole number of life-members from the beginning has been three thousand eight hundred and thirty-five. From the Treasurer's report it will be seen that the receipts for the fiscal year have been $95,395.83, against $57,404.68, sixty-six per cent increase of the preceding year. The estimated value of clothing, etc., for the Freedmen, not included in the above, is $44,340, making the total value disbursed by the Association $139,735.83, an excess over last year of about ninety-three and eight tenths per cent. The total amount disbursed for the Freedmen, including the estimated value of the clothing, is $100,128.41.

Of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY, in magazine form, there have been published each month an average of 5700 copies, and in the folio form 16,500 per month, an aggregate of 266,400 copies. We have reason to believe that this has created an interest in the work for the Freedmen, that has secured for them thousands of dollars through the treasuries of other societies.

CONCLUSION.

In concluding our Report, we wish to express our gratitude to the Government, which, with the vast burden and complications of war upon its hands, has yet found time to regard the wants of the needy and degraded, and has lent to us its efficient assistance in furnishing transportation and supplies for the work among the Freedmen; to members of the Cabinet, for the favor shown to our work, and to the commanders of military departments, who, in Virginia, North and South-Carolina, and the departments of Tennessee and of the Gulf, have made provision for facilitating the education of the Freedmen, the protection and comfort of the teachers, and the general prosperity of the schools. To them and many officers in subordinate command, "Superintendents of Negro Affairs," and to some private soldiers, the work among the Freedmen is indebted, under God, for much of its success.

Turning from these helpers at the South, we are impelled to the utterance of our gratitude to the many kind hearts and busy hands that have furnished clothing for the suffering, to the families that have given their sons and daughters to the work as teachers, and to the thousands of Christian pastors and people who have contributed to our aid, and in the closet, at the family altar, and in the great congregation have borne us and our great work in the arms of faith and prayer up to the throne of Divine Grace. But above all, we would lift our eyes, and reverently and gratefully offer our most hearty thanks to the Father of all mercies who has inspired the hearts of all these, and who, by his good spirit and kind providence, has guided and cheered and blessed us thus far. To his good hand we again commit ourselves and our work, invoking the Shekinah of his presence to go before us, a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, to guide us through the wilderness of our toils, till the Freedmen shall be safely established in the land, a prosperous and enlightened people, and the Gospel, with its ineffable blessings, shall have free course throughout the earth.

CO-OPERATION OF DENOMINATIONS.

The strictly evangelical and yet undenominational character of the American Missionary Association has enabled it to invite the cooperation of all Christians and churches of orthodox faith, especially in work for the Freedmen. The response has been most gratifying, and the list of teachers embraces Methodists, Baptists, Reformed Dutch, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists. Some churches of these several denominations are supporting teachers under our Association, and two bodies of Christians, the Open Communion Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists, have selected this organization as their sole instrumentality for reaching the Freedmen. The former of these bodies have made an arrangement with us by which their teachers and missionaries, chosen and supported by themselves, are sent under commission from us, and with our facilities for reaching the people, to teach and preach and found churches, if God shall so prosper them, according to their own denominational forms and opinions untrammeled by us. Our organization is unsectarian. It seeks only to send evangelical truth and influences to the people. We are ready to become the channel through which any evangelical denomination may pour their healing waters of truth according to their own views of Church polity and doctrinal symbolization. We are ready to enlarge this our channel, and we invite the serious consideration of the several respected bodies of Christians now sending us their teachers to the inexpensive and yet adequate facilities which are thus open to infant institutions, at which rebels modeled and copperheads aware, normath mand-the respect of those foes of human freedom. EXTRACTS FROM THE LETTERS OF TEACHERS AND OTHERS.

PUBLISHED IN THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY.

FROM VIRGINIA.

When I first entered the school, it had a life of six weeks. One hundred and sixty or seventy children were there—mostly in the alphabet. They seemed to look over the little world in which they lived with a kind of vague wonder. They instinctively shrank from the scowling rebel along the streets. The children of those to whom their fathers had given their life-toil, hunted them with a malice truly devilish. But every day the storm-tossed waters have been settling down, till the ark of freedom rests on the solid earth and waits for the soil to dry.

Now, the timid, defenseless flock has grown strong and numerous, and walks over the field where the wolf gorged and the lion wasted, with conscious security. More than four hundred children and many adults who have learned their alphabet within the year, now slowly but intelligently read the precious Bible, so long to them a sealed book. Many of these are studying arithmetic, geography, and writing. The man who would now dash from their lips one drop from the cup of freedom must be a daring monster.

Outside of the school, too, the missionary's heart has been cheered. A large amount of clothing has been distributed among more than six thousand people; and though it has little more than kept pace with the inevitable wear, it has still covered many a shivering limb and soothed many an aching heart. Night and day desolate homes have been visited, dirty hovels cleaned, sickrooms cheered and comforted, where white human sympathy had been hitherto unknown. The incipient elements of a prosperous and happy people, these infant institutions, at which rebels mocked and copperheads swore, now command the respect of those foes of human freedom. The moral aspect of this field, where so visibly "God is marching on," is truly delightful.

Nearly a hundred living lights, trophies of converting grace, are shedding their benign light over the field. Slowly and silently has the empire of ignorance and semi-barbarism melted before the light of reason. Men, before slugglishly moved to labor and toil by the lash, now cheered on by hopes of freedom, evince an energy truly astonishing. Does any one talk of the natural inferiority of the race? Shame! Where on the face of the earth have a people been nourished into such life and vigor, by the breath of a single summer, though it were the warm breath of God-given freedom?

Let any political Baal build its altar and spread its sacrifice here, where newborn freedom has had but an hour's sunshine, and see if the reponse of an enlightened country would not crush it out of life. I know that you rejoice with us in this signal success of our work, though the vessels are frail and feeble. I know we shall have your sympathy too, for it is a work of intense labor.

FROM ANOTHER TEACHER IN VIRGINIA.

I asked one of my pupils, about forty years of age: "What would you take for the knowledge you have gained within the last six months?" She replied, "Madam, I was thinking of that same thing this morning," and starting up with her whole soul in the answer, she said: "Nothing, Lord, nothing. Money could do me no good when I leave this world, but this book," holding the New Testament in her hand, "the knowledge of this book will go with me into eternity, I shall always have the benefit of it." I thought, here is true Christian philosophy, something that will endure to everlasting life.

To be able to read the Word of God is the great desire of their hearts. Said one, holding up the New Testament: "I pray God to let me live till I can read this book anywhere, and then, when I die, I want it buried with me." A woman, about fifty years of age, commenced to read in two letters the first of March; she now reads quite fluently in the New Testament, and spells readily in three syllables, and has nearly committed to memory the Ten Commandments. She gives good evidence of having found the pearl of great price.

She continues to give marked evidence of her change, and is trying to lead her unconverted husband to Christ, and is also teaching him to read. I gave her a New Testament, of large print, and took away the old one of small print for younger eyes. When she was about to leave the room, she went to the table, as she thought unobserved, took up the little Testament, and kissed it most affectionately, then laid it down carefully, as though it was hard to part with the book which had conveyed light to her mind, and life to her soul. She often breaks out in expressions like these while reading the word of God: "Oh! how good! how beautiful!" The word unbound occurred in her lesson, the other day, and she exclaimed: "How good to feel unbound!" Another of my pupils, while a slave, was almost murdered by repeated and terrible whippings, and her blood now stains the floor in a chamber in a house near Ferry Point, where her owners wreaked their vengeance on this helpless woman. She lives to suffer physically, but forgives her enemies, and hopes God will forgive such as are alive.

FROM ANOTHER.

There are a good many old women who are Christians and can not read, and I read the Bible to them. I never realized what a blessing it was to be able to read, until I saw the tears trickling down their wrinkled and care-worn cheeks, called forth by the words of the blessed Jesus. It does me as much good as them, and I feel very near God among these old pilgrims who are almost home. One old man of a hundred and eight years is trying to learn to read. He has been out of bondage only a few weeks, but has been a follower of Christ for seventy years. When asked if he had not prayed for this time, he replied: "I have prayed for God's will to be done, for I knew that whatever he did would be right." His prayers are full of childlike faith, and he prays that the teachers may prove faithful to the end. So pray we all ! be in many more than the part of the best of the state of the part of the part

THE FREED PEOPLE TAKING CARE OF THEMSELVES.

The freed people here are industrious, and being in a more settled condition than in many parts of the country, are abundantly able to take care of themselves. Their mode of living is simple, and they find a ready sale for their vegetables and fruit, and often at exorbitant prices. The result of which is, that numbers of them have but little idea of the real value of money, which they as freely expend for cakes, tobacco, and other trifles; but many are wisely laying aside their hundreds and even thousands of dollars, to purchase homescattle, horses, etc. Most of the land on this (Hilton Head) island has been reserved for Government purposes. Portions of it are leased to cotton-growers, who hire the negrous to work for them, but the greater part the negroes are allowed to cultivate for themselves. It is a treat to ride over these islands, and see their flourishing crops of cotton, corn, sweet potatoes, ground peas, (or peanuts,) water-melons, etc., and their neat little garden-patches. Surely, the land could have been under no better cultivation in slavery times, and now, too, the work is mostly performed by women and children, for all the men of a suitable age are in the army. But their out-door employment has led them to neglect too much their houses; and few have any idea of making them comfortable and attractive. The greatest want here is in window-glass and sashes. These are not so much needed at this season of the year, but in the winter, and even in the fall and spring, when the air is in the least raw and chilly, the wooden shutters are closed, and the only light that enters their cabins is through the door, which usually stands open. And so in the sunny South, during the most delightful months of the year, these people live in darkened habitations, while, as a consequence, uncleanliness prevails, and disease is engendered. Charity, in my estimation, could not be more wisely bestowed than in leading them to the use of window-glass and sashes, thus revealing things unseemly, and insensibly teaching a lesson of purity and cleanliness. syniggida ofdivior ban believes a

There seems to be more of a religious element in the character of the negroes upon some plantations than others, owing perhaps to the different influences to which they have been subjected, both before and since the rebellion. Here this element greatly prevails, and meetings are held two or three times on the Sabbath, and on every alternate evening during the week. On Sabbath morning, (the "Praise-house" being near by,) we are awakened at half-past four by the ringing of a bell, and a half-hour later we listen to songs of praise-for these houses of worship are rightly named, their religious exercises consisting mostly of singing. And sweet to us is the dawn of the Sabbath-day, ushered in by the rich melody of their voices, as they sing the time-honored tunes which recall to our minds the home-circle and prayer-meeting. Yet these poor people are as sheep without a shepherd, and sadly need an instructor in the Divine life, to teach them that religion is not all an emotional feeling, but must be daily practiced in their lives. This truth we endeavor to impress upon the minds of the children, both in the Sabbath and day-schools; at the former, the adults are frequently among our most attentive listeners. Oh! how often I long for that Spirit which used to descend in olden times, upon the young men and young women, that I may edify their famishing souls! the the leaf Saldath, eleven meetred haptiess, and here united with the Sal

I grow more and more interested in the work to be done among these poor people just emerging from under the blighting influence of slavery. It is a trying crieis with them now. May God take their interests wholly into his hands, and be their Protector and Teacher, and preserve them from all the schemes of the wicked. I feel that I could gladly give my life to the work, if God willed it. Comparing them with the free colored people, I am convinced that the time to labor for them is now, before all the obstacles are placed in their way which we find among those who have longer enjoyed freedom. Freedom is all new to them, and their hearts are full of gratitude and thanksgiving, and there is a teachable spirit among them. They have not yet lost confidence in their Northern friends, but are ready to be guided by them. But among the free colored here, there is a cold suspicion and distrust of white men to be overcome. They have been gulled and cheated by them so often, that they regard all whites as their enemies. A few of the more intelligent, perhaps, have learned to discriminate between friends and enemies; but the mass set them all down together as their foes, of 101 MIND pointed a line handling a deal of Il alternative and

The great difficulty with these people seems to be, that they have no idea of the wickedness of sin. They most all want religion, that is, they want to be made happy and prepared to die, and they feel a sort of longing for something better and higher than their poor, empty life affords; but if they have never danced and sworn, and "cut up high," they seem to have no idea that they are really sinners in the sight of God. Do pray that the Spirit may be given to convince of sin. And now may God teach you in regard to sending another laborer here. Don't send any one, unless they feel that they are clearly called of God, for if he calls them he will equip them. And may it be some one who has had some real acquaintance with the colored people, and who, when they come to be surrounded by them, and that under the most disagreeable circumstances, as is the case in some of these wards, will not find that they had not really counted the cost. And above all, may it be one who has a deep sympathy with Christ in his love for perishing souls are how radius at led fliw full to homesal at they

I found last night, just before I left the ward, one who told me that I had talked with him over in the other ward from which he had been brought here. "I told you I wasn't a Christian, then," said he. "Well, are you one now?" I asked. "Yes," he said, "I sought the Lord and found him." On further talk with him, I found his soul seemed full of that joy and peace.

Oh! I could tell you so many incidents showing what God is ready to do for make up boxes of clothing for the Proclimen, that is, for the wom-sloped eath

I find more and more to encourage me in my work. I can not but feel and see that the Spirit of God is working in many hearts. But I am constantly taught that the work is all of God, and that he alone can make words effectual. I am humbled by finding that those on whom I have expended the most labor often, and of whom I have the brightest hopes, are kept back from Christ, while some passing word, bestowed on others, has borne fruit to eternal life.

The Lord has given us much encouragement in our labors recently. The evening meetings in the chapel have been very solemn, and a number are inquiring: "What shall I do to be saved?" About thirty have manifested their desire to find the Saviour, and a number of these are now rejoicing in Christ. On the last Sabbath, eleven received baptism, and have united with the Soldiers' Christian Association. We hope that this may prove only the beginning of a precious work of grace in these barracks.

This has been my first acquaintance with the colored people; and while I have found that they are possessed of very many faults and vices, the bitter fruits of slavery, that often they are deceitful, and hypocritical, and untrue, yet at the same time I have found them possessed of capabilities and noble traits which have often surprised me. Slavery has sown many tares, but their hearts are a garden well worth the weeding. Let but the good seed be cast into this tropical soil and a glorious harvest will be reaped both for God and the world.

OUR DANGER AND OUR DUTY.

THE friends of missions must rejoice in having the obstacles to foreign and home missions removed. One great obstacle to them both has been, and still is, American slavery. If either the rebellion or the party aiming to overthrow the present Administration is successful, slavery will continue. Therefore, the friends of missions feel the importance of quelling the rebellion and sustaining the Government. It is both a political and a religious duty, for the rebellion strikes at the life of our liberties, and at the destruction of our religious privileges. Let then the President of the United States, and all loyal men in au. thority, and all our loyal public writers and speakers, be remembered by Christians in their closets, at their family altars, and in their places of public worshin. While they labor to remove the obstacles to peace and prosperity founded upon righteousness, the equality of all men before the law, and the triumph of liberty, social order, and the maintenance of our civil and religious privileges, the perpetuity of our democratic frame of government, and the prevalence of social, political, and religious principles throughout the world, they should be supported by a loyal people. They will thus deserve the united support of all who are loyal to God and their country. Shall they not have it?

Peace in righteousness! Let us pray for such a peace, for none other will be beneficial or enduring. With such a peace, our prosperity, secular and spiritual, is secured, for God will be its author and sustainer.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

A CHRISTIAN lady, who has not only been very active but very successful also sends us the following, which we commend most earnestly to all our readers. Will not some one in each congregation move immediately in this thing?

"I would suggest that the sewing-circles throughout the land be urged to make up boxes of clothing for the Freedmen, that is, for the women and children, and that collections be taken up in the churches to furnish the material. This plan has worked well in Mr. Beecher's church."

FREEDOM AND SLAVERY CONTRASTED.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Morning Star, writing from Beaufort, N. C., mentions an instructive instance of freedom and slavery contrasted. He was introduced to a young colored woman, an intelligent Christian disciple, among the freed slaves, who told him that a few years ago she felt that she must and would learn to read—that she got visitors to read the labels on their trunks to her—then got a primer, which she used to hide under her bonnet in har bandbox. Her master in some way mistrusted that she had learned to read, and one day called her in great haste and said: "Go to the library and bring me the first volume of Hannah More." Being thrown off her guard by his unusual and excited manner, and fearing to disobey his order, she went and brought him the book, "There," said he, "Malinda, I thought you had learned to read, now I know you have." "Then," said Malinda to me, "he stripped me, and whipped me almost to death!" "O Mr. Knowlton!" said she, "can I ever be thankful enough, can I ever be thankful enough, that my children can now learn to read the Bible without being whipped to death for it?"

The Nineteenth Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held at Brooklyn, New-York, in the Plymouth Church, commencing Wednesday, October twenty-fifth, 1865, at three o'clock P.M. Secretary Strieby called the meeting to order, and nominated Rev. Dr. Patton, of New-Haven, to act as President of the meeting.

Dr. Patton read the Seventy-second Psalm, offered prayer, and delivered a brief address.

The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read by Rev. Henry Belden, Recording Secretary.

Deacon George A. Thatcher, of Bangor, Maine, was appointed Assistant Secretary.

Lewis Tappan, Esq., Treasurer of the Association, read the annual statement of receipts and expenditures, by which it appeared that the cash receipts during the past year, including $5,249.90 borrowed money, amounted to $139,660.37; goods, $61,674.40; making a total of $201,334.77.

The report of the Treasurer was referred to a Committee, consisting of Dr. T. Ritter, Mr. J. O. Bennett, and Rev. Henry Belden.

Rev. George Whipple, Corresponding Secretary, read an abstract of the Annual Report of the Executive Committee, which was referred to a committee, consisting of Rev. H. W. Beecher, Rev. Edward Taylor, Rev. S. W. Magill, Rev. Hiram Eddy, Rev. Edward N. Kirk, D.D.

On motion, a Business Committee was appointed, consisting of Rev. S. W. S. Dutton, D.D., Rev. R. S. Storrs, D.D., Rev. Alvin Bartlett, Rev. M. E. Strieby, Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, and Simon Page, Esq.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

On motion, a Committee on Nominations was appointed, as follows: Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Rev. S. A. Baker, Rev. David Root, Rev. Joel Mann, Albert Woodruff, Esq., and Thomas Ritter, M.D.

The Business Meeting adjourned till Thursday morning at halfpast nine o'clock.

Wednesday evening, Public Services were held in the church. Rev. Dr. Patton assisted in the devotional exercises; Rev. Dr. Kirk, of Boston, preached the Annual Sermon on the Unity of the Human Race, and Our Duties to the Freedmen of this Country, from the text, Acts 17: 26.

Thursday morning, a meeting for prayer was held at half-past eight o'clock. An hour was spent in devotional exercises, Rev. Richard B. Thurston, of Stamford, Connecticut, presiding, and several brethren taking part in the exercises.

Mr. Thurston read from Isaiah 58 and Micah 4, and said: "In order that our prayers may be acceptable to God, and be answered in blessings bestowed, we must pray in the line of the divine purposes. There is mysteriousness in prayer; but there is also much made known concerning the purposes of God in connection with our supplications; and if we are not guided by revelation, we can not pray with true faith—we pray as into the atmosphere.

The passages which have been read give us light here; and it is our happiness this morning, that our prayers for this Society, with its aims and endeavors, are in the line of the revealed purposes of God. Those passages relate to Christian times. "The foundations of many generations" which are to be "raised up," can not be the peculiar Jewish institutions; they pertained to the covenant which "waxed old;" they have "vanished away" forever.

The terms apply most fitly to God's original institutions in Para-

The terms apply most fitly to God's original institutions in Paradise, Dominion—which is the right of property in all things inferior to man, in which in part the divine image of man consists—the Sababath and the family. These are the inheritance which God, the impartial Father, has given to all the children of men. They bind mankind to him, and secure mutual welfare. History teaches us that men have departed from them only to fill the world with unrighteousness and misery. Let them be everywhere perfectly restored, the world will be "Paradise regained."

The passage in Micah is often quoted as a beautiful prophecy of universal peace. It is as much a prophecy of universal emancipation. When "the nations shall learn war no more," they shall sit every man under his vine and his fig-tree—every man, then a freeman, having the right of property.

The war has restored to a race the foundations which God laid at the beginning; and it comes to pass that we are laboring and praying in the line of his revealed purposes.

The business meeting was opened at half-past nine o'clock, by reading the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Psalm by the President; Prayer was offered by Rev. Theron Baldwin, D.D.

The minutes of yesterday's meeting were read by the Recording Secretary, and approved.

Setretary Whipple read letters from Rev. Horace James, of Newbern, North-Carolina, from Gen. O. O. Howard, Chief of the Bureau of Freedmen, from Gen. Fisk, Superintendent of Freedmen at Nashville, Tennessee, and from Rev. Mansfield French, of South-Carolina.

The Committee on Business made a report by the Rev. Dr. Dutton, Chairman, offering a series of Resolutions.

The report of the Committee was accepted, and the first resolution was taken up.

Remarks were made by Rev. G. Whipple, Rev. S. W. Magill, Rev. Dr. Patton, and Rev. Dr. Dutton, on the Christian character and eminent virtues of our deceased officers. The resolution was then adopted.

The second resolution was adopted without debate.

The third resolution, after some discussion, was recommitted, and Rev. H. W. Beecher was added to the Committee. They soon after reported a substitute for the third resolution, which was adopted.

The fourth resolution was discussed and adopted.

Dr. Ritter, of the Committee on the Treasurer's Report, moved that it be approved, and published with the proceedings of the meeting.

The motion was carried.

The fifth resolution was discussed and passed.

On motion, Rev. Dr. Dutton, Rev. W. B. Brown, and G. Whipple were appointed a committee in relation to the declinature of Mr. L. Tappan, of a reëlection as Treasurer.

Recess till half-past two o'clock.

At half-past two o'clock the Association reassembled. The sixth resolution was discussed and adopted.

The seventh resolution was read, and after remarks by several members present, was amended and adopted.

The eighth resolution was presented, discussed, and adopted.

Rev. G. Whipple offered the following resolution, which was passed:

Resolved, That we cordially approve the efforts of the colored people to avail themselves of the advantages of the "Homestead Law" to procure legal possession of government lands, and that we earnestly recommend that some organized practical means be devised to give them the aid they ask of us for securing this object.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, Rev. Dr. Dutton and Rev. W. B. Brown officiating; after which business was resumed.

The Committee on Nomination of Officers for the ensuing year reported by Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Chairman, and their report was adopted as follows, namely:

The Secretaries and Treasurer are ex-officio members of the Executive Committee.

Recess till half-past seven. On motion, it was Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be tendered to Rev. Dr. Kirk, for his sermon last evening, and a copy be requested for publication.

Rev. E. Taylor, from the Committee on the Report of the Executive Committee, reported as follows, namely:

"The Committee to whom was referred the Report of the Executive Committee, respectfully report, that they are pleased with its spirit, commend the action of the Committee during the past year. approve its plans for the year to come, recommend the adoption of the report, and that it be printed with the Minutes." Adopted.

Resolved, That when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet at the call of the Executive Committee.

Mr. C. Pepper read a paper setting forth a plan of organizing a Land Company, in behalf of both white and colored, in the South. It was referred to the Executive Committee.

Rev. W. B. Brown, from the Committee on the declinature of Mr. Lewis Tappan, offered the following, which was adopted:

"Our esteemed fellow-laborer and life-long friend of the colored race, Lewis Tappan, Esq., who, from the organization of the Association, has acted as its Treasurer, having declined a re-nomination to that office, we deem this a fitting occasion to express to him our gratitude, as a Society, for his long and valuable services, which for the most part have been gratuitous, and our sincere regret that advancing age should, in his view, render it imperative in him to withdraw from the office which he has filled for so many years with marked ability and success."

The Association then took a recess till half-past seven o'clock P.M.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Dr. Patton opened the meeting with reading the Scripture and prayer, Secretary Whipple made a brief statement of the operations of the Association, Rev. S. W. Magill made a brief address, followed by Rev. H. W. Beecher, and Rev. R. S. Storrs, D.D.

The thanks of the Association were voted to the Trustees of the Church for the use of their house, and to the people of Brooklyn for their hospitality. The minutes of the meeting were referred to the Executive Committee for revision and record, and the Association adjourned with the benediction by Rev. Dr. Patton.

RESOLUTIONS.

all big to made at the state of the like falls

Resolved, That in this, our annual gathering, we recognize with gratitude the mercies of our Heavenly Father, as shown to us in the general health of our missionaries and teachers, in the success attending their labors, and in the favor he has given us among the people: and we reverently bow with submission to his will in the removal by death of our venerable President, Rev. David Thurston; of that noble Christian man and ardent friend of the slave, Mr. Arthur Tappan, one of the oldest officers of the Association; of Hon. John P. Elton, one of our Vice Presidents and a most liberal donor; and of nineteen others, our fellow-laborers as missionaries or life-members.

- 2. That, as Christians and citizens of the republic, we acknowledge the overruling providence of God in the events of this wonderful year, with joy and thanksgiving for the right termination of the bloody civil war by the subjugation of rebellion and the emancipation of millions of slaves, and with resignation to that inscrutable providence which has permitted the hand of the assassin to strike down the man of the age, Abraham Lincoln-the President of the nation, and the emancipator of the slave.
- 3. That the idea of emancipation which carries with it no protection of person and property, no advantage of the laws and institutions of the land-equal and impartial—is delusive and pernicious. In this age, and in this nation, there can be no meaning to liberty which leaves a man stripped of all civil rights, and free only as the beasts of the forest are free. Emuncipation and liberty are but empty and mocking words if they do not convey the idea and rights of citizenship; and we protest against excluding men from the rights of citizenship, civil or political, on account of their color.
- 4. That the National Government by freeing the slaves lays itself under the highest civil as well as moral obligation, to protect them from the violence or wrongs that may be practiced upon them by their former masters or others; to give them attainable access to the use of the soil; and to guarantee to them, most fully, all the rights implied in the use already granted them of lands abandoned by rebel owners, including the produce of the cultivation of those lands.
- 5. That the Association accepts most cheerfully the new and enlarged responsibility laid upon it by the widened field opened to it in the South, and by the favor shown it by the loyal and Christian public; and it pledges itself, in humble dependence on God, to do its utmost to extend its missionary, educational, and philanthropic benefactions to the colored race;
- 6. That, in the spirit of its unsectarian character, this Association renews its proffer and invitation to all evangelical Christians to use its channels for reaching the freedmen : and it returns its sincere thanks for the liberal donations and pledges made to it by philanthropists and Christians of various names; to those denominations of Christians who have acted through it in the work at the South, and particularly to the Congregationalists who, at their recent council at Boston, recommended to the churches to make to it the munificent contribution of $250,000 for the current year; and it gives its piedge to use, as was designed, the whole of this sum, when collected, in our work among the freedmen.
- 7. That the inability of the colored people to secure the use of abandoned lands 7. That the inability of the colored people to secure the use of abandoned lands in season for planting, and the general restoration of the lands they have occupied to the former rebel owners, and which leaves these colored people without homes and food, foreshadow an unparalleled destitution among them the coming winter, and call upon this Association not merely to redouble its efforts to send them clothing to keep them from freezing, but to furnish them with food to keep them from starving.
- 8. That the Executive Committee of this Association be requested to appoint a committee to memorialize, in person or otherwise, the President, in relation to the rights of the colored people to the use of the abandoned and confiscated lands hitherto assigned to them, to cooperate with the Freedmen's Bureau in its measures for their assistance, and to devise a practical plan for providing food for their pressing wants the coming winter. Cheeds the cheener of their home, and to the pandles their hospitality. The minutes of the morning were released to the

REPORT

INSTRUMENTAL ANNUAL MERHAD.

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

By the good hand of our God upon us, we are permitted to meet once more in our annual gathering. Rejoicing in the general prosperity which his mercy has granted us, we are also constrained to recognize his hand in the afflictive providence which has taken from us the honored and venerable President of the Association, Rev. David Thurston, of Maine, who died in the eighty-seventh year of his age, full of good works, leaving a record among men of faithfulness as a minister of Christ, and of self-sacrificing devotion to the interests of the poor and oppressed; and Arthur Tappan, of Connecticut, one of the earliest officers of the Association, and a Vice-President at the time of his death-a man of singular uprightness and industry during a long business life, and whose very name has been throughout the land a synonym for a friend of the enslaved. They have been joined in the land of the blessed by four, who, as foreign missionaries, and by three, who, as missionaries to the freedmen, have partaken of their care, and by twelve of the life-members of the Association.

RELIGIOUS EFFORTS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

The storm of war has passed away from our beloved land—the bow of peace spans our sky, and the doom of slavery is sealed. For these great blessings we render our thanks to the Father of all mercies. But the conflict with prejudice, passion, ignorance, and selfishness is not ended. The close of the war only opens to the nation the great problems of reconstruction and regeneration. Theories and plans of political reconstruction are earnestly discussed, and Christian citizens have a great responsibility laid upon them in this respect; but it is only the Gospel of Christ that can bring permanent prosperity and peace to the South. Its people, white and black, must be born again, not of war, nor of blood, nor of legislation, but of truth and the Spirit of God—not merely into a religion of emotion or form, or sectarian or sectional bigotry, but into an enlightened, practical, and philanthropic piety. The whites must have this, that they may learn to respect the rights of their fellow-men, without regard to caste or color; and the blacks need it, that they may be redeemed from the peculiar forms of ignorance, superstition, and immorality fastened upon them by slavery and human depravity. If the blacks can feel the touch of this regenerating power, and be educated and elevated to the high plane of a Christian civilization, they will claim a position as men and citizens that no legislation can give to them, and that no party machinery can long withhold. To the great work of the Christian training of these millions, the Association feels called upon to address its energies with renewed vigor and increased instrumentalities.

PHYSICAL SUPPLIES-THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Since our last meeting the Freedmen's Bureau has been organized. The design of this Bureau, so far as the Freedmen are concerned, is to aid them in their industries and education, and to protect them in their rights. The appointment of General Howard as the head of this department, was hailed as the augury of success, and his industry, energy, perseverance, and sincere devotion to the interests committed to him have been all that was anticipated, even at his hands; but the means at his command have been, from the first, so exceedingly limited, both in the funds needed and in the use of abandoned lands, that less has been accomplished than was expected; and, at this date, the manifold pardons granted to the rebels, their rapid re-possession of abandoned lands, and the speedy reorganization of State governments in the South, cripple alarmingly the power of the Bureau. Whatever may be the ultimate results of these measures, their immediate effects can be, to the freedmen, only suffering and disappointment. The desolations of the war, their ejection from lands restored to former owners, the inability or unwillingness of the late masters to assist them, and the want of the aid expected from the Bureau, will leave multitudes of the freedmen without homes and without food and clothing for the winter. All our information leads to the belief that at no former period has this destitution been so great, or the numbers involved in it so large, and unless the people of the North or the Government will promptly come to the rescue with clothing and food, there must be unprecedented suffering and loss of life during the approaching inclement season. Here again does the Association recognize a call to renewed earnestness and activity to meet the physical wants of these people.

These measures of the Government, and these strides of the Southern States towards the resumption of their former power have other bearings upon the interests of the freedmen to which we feel bound to allude. Our teachers and missionaries were warned months since, by the former slaveholders, that as soon as the military were withdrawn, no teacher of the colored people would be tolerated. These intimations are being realized. Personal violence is not threatened-perhaps. none should be feared; but the Government has withdrawn rations and shelter from the teachers; abandoned houses, for boarding places and schools, are no longer to be had, and the people of the South will not, except at enormous rates, receive our teachers as boarders, nor rent houses for schools and boarding places. The ban of social reprobation of all teachers of the blacks is nearly as severe to-day as it was before the war, and, in fact, some portions of the South would be as much closed against all attempts at the education of the colored people as ever, except for the immediate protection of the National troops; the rapid withdrawal of these threatens to leave the blacks in those portions as hopeless of education from the North as they were while slaves. We are confident this state of things can not last long; for the nation that has spent so much treasure and blood for freedom will not tolerate it. But nothing except the aroused attention of the people of the North will change the prospect.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

The meeting of the National Council of Congregational Churches, held in Boston in June last, has, perhaps, had as direct a bearing upon the immediate interests of the Association as any other event that has occurred during the year. This large assemblage of ministers and messengers of the churches took comprehensive views of the responsibilities imposed by the events of the times upon the denomination they represented, and devised liberal plans for meeting them. The recommendation there made to the churches to raise $750,000 during the year, designated $250,000 as the portion that should be given to this Association for the benefit of the freedmen. This Association in accepting this trust, and in being brought into connection with a wider constituency, feels called upon not merely to inaugurate effective measures for accomplishing the work, but also of giving to its patrons, and especially to those recently brought into the number, such facts in relation to its history, character, aims, and plans as will meet inquiries and assure confidence. In accordance with this purpose, the Executive Committee therefore beg leave to make the following statements:

1. This Association is the tried friend of the colored people. Originating in 1846, in a strong sympathy with them in their dire bondage, and nourished by the increasing anti-slavery feeling of the moral struggle preceding the armed conflict, it has sought in all legitimate ways to secure their emancipation, promote their comfort, and give to them educational and religious advantages, wherever they could be reached. To secure these ends it has incurred odium, and many of its leading supporters have sacrificed friendship and social and ecclesiastical position. But this devotion to an unpopular cause is now accepted by all parties as evidence of faithfulness, and establishes the Association in the confidence of the colored people.

2. The Association is a missionary society, evangelical and yet unsectarian in its character. In the range of its missionary work it has endeavored to follow what it regarded as the call of Providence, and at one time had extended its missions into many parts of the world. Some of its missions have, however, been relinquished, and others have become substantially self-sustaining, so that at the commencement of the rebellion, it found itself singularly prepared to devote its energies mainly to the colored race in Africa, the West-Indies, and especially in America; and when the war began to liberate the slaves, it was seen to be, without change of character or constitution, providentially fitted for and called to the work of clothing, educating, and evangelizing this long-oppressed people. Before all other organizations it came to them with these blessings, and has since been most earnestly striving to enlarge and perfect its means of benefiting them. Under these circumstances, and in the altered tone of public sentiment on the vexed questions of the past, it rejoices to find itself and the American Board, the American Home Missionary Society, and other kindred organizations, working in harmonious cooperation in the great endeavor to advance the Redeemer's kingdom among men.

As will be seen in succeeding pages of this report, few of its foreign missions are on territory occupied by other boards, and we are not extending any of them. Our missions in Africa we shall sustain in good working condition, not only as a present benefit to the Western and Central tribes, but much more as a centre for future operations, when the freedmen, educated and evangelized, shall go, voluntarily, as ministers, missionaries, teachers, and colonists, to preach the Gospel and found empire in their fatherland. We therefore still solicit contributions for the foreign field.

In the prosecution of its work among the freedmen, the Association, true to its missionary and Christian character, sends ministers, missionaries, and teachers among them. It commissions no teachers that are not members of some evangelical church, and in all its work it endeavors to win men to Christ. It gives clothing as a gift from him; it establishes day-schools in his name, and it multiplies Sabbathschools and night-schools that Christ may be taught. But while it is thus evangelical it is not sectarian. Its standing proffer to other denominations of evangelical Christians is that they may send, through its channels, and with its facilities for reaching the people, their own ministers, missionaries, and teachers, chosen and supported by themselves, and under our commission, to teach and preach and found churches, if God shall so prosper them, according to their own denominational forms and doctrinal belief, untrammeled by us. In the disbursements of the general funds of the Association no discrimination is made among evangelical churches in the selection of teachers; and in our schools are found, working most harmoniously together, Methodists, Baptists, Orthodox Friends, Reformed Dutch, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists. Three religious bodies, the Wesleyan Methodists, Free-will Baptists, and Congregationalists, have selected us as their special instrumentality for reaching the freedmen. The funds thus committed to us will be sacredly and impartially used according to the design of the donors. The munificent sum recommended by the Congregational Council, at Boston, we understand is designed for the benefit of the freedmen, and not for the other missions of the Association, and when collected, we shall appropriate it accordingly.

3. Its plans for raising and disbursing funds for the current year are believed to be comprehensive and adequate. In addition to the secretaries in the Rooms in New-York, it has provided for district secretaries who will attend to the collecting of funds in their respective districts at the North, and superintend the work in corresponding portions of the South. The endeavor has been to secure secretaries favorably known in their fields at the North, and personally familiar with the work at the South, and we are happy in the belief that the announcement of the names of the gentlemen selected will assure the churches of our success in this endeavor. To aid these district secretaries, we have obtained the services of State agents whose characters are a guarantee of efficiency and faithfulness.

Another and more important part of our plans has respect to the disbursement of funds-in our work at the South. First of all we shall attempt to send out three hundred Christian teachers, mostly ladies, who, in addition to their work in day-schools, shall also devote what time they can to night-schools and Sunday-schools, with special reference to religious teaching. In every group of about five day-schools we propose to employ one female missionary, who shall go from house to house, and as a Bible-reader, instructor, and friend, teach practical, every-day religion, the kind of teaching most needed by this people. In still larger districts, embracing about twenty of our schools, we propose to send the Christian minister, to act as pastor and adviser of the teachers, to supervise the labors of the female missionaries, the work of Sabbath-school instruction, and the distribution of clothing, and to preach the Gospel, aim at the organization of churches, and impart academic and theological training to colored ministers and candidates for the ministry.

It is our design to give the widest range to the work of these ministers. We shall select for these posts only men of ability and prudence, and their labors must be directed by the varied circumstances under which they are placed. Some of them, by their peculiar talents and the condition of their field, can do most good by devoting themselves largely to fostering and enlarging Sunday and night-schools: others, for like reasons, can become itinerant preachers in rural districts, ministering statedly at given points, and thus creating centers of influence where churches may be founded and to which other ministers may be sent; others will locate themselves in cities where they may preach to existing churches, or organize others out of the material gathered and cultured in the Sunday-schools and night-schools: while others still will devote their main energies to the instruction of colored ministers, a species of instruction eagerly sought and highly prized, and thus lay the foundation of colleges and theological seminaries.

With arrangements thus adapted to this peculiar field and people, and withal thoroughly religious in all their parts, we begin at the foundations of society, and hope to impart to schools, homes, and people an elevating and Christian power.

These plans are so laid that whenever the Southern States shall enact for themselves the common-school laws of the North, and thus relieve Northern charity of the support of the mere educational work it now carries forward, this Association will still have left to it a network of religious effort ramifying the South, and capable of indefinite enlargement for systematic evangelical labors.

From these general observations we turn to the more minute survey of the work during the past year among the

FREEDMEN.

The progress of the national arms extended this field of operations, and the close of the war made every part of the South accessible to our teachers and missionaries. To the full extent of the means intrusted to us, we endeavored to heed the Macedonian cry, and within the year have had in this field, three hundred and twenty ministers and teachers. History never recorded, and prophecy has scarcely foretold, scenes of greater joy than were witnessed in many of the cities of the South, as our teachers, following closely upon the steps of victorious armies, gave additional assurance to the people of their freedom, and promised them education and the open Word of God. The outbursts of their gladness, the crowding of the schools, and the persistent eagerness in learning to read, can never be effaced from the memories of those who witnessed them. While these stirring events were being enacted in the newer portions of the field. the steady work of mental and religious education went forward in portions longer under cultivation. In these, we record gratefully the stability and progress of our schools; and, above all, the attendant influences of the Holy Spirit in his converting and enlightening power. Such was the state of affairs at the beginning of the summer vacation. Since that time, the changed political aspects of the South render our work more expensive and more uncertain. We are "perplexed but not in despair" by this state of things. He that swept away the black storm-cloud of war, only tries our faith by permitting these broken and changing clouds to produce alternate shade and sunshine, before the clearing up of the whole heavens.

WASHINGTON AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. Isaac Cross, Rev. J. M. Mace. 2.

Miss Mary Brownson, Miss Ann F. Carter, Miss Julia M. Case, Mr. Wm. L. Coan, Mrs. J. N. Coan, Miss Fannie A. Coan, Miss J. W. Duncan, Miss L. C. Gates, Miss W. B. Harris, Miss M. M. Hill, Miss Charlotte Hills, Miss Julia B. Lander, Mr. Page F. McClelland, Miss Mary E. McNabb, Miss P. E. Ogden, Mr. William S. Tilden, Miss S. A. Vinton, Mr. William J. Wilson, Mrs. Mary A. G. Wilson. 19.

The schools have been conducted in Washington, and at Lincoln Hospital, and Giesboro. The progress of some of them was interrupted at the downfall of the rebellion, by a call from Richmond, and other new fields, for some of their teachers. Yet the work went forward with scarcely diminished interest.

The zeal of the parents may be learned from the following extracts:

"Mothers come from every direction, bringing their little ones, too small to be exposed upon the uncertain depths of 'Washington mud,' and frequently stand nearly an hour with countenances bearing with delight, as they hear their children's voices repeating the names of those mystical characters on the chart, that assume untold importance in their minds, because some way connected with being able to read 'de blessed book,' to which most aspire as the culminating point of earthly ambition.

"I know of no more touching sight, than to see these whitened heads, with their anxious, deeply furrowed faces, bent low over their simple primers, with that patient, uncomplaining look, that often condenses a whole life-bistory of suffering and wrong. With all their faults, both inherent and resulting from slavery—and they are many and grievous—there is so much redeeming in their characteristics, that labor among them, though very exhausting physically, never falls to be intensely interesting."

The evidence of the presence of the Spirit is thus reported by a correspondent:

"Sabbath morning, brother Mace, a missionary of your Society, preached, and bap-tized in the Potomac six new converts. This is the fourth baptismal scene on this island since your missionary has been here.

"There is one thing that gives the American Missionary Association great power with this people, and that is, your not ignoring their religious training. Some humanitarians come and confine their labors to the outer man, not thinking of the wants of the soul. Schools, prayer-meetings, and preaching should go together; this appears to be the

Mr. Mace has labored much among soldiers, both colored and white, and among rebel prisoners, and distributed more than twenty-five thousand Testaments, or portions of them, and other religious reading. These have been gratuitously furnished by the Bible and Tract Societies, and Christian Commissions. An article in the Morning Chronicle, Washington, says: "Three colored schools have been organized by him during the past year, and he has had charge, part of the time, of a colored Sunday-school of one hundred scholars, who had no other teacher but himself. He has baptized and received about two hundred colored persons into the church, and has distributed about five hundred dollars' worth of new and second-hand clothing among the colored people of this district."

Rev. Mr. Cross is at present in government employ as a Chaplain. A large hospital building has been fitted up by the Bureau, and assigned to us for schools. One of the most efficient schools at Washington has been wholly taught by colored teachers.

TEACHERS.

Mr. Nathaniel Noyes, Superintendent, Miss P. A. Alcott, Miss Emily F. Campbell, Miss E. S. Fay, Mrs. Highgate, Miss Edmonia G. Highgate, Miss E. G. Jackson, Miss Almira Richards. 8.

Mr. Noves and four of these teachers have been located in Baltimore, and the others in other parts of the State. The following from one of the Baltimore teachers will illustrate the joy of the people at the opening of the schools:

"At another place we met a man whose appearance I thought indicated an acquaintance with slavery, and my conjecture proved correct. 'I had eight "head" of children ance with slavery, and my conjecture proved correct. 'I had eight "head" of children and nine "head" of grandchildren in slavery. And I never 'knowed' we was "gwine" to be free till the night before.' 'That was a happy day for you,' I remarked, 'Oh! yes,' he replied; 'that was the happiest day of my life. My Massa got courage to tell me the night before. I clapped my hands, and says I, oh! I'm glad! I'm glad! Massa says: "Why, Abram? you've always had every thing you wanted; you've been as well off as you'll be free." 'Yes, I know I've had enough, but 'swill be very different to be free." 'Yes, I know I've had enough, but 'swill be very different to be free." 'Yes, I know I've had enough, but 'swill be very different to be free." 'Yes, I know I've had enough, but 'swill be very different to be done to the day came, how did you express your joy? said I. 'Oh! we all went out-doors and screamed and screamed just as loud as we could scream. And I want out to the heart of the read from our state of traverte a retain to a challed the course of children and the course of went out to the barn and jumped from one stack of straw to another as fast as I could jump. Massa came out, and says he: "Why, Abram! I'm astonished to see an old man like you cutting up like this." But, said he, 'I was so glad I didn't know what to do. Now I'm "gwine" to educate my children if it takes every thing I can get.' I can give you very little idea of his enthusiasm; he laughed and talked at the same time, and spoke so rapidly that I could not understand all that he said."

The condition and progress of the schools in Maryland may be learned from the following:

Mr. Noyes was commissioned November 15th. He has made a full report of his proceedings. The formation of the "Baltimore Association for the Moral and Educational Improvement of the Colored People" superseded, to a considerable extent, the operations we had planned with reference to Baltimore. But we can say with Mr. Noyes:

"If the main object is accomplished, it hardly matters by whom it is done; and I do not feel that under the auspices of the American Missionary Association time and money have been spent in vain. A fair beginning has been made in elevating and educating the colored population of the city and State, which will help hasten the time when the State authorities will open free schools to all, without regard to color."

Two schools, called the Lincoln and the Birney schools, were opened December 12th and January 18th.

"The teachers in both have not only labored hard in their schools, but have been visiting the parents and friends of the scholars, looking after cases of sickness, and using their needles for the suffering freedmen. They have also taught in the Sabbath-schools of the churches in which the schools are kept."

Mr. Noyes has spent considerable time in visiting the clergymen, elders, trustees, and other schools and Sabbath-schools, to acquire and impart information; in attending religious meetings; and in doing what he could to promote the cause of education and religion among the colored portion of the inhabitants. He adds:

"The Baltimore Association has three schools in operation, and a fourth is soon to be opened.

The colored people and their friends may, with great propriety, thank the American Missionary Association for what the Baltimore Association has done, as no step had been taken by the latter until our first school was opened.

I am assured that the work in which your Association is engaged meets the approbation of many of the best people here.

I have had application for two teachers (colored) in adjoing counties. Already one is engaged at Darlington, Harford county, and a report of its opening and prospects will soon be sent to you."

And at a later date:

* Deceased.

"Our schools have closed for a vacation. We have had four schools with six teachers, and could we have sustained more teachers, many more schools might have been opened where they are much needed, and where the people themselves are too poor to support a school support a school.

"The behavior of the children has been almost unexceptionable, and they have made good progress in their studies; some of them so much so, that I design having hereafter one school of higher grade, to which some of the best scholars may be transferred from time to time; partially with a view of being prepared, as soon as possible, to teach. Public opinion is rapidly changing in the State, in relation to the education of the colored people, and it is hoped that the next Legislature (in 1868) will inaugurate a system of schools for these long-neglected children, whose parents have for years regularly paid a school-tax."

Wilder, Miss S. C. Wilder, Miss Mary D. Williams, Miss Annie R. Wilkins, Mrs. L. E. Wood, Prof. W. W. Woodbury, Miss Anna C. Woodbury, Miss E. P. Worthington. Eleven ministers and one hundred and four teachers.

Virginia was the scene of our first labors among the freedmen. Here was the first school for ex-slaves; here has been during the year the largest number of our missionaries and teachers; and here the most extended results have been realized; until, in one district, it is said a larger proportion of blacks than of the whites can read. One of the largest of the schools was at Hampton, under the superintendence of Mr. C. P. Day, aided by a number of excellent teachers. A large school-building, erected by General Butler, near Hampton, well furnished, and capable of accommodating more than six hundred pupils, has been assigned by General Howard for the use of our schools.

The Free-Will Baptist Home Missionary Society has paid the salaries of a large number of the missionaries and teachers in Virginia, and a few others have been sustained by the Presbytery of Mahoning, Pennsylvania.

At Norfolk, Portsmouth, and vicinity, the number of schools and teachers has been greater than in any other district. The order and discipline of these schools may be learned from the following:

"Very many children, who began to learn the alphabet last October, can now read well in the Primer, and some have commenced the First Reader. The principal of the schools in the first district says: 'After an experience, as teacher, of nearly twenty-one years, I can say that these pupils behave as well, are governed as easily, and learn more readily than white children.

"The behavior has been almost faultless; the only complaint being a lack of punctuality and occasional forgetfulness in the details. We have had no instances of willful failures, either in deportment or in recitation."

The night-schools furnish an interesting feature of our work in Virginia. The principal of the third district says:

"There is no part of the educational field in this city which presents so many attractive features as the 'night-school' held at the Bute Street Methodist Church. A large majority of the pupils are engaged in daily labor, and almost their only leisure is this evening hour, which is so faithfully devoted to the acquisition of knowledge.

"To the Christian philanthropist, the sight of these middle-aged and older pupils who come by families, bringing, their primers and slates, with faces all aglow in their desire to receive the much-coveted lesson, is one of peculiar interest."

And at a later date:

"The Norfolk night-school disbanded on Thursday evening, May eleventh, after a successful term of six months, during which time we have given instruction to nearly a thousand persons—eight hundred of whom have been regular pupils. It is of course impossible to express in numbers, or by statistics of any kind, the precise amount of knowledge imparted, or of thought awakened by this part of the educational work, yet all who have labored in the school are satisfied that enough has been done to make it in all points a success, and to warrant future efforts in a similar direction."

Seventeen days after our troops entered Richmond, schools were opened there, under the auspices of this Association and other societies. The superintendent and teachers were welcomed by the people, who crowded the churches to hear the joyful news of the opening of schools; and these same churches were afterward thronged from day to day by children hungering and thirsting after knowledge. Eight weeks after, one of the teachers wrote:

"Time never passed more quickly or pleasantly than have the eight weeks which I have spent in Richmond. The colored people here are by far the most intelligent and thrifty of any I ever met. For the first two weeks there were only eight teachers for one thousand five hundred pupils, all of whom were eager to get a book and go right to work and learn to read, and often our hearts were made sad by having the children say: 'I han't said no lesson to-day; please, Miss, just show me how that goes.'

"One old uncle came into school a few days ago, and as he was going, said: 'O Miss! we's monstrous pleased with your carryings on here in this church, we's all so mighty glad you's come to teach we all. We hope the Yankees will allers live in Richmond. I's felt so happy since the Yankees came, that I want to sing and cry for joy all the time; peers like I dun know as I's hungry or no."

The ability of the darkest colored children to learn to read was thus spoken of in the Republican Standard, Richmond:

"It is true, also, that a genuine negro placed side by side with a half-blood in the race for improvement, generally outstrips the other in the contest. This we have seen too often to be contradicted.

"In one of the schools here, in a class of over fifty girls, twenty of whom would pass for white children, slightly tanned from exposure to the sun, two prizes were given to the best scholars. They were taken by a black child of twelve years, and a handsome quadroon of eighteen; the black child proved altogether the best scholar for her age

It has been affirmed of the negro that his piety is emotional, and dissevered from practical morality. This his friends must often admit; yet we are glad to learn that under wise instruction this inconsistency disappears. A missionary writes:

"Our people are improving in their ways. On the Sabbath they give earnest attention, and have given up their moanings, whinings, and shakings. I can now talk more plainly to them than I dared when I first came here. I speak against indulging in 'dancing praises' and holding meetings till late into the night. Really they get over their old habits and customs sooner than one could expect. They show themselves capable of adapting their forms of worship to their changed circumstances. Sometimes, as I speak to them and see their good attention and their efforts for improvement, I am greatly affected. I am trying now to give them instruction in social, domestic, and civil as well as religious life."

Another says:

"I meet occasionally with those who are seeking an interest in Christ-one woman, whom I have long known, has been such an inquirer for some time. Since she became whom I have long known, has been such an inquirer for some time. Since she became free, being a widow, she has struggled through many afflictions, endeavoring to maintain her family with as little assistance as possible, evincing much strength of character. She has been doubting and dissatisfied, because she had not peculiar manifestations in her experience; but now she seems to be gradually obtaining peace in simply believing in Christ, expressing an earnest desire to live worthy of His name, with a sensitive conthe purpose to follow Christ with the light she has, although special manifestations, which she was inclined to regard as very important, were not granted. She was determined to persevere in prayer, looking to the Lord for help to serve Him—apparently with a clear view of her own unworthiness and dependence on the merits of Christ, and with a tenderness, humility, and spirit of confession that are truly hopeful."

NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The public are already informed of the gratifying results obtained by Chaplain James at Roanoke Island, Newbern, and vicinity, in industrial and educational progress. Mr. James bears witness to the industry and good conduct of the freedmen in the trying circumstances in which they and their friends were placed by the casualties of war. The negroes worked with alacrity. More than twelve hundred laborers were employed, ministering by their toil to the support of not less than five thousand colored people, upon cotton and turpentine plantations, to whom were paid too hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

The "piny woods" people, the "clay-eaters," or whatever name be given to the poor whites of the South, are a more helpless and spiritless race than the negroes of the same section, and indeed, naturally inferior to them. He says:

"From twelve to fourteen hundred of them have been fed by Government, in Beaufort, N. C., and vicinity, while only three or four hundred negroes have received aid in the same sub-district, the whole number of each being nearly equal.

"The negroes are not so helpless and dependent as the poor whites. The pureblooded Africans are superior to the mulattoes; the negroes are grateful for liberty, and but little inclined to abuse it. They strongly aspire to the common rights of citizens. They almost adore the persons who have brought them deliverance. The ownership of real estate is their strongest incentive to industry, though, at present, slow and shiftless workers—as their rule in slavery was, to do as little as they could. They will do better in the society of whites than in separate communities."

Rev. W. T. Briggs, Superintendent, gives a cheering account of the progress of the schools. We can extract only the following from his interesting report. Referring to the evening schools at Newbern, he says:

"In addition to the day-schools were eight flourishing evening-schools. In the largest of these, fifteen teachers have been employed, instructing one hundred and seventy pupils. The pupils attending these feel the importance of their time, and are very eager to make the most of it. After a hard day's work they return to their homes, take their frugal meal, change their dress when they can make a change—come to the school and devote an hour or an hour and a half to earnest study. In one respect the evening-schools have a stronger claim for support than the day-schools, as with most who attend them, it is about the last chance. The privilege is prized—the good seed is scattered broadcast, and in due time the harvest will appear."

He adds:

"It is really wonderful how quickly these untutored children will wheel into line and approach the high standard in our Northern schools. There is, moreover, a genuine love for school. Repeatedly the vote has been unanimous to dispense with holidays for the sake of attending. In fact, they will endure almost any penance sooner than be deprived of this privilege. In one of our schools, two of the larger pupils, a girl and boy, for a very grave offense were ordered to leave the school or receive a whipping. They might take their choice. The boy instantly came forward and was whipped. The girl gathered up her books, left the room, and the teacher supposed, of course, that was the end of it. She was much surprised the next morning to see this girl enter, and walking straight up to the teacher, said: 'Missus, I'se come for my whippin'.' Such was her love for the school, that after a night's reflection, she had rather be whipped, old as she was, than stay away. The children seem quite ambitious to improve. Frequently they carry their books home. In passing through the camps I have often been assailed by little urchins holding out their slates, 'Please, sir, set me a copy,' and it is no uncommon thing for children, 'just let loose from school,' to gather in groups and go through with a spelling exercise in fine style, and close off with—'Hail Columbia.'"

The opening of schools at Wilmington followed closely the occupation of that city by the United States troops. The joy of the people at the prospect of schools is thus described by Mr. Coan:

"By appointment I met the children at the church vestry the next morning. They were to come at nine o'clock: by seven, the street was blocked, the yard was full. Parents eager to get 'dese yer four children's name tooken,' came pulling them through the crowd: 'Please, sir, puts down dese yer.' 'I wants dis gal of mine to jine; and dat yer boy hes got no parents, and I jes done and brot him.' While these things were transpiring, a group of boys, stout, hale, and hearty, made a flank movement, got around in front of father or mother, whose countenances told of fears that they might not be in time to enroll their children's names."

The same evidences of joy inexpressible were manifest at the organization of the evening-school for adults. About one thousand pupils reported themselves in less than one week after our arrival in Wilmington. . . There are already connected with the day-schools full two thousand persons of different ages.

Another of our teachers wrote, July eighth :

"The colored people of Wilmington number six thousand. A few have always been free, and have secretly secured the instruction of their children. These comprise some of the best artisans and mechanics—having houses and lots, sometimes shops, and some means of their own. The most of them, however, were freed when military possession was taken of the city, remaining in tenement or kitchen, and laboring for daily subsistence as occasion may offer.

"Excellent schools have been established by different benevolent associations. Fourteen have been in successful operation, ten here and four in the vicinity, with an attendance of nearly nineteen hundred. Ten of these are established (seven in the city) by the American Missionary Association, with nearly sixteen hundred scholars, in which seventeen different teachers and ministers were employed, whose earnest and faithful labors secured general confidence and good will, and rapid progress in study. The wants of the needy, so far as possible, were supplied from gifts received."

Soon after the taking of Savannah, the Rev. J. W. Alvord, Rev. M. French, and others organized an educational commission among the colored people, and the first school was formed by Rev. W. T. Richardson, our Superintendent in South-Carolina, with the aid of colored teachers. Rev. S. W. Magill, a native of Georgia, our agent in Connecticut, followed soon after with teachers from the North, and thus reports:

"By the close of the week, our numbers were three hundred and six children and one hundred and eighteen women, and by the close of the succeeding week, four hundred and eleven and one hundred and nineteen. On the twentieth of May, when a new enrollment was made, our numbers were six hundred and seven children and two hundred women. These are our full numbers, but, of course, never all in attendance at once. On the twenty-seventh March, I organized a class of men for night instruction, numbering eighty-one, increased afterward to over one hundred.

"On the first of May, our schools were transferred from the 'old chapel,' where we labored under great disadvantage, to the 'Massie School,' so called, the finest school-building in the city, which was kindly granted to me by Gen. Grover, the Commandant of the district, and where we enjoy great facilities and comforts.'

One of the teachers wrote in May:

"Looking backward, a period of three months, to the commencement of the School in Wesleyan Chapel, and contrasting it with the present aspect of the Massie School, the change is very obvious and striking. Then, like untamed animals, the children flocked in, without any ideas of order or application. Cleanliness was disregarded in many cases. Disorder prevailed, and it was almost disheartening to contemplate the array of untutored little ones, moving about so uneasily upon their benches. The question naturally arose, Can these turbulent spirits ever be quieted and subdued?

"In tracing their progress through successive weeks, and noting their advancement in civilization, there has been a marked improvement. Order has been brought out of civilization, there has been a market improvement. Order has been brought of confusion. Neatness has taken the place of untidiness.

"Pupils realize that prompt obedience is expected, and yield readily.

"I have a sprightly little Dolly, scarcely six years old, who in eight weeks learned her letters and read through the Union Primer. I taught her at home, during the intervals of school; and so eager was she to learn, that she would await impatiently my coming, and bound to meet me Primer in hand; during her lesson, her attention never seemed to wander, but she was entirely absorbed in her book. She is now in the Pictorial Reader, and bids fair to outstrip her class."

Revs. Messrs. Richardson and Russell, at the request of the Committee visited Augusta, establishing schools; and from their reports we make the following extracts:

"No pen can describe what a time of joy and rejoicing the past few days have been to this people. You must see with your own eyes and hear with your own ears, to form any just conception of the reality. It is worth a voyage across the Atlantic Ocean to see this people amid their new-born ecstasies of freedom.

"We were at once requested to plan and direct in this educational movement for them, and they were very anxious to have schools at once. . . . The inquiry was

NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Rev. Mr. Richardson, reporting the schools under his care in the islands of South-Carolina and in Florida, where there have been twenty-six schools, with thirty-four teachers and an aggregate of two thousand and sixty pupils, (about seven hundred of whom are adults,) reports the progress of the people as such that he recommends they should be requested to sustain their own schools hereafter.

A brief extract from a letter from Miss Kimball, on the Rhett plantation, reports progress almost incredible.

"Our school has been pleasant, the scholars have made good improvement, and compare well with white children at the North. I have one scholar, a little girl about nine years old, who was learning the letters when I came here. She now reads well in the First Reader. Most of the time she has been obliged to read with a child in her arms or at her side, and has been out of school, sick, ten days. I had one young man come in to our evening-school, who learned the whole alphabet by my showing him the

Another teacher says of the improvement of the people in honesty:

"Others are specimens of honesty. I know a school of over two hundred pupils, on St. Helena Island, wherein it is perfectly safe to drop a penknife, pencil, and the lost article, whatever it might be, would be carried immediately to the teacher by the finder and given to her for the owner."

The Association has endeavored to give instruction to soldiers, with what result may be seen in the following:

"We have a very convenient tent for the school, and Colonel Howard made it his business, at first, to see that all the non-commissioned officers were present shortly after the drum-call for school; but now they need no one to prompt them to come, but it would require some power to keep them from school. I have taught in the North several terms; but I had not the least idea with what rapidity persons could learn, till I began to teach these freed soldiers. They make me think of half-starved men sitting at a table of plenty."

Mr. Adams, assisted by Rev. Mr. Cardoza and others, recently organized a church of colored communicants at Charleston.

made, Have you competent teachers among you, and can you support them for the present? They thought they could do the paying part, and were confident that they had some persons of color fit to teach. We secured buildings of the military for the schools, and Bro. Russell remains to assist them in starting free schools. Augusta will be one of the most important points for our work in Georgia. NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"Monday, the twelfth of June, due notice having been given, the school was opened. Early in the morning parents with their children came rushing into the room until they filled it full. The names of more than five hundred scholars were recorded the first day, and nearly a hundred have been added since. The parents seemed so delighted to see their children with books in their hands in a school learning to read, that many of them tarried the entire forenoon. Of course nearly all of these children are totally unaccustomed to the restraints of a school-room; and with so many scholars and teachers in one room, the school can not be what we would like to have it."

Rev. G. Greely.

Rev. Mr. Greely has been permitted more than once to report hopeful conversions among the people, and is much encouraged in his work. One of the teachers writes concerning the sufferings of the people soon after emancipation:

"Some of the planters are willing to conform to the existing order of things, though numbers have driven off their colored people, and others have been very cruel. It is no unusual thing to hear of masters firing upon their ex-slaves because they will not remain with them as formerly. We have here one old gray-headed man, shot for this reason. My heart aches for him, as he lies on his poor pallet.

"A few weeks since, a teamster rapped at our door saying he had brought some colored people. We looked, and behold! a train of nine government wagons, filled with men, women, and children, with their bandboxes, chests, trunks, and chickens; and all were dumped down under the trees in front and around our house. This sight has since been of more common occurrence, but it was then novel and exciting."

Another teacher says of the school at Jacksonville:

"We have nearly two hundred scholars, and have been obliged to divide the school, having the primary department in the forenoon and the others in the afternoon; for there are too many for one room. Some of them are very good readers, and all are anxious to be so. One woman, over sixty years, just beginning to spell, seems as if she could not think of any thing but her book; says she spells her lesson all the evening, then she dreams about it, and wakes up thinking about it. Her husband is a good old saint, of over eighty years."

H. Warren, Mr. Green Wilkinson. 20.

In our last Report it was suggested that Missouri must become a free State on the crushing of the rebellion. Both of these events have become history. It only remains for the people of God to avail themselves of the facilities thus furnished for reaching the freedmen and other persons of color, with the elevating influences of education and Christianity. Kansas, though never a slaveholding State, has within her bounds a large number of freedmen, refugees from Arkansas and Missouri, and furnishes a field for a greater number of teachers and ministers than we have been able to furnish.

In these States we have had three ordained missionaries and twenty missionary teachers. One of the ordained missionaries left early in the year, and six of the teachers have labored a part of the time in other States. In Kansas, some cities, Lawrence, Topeka, and others, make provision to aid in the education of the people, but the number of these is very limited. In Missouri, no provision has yet been made. The new Constitution requires the Legislature to provide free schools for all children between the ages of five and twenty-one; but at present, the work of education, and especially Christian education, among the freedmen is left, says one of our missionaries, to missionary and benevolent societies. The few missionaries and teachers we have had there have made a successful beginning; but ten times as much might be done, had we the means of enlargement. The progress of the schools is everywhere encouraging. Old and young have flocked to them. Some of them embrace ages from five to fifty-five, and all are represented as eager to learn.

"Here," writes one of our missionaries, "is seated a middle-aged man, intently studying the first principles of arithmetic; yonder is his wife, as diligently poring over her primer. Here, a mother just commencing to read; there, her son of sixteen, trying to conquer the multiplication table. In this class is a man just learning his letters; by his side are children five years old at the same lesson; and so on.

"Some who had families could attend school but three or four days in the week, the rest of their time being spent in 'earning something to eat.' Many refused to go out to work for high wages, preferring to work for their board and go to school while there was opportunity. I have often been asked if colored children learned as rapidly as the whites. Taking all their circumstances into consideration, I never saw any school, that whites. I aking all their circumstances into consideration, I never saw any school, that as a whole, advanced more rapidly.

"One old woman said she was willing to work as long she could stand, if by so doing she would be able to read the Bible; when, about three months afterward, she was able not only to read her Bible, but write a little, her cup of happiness was full; she thought she could never thank the Lord enough that he had placed her where she 'could learn beautifully.'"

In a number of instances our missionaries and teachers report the presence of the Spirit of God in the midst of their labors.

Rev. J. Copeland writes:

"During the month of July I held another series of meetings in Westport, which resulted in the hopeful conversion of several persons, and a number of additions to the church. During the meetings, as many as seventeen at one time presented themselves as inquivers. About the first of June I organized a Congregational church of thirteen members in Westport. Six have been added since, and several more are expecting to unite soon. The most of the members have stood fast, thus far, and quite a number any working and growing Christians. The revival has been going on to some extent, there, during the whole summer."

A female teacher says:

"I have enjoyed precious hours of prayer with my little ones, and the Spirit of God has been with us; even our usual morning devotions have been seasons of refreshment and profit. Oh! that the Father's gracious love may sustain us, and my efforts, poor and imperfect as they are, be, by His grace, blessed to the eternal welfare of these precious souls.

"The change in the school is very marked—so much so, that it has attracted attention even from those who have felt no interest in the schools. The deportment of the pupils, both in school and out, convinces me that the change is radical and permanent, that many are walking uprightly before God. The influence and example of these, over the others, is most happy."

In the early part of the year some of our missionaries labored much in the hospitals and barracks of the colored soldiers at St. Louis, and were often cheered by seeing tears of penitence streaming over the dusky faces of their hearers. One of them thus speaks of a farewell meeting held with a regiment just under marching orders:

"At the words, 'Let us pray,' every soldier—and there were a hundred or more present—dropped down upon his knees just where he was; some with their knapsacks on their backs, ready to start. When we rose from prayer, not a few were striving to restrain their tears. We closed our little meeting by singing: 'Say, brothers, will you meet us?' Ah! but I expect to meet some of these dark-faced soldier-brothers in glory! Though we so often see them denied admittance here, yet when they go "up yonder," I believe there's One will let them in!"

She then adds:

"I can not help thinking that many Christians at the North would double their subscriptions and their efforts in behalf of these people, could they but attend some of our meetings. God has undertaken the work of lifting them up, as I believe, not only out of the depths of a physical bondays, but of moral degradation; and blessed is he, who according to the ability given him, shall be found coloperating with God in this blessed work. What a privilege that he will let us be co-workers with him, either by carrying or sending his blessed gospel to his poor and lowly ones. Mrs. — tells me there are many laborers whom you would be glad to commission, but can not for lack of means. May God open the hearts of his children to help in this work!"

The greater number of the missionaries and teachers here, it will be seen, are sustained by the Free-Will Baptists, who are doing, in proportion to their ability, as much, at least, as any class of Christians in behalf of the freedmen. At other points colored refugees were gathered during the troubles in Missouri, and schools have been sustained. A large school was gathered at Alton, another at Princeton, which needs to be only partially supported by the Association. In these places, and in some of the larger towns in Missouri, where a large number of scholars is found, the Association pay the salary only of a teacher, leaving to the freedmen, or their friends near them, to provide school-room and books, and board for their teachers.

KENTUCKY.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. Gabriel Burdet, Rev. John G. Fee, Rev. Thomas James, Rev. A. Scofield, Rev. John Vetter. 5.

Mr. George Blakeman, Mr. Jos. C. Chapin, Mrs. C. Damon, Burrett H. Fee, Howard S. Fee, Miss E. I. James, Miss Bell Mitchell, Mrs. Williams, Mr. W. W. Wheeler, Mrs. Ellen P. T. Wheeler, Mrs. R. Walker. 11.

Slavery has yet a nominal existence in Kentucky; but the policy of the Government in enlisting slaves into the armies of the Union, its pledges to the families of its sable defenders, the administration of General Palmer in permitting unemployed slaves, uncared for by their masters, to seek employment where they could find it, instead of living on the Government, and the progress of education both among the freedmen and slaves, render its speedy destruction certain. The anomalous condition of Kentucky has rendered it more difficult to labor for the colored people there than elsewhere. A beginning has, however, been made at Louisville, nobly sustained by the friendship of Bishop Smith, of the Episcopal Church.

At Camp Nelson there has been a large gathering of colored people, and, before the crushing of the rebellion, some thousands of colored soldiers. At times there have been great destitution and suffering among them, and the Association has contributed slightly to their relief; but the W. F. A. Com., at Cincinnati, deserves the credit of granting them very much the largest supplies. They have also a number of teachers at Camp Nelson. Orders have been issued from Washington for the immediate breaking up of this camp. It can not be done without causing great suffering among the freedmen, exposing hundreds of them to the tender mercies of disloyal masters, who have driven them from their homes in destitution, and virtually returning to temporary slavery many to whom Government has pledged their freedom. The condition to which they will be returned may well be judged of by that from which they fied when they sought this camp of refuge.

Rev. E. Davis, who visited this camp at the request of the Association, in his report, April twentieth, said:

"It is known to the friends of the American Missionary Association that Congress has declared the families' of colored soldiers free, and that by this act the freedom of some sixty thousand persons, formerly slaves in Kentucky, is recognized before the law. It is also perhaps as well known that the great majority of the old slavemasters there—with the refinement peculiar to slaveholding—are treating these poor people with extreme rigor. They are literally being threshed out of their old homes, and compelled to fly. The husbands and fathers are following the flag—under other stripes than those which once fell on them—and the old oppressors, enraged at their loss, strike at the nation's black defenders through those dearest to them. Where shall these poor souls hide from the blast of tyranny? To whom, for the time being, shall they go? The Government is buiding a home within the defenses of this camp, situated in the very heart of Kentucky. It is a city of refuge, and to it—'in wearisomeness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness'—they joyfully come."

August twenty-second, Mr. Fee wrote that there were nearly three thousand persons in the "Refugee Home," at the camp. Five hundred of the children were in school, making good progress, when the order from the War Department comes to scatter them. Efforts will be made to retain the brightest of the children and establish a permanent school, and the scattered ones will take their books, and need teachers wherever they go. But there will be much suffering among the dispersed.

Mr. Fee says:

"The slave power combines, through malice, to refuse employment to those who have been within this camp, or who have obtained what are here termed 'free passes.' The people of this nation should care for these outcasts. They have long consented to the robbery and degradation of these poor ones. Restitution can now only be made by providing for and instructing these long-neglected ones."

It is a sad and bitter thought, that the only great obstacle lying in the way of the speedy elevation of this people—an elevation alike beneficial to the country and the Church of Christ as to them—is not their degradation, not their ignorance, nor their guilt, but in the persistent hostility of the more favored white population around them, and the failure of Government to grant them the pledged protection.

TENNESSEE.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. E. M. Cravath, Rev. Isaac Prince, Rev. E. O. Tade. 3. Miss Rosa Kinney, Miss E. F. Otis. 2.

In Tennessee we have had this year but five missionary laborers, two of them ordained ministers, one of them recently appointed, and the other passing under the care of his denomination after three months' service.

Rev. Isaac Prince (a Moravian) was sent to Memphis to labor among the soldiers. His first report showed a successful beginning. There were then sixteen thousand five hundred colored persons gathered in Memphis. The Third Regiment U. S. Colored Cavalry, with which he labored, numbered one thousand men. In a little more than one month a marked improvement of the soldiers was seen; and "a number of them," he said, "could read and write in a creditable manner." In connection with his teaching, he held religious services with the regiment twice on the Sabbath, and two evenings in the week. Arrangements were early made to form a Union church among the soldiers, and more than twenty at once gave in their names. At the end of the first quarter, the Moravian Church, to which Mr. Prince belongs, assumed the entire responsibility of his mission, and refunded to the Association the money expended on it.

Arrangements have been made for immediately commencing missionary labor in Nashville, on a somewhat extended basis. Three friends of the freedmen, two of them-now connected with the Association, have purchased, and now hold for the use of the Association, a number of lots lying contiguous to each other, furnishing an excellent site for a church building, for school-houses, and dwellings for teachers.* This enterprise, at present, seems to promise more permanency than any other labor for freedmen in Tennessee.

In these States the Association has had, within the year, twentyseven missionaries and teachers, of whom four are ordained ministers, and all seem to have their anticipations more than realized. One of them wrote from Baton Rouge nine months after the establishment of his school, contrasting its condition at the commencement and close of that period:

"The scholars were all beginners, a few knowing the alphabet, while none were able to gead. Most of them were ignorant of any restraint, and the order and discipline of the school-room were entirely new. Not a day passed without two or three fights among the pupils when at their plays, and these were often severe and bloody. The prospect before us was discouraging. Our scholars, numbering from one hundred and fifty to two hundred, were crowded into one room in which were two or three recitations at the same time. We entered upon our labors strongly determined to see what could be done, and as we look at our school to-day, and think what it was nine months ago, the change

"We now have an average of one hundred and eighty scholars daily. These are di-vided into three apartments. A class of sixteen read quite well in the 'Kational Thia Reader,' a very hard reader of that grade; about fifty read in the Second Reader of the same series; fifty more are in the First Reader; and the remainder are in the Frimer, or yet learning their letters. Those in our first department all write, some of them a very fair hand; they also study Arithmetic; and have nearly completed 'Monteith's First Lessons in Geography.' Nine months ago, many of these did not know a letter. In order and application to study, this department, composed mostly of scholars who have been in selection for the first will consens the mostly of scholars who have been in school from the first, will compare favorably, with any of our best white schools at the North.

"On the whole, we look upon our work as a decided success. Our scholars have made great proficiency in study, but the change in other respects has been quite as marked. In neatness of dress and person, the improvement is very manifest. The disposition to quarrel has been subdued, so that a month passes with less disturbance than a day at the commencement of our labors.

"We are now fully convinced that the colored children can learn. In some ten years' experience in the schools of my native State, I have never seen greater advancement in the same time. The children under our care are anxious to learn. They have good memories, acquire easily and retain well. I have never known children commit to memory more readily. They excel in this particular; in numbers they seem to fail."

We have quoted thus largely, because the writer, who has had many years' experience as a teacher North, and nine months among the blacks, gives in decisive language just such testimony as may be gathered from our teachers generally.

"The moral condition of this people, although far from what it should be, is hopeful. It must be admitted, they are prone to deceive and pilfer, but perhaps no more so than any people would be after such a manner of life. To deceive and to pilfer has been a part of their education. By means of the one they have often escaped the light of a cruel master, and by the other, they have sometimes been able to satisfy the pangs of hunger. Says an old man, who had been a slave all his life: "We were taught to steal, if we did not steal from master.'

"They are a very reverential people, warm friends, easily moved, of ardent feelings, and by proper training and education, will become an earnest, whole-souled, Christian people, that may yet perform an important part in evangelizing the world."

Rev. David Todd, in Arkansas, finds frequent occasion, as do all our ordained missionaries, to perform the marriage ceremony for those who have lived together without Christian marriage. On some oceasions, in this and other States, from twenty to sixty have thus publicly consecrated the marriage relation in a single day.

Mr. Todd has found it quite advantageous to go from house to house, in the evenings, reading the Bible to them. Among some of them he has gone through the whole of the New Testament, bringing them into a fuller acquaintance with the sacred Word than they had during the whole of their previous lives.

The general testimony as to the readiness of the people, under God's blessing, to yield to religious instruction is very encouraging. One writes:

"I visited one of the neighboring plantations the other Sunday, and there found the people in much need of the Gospel; and, indeed, I could scarcely refrain from weeping to see with what joy and gratitude, with what earnestness and zeal, these poor creatures received the words of life. . . The work at Fort Hudson is also in a prosperous condition; there has been quite a revival there during the past month, and twenty persons have been hopefully converted and are anxious to be baptized. . In this place (Baton Rouge) the church is doing well. The people are improving religiously, morally, and intellectually."

Another teacher in Mississippi, after speaking of the interest of his pupils, and their expressed desire to be like the Yankees, adds:

"But what is better than all this, a deep, quiet work of grace is in progress, extending almost over the entire colored population, and to some of the colored regiments stationed here. The work is characterized by great stillness with a corresponding earnsestness. Several of my pupils are indulging hopes, and others are inquiring. We are greatly encouraged and refreshed. . . . God follows his work of justice with a work

And another writes:

"Brothers L. and J. are teaching in a regiment near us. The regiment is heavy artillery, twelve hundred strong. A glorious revival has begun in connection with our labors here. Wonderful are the works of the Lord at this time among this people. Fifteen of our soldiers dropped on their knees yesterday for prayers, at the moment an opportunity was given."

These quotations could be easily extended. They are sufficient to show the general result of religious labors among the freedmen, put forth in love to both God and man. God in mercy answers the prayers of those whose aims are the spiritual and eternal welfare of the people and the glory of his name. To him be all the praise!

The aggregate number of missionaries (ministers and teachers) employed among the freedmen has been three hundred and twenty, and the number of scholars taught about sixteen thousand.

From the almost uniform testimony of teachers and missionaries as given in the reports, we are fully prepared to say:

- 1. That as a general thing wherever missionaries and teachers have gone, all classes, old and young, are eager to learn to readthe aged, especially that they may read the Bible-and in fact do avail themselves of the earliest opportunity.
- 2. That their progress is at least equal to that of white schools, in general, and in many instances, greater; owing, doubtless, to their thirst for that knowledge from which heretofore, they have been shut out by law.
- 3. That they are as a class ready to welcome their religious teachers, and listen to their instruction, and that the fruits of these labors are in some cases abundant.
- 4. That, with comparatively few exceptions, they are ready to avail themselves of opportunities for remunerative labor, and with Suitable counsel, to pursue it with commendable industry. True, there are exceptions, revealing a disposition on the part of some to live upon government or the community; but these exceptions are proportionally very much fewer than among the whites. Statistics show that a much larger number of them than among the poorer classes of the white population, are thriving and accumulating property, where opportunity is furnished them.

5. Although large numbers of them are in a most degraded, ignorant, and in some parts almost heathen condition, and the great mass need to be taught the practical application of the Gospel to the daily duties of life, there are some among them who may be known and read of all men as the friends of God; thus giving both encouragement and facility to missionary efforts for the masses. The more prominent vices among them are just such as the enlightened Christian would look for from the natural man, trained under the vile system of slavery.

6. That there is nothing in their nature, their disposition, or their condition, that should shut them out from the right of impartial suffrage. Their unswerving and universal loyalty entitles them to the first privilege of this kind in the States lately in rebellion. Give them the opportunity to purchase the land, equal rights in courts of justice, the jury-room and at the ballot-box, and furnish them in their transition state with Christian teachers and schools, and they will speedily give a satisfactory reply to the question: "What shall we do with the Negro?"

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY,

We should do violence to our own sense of justice did we fail to mention in terms of warm thankfulness our obligations to the managers of the American Bible Society for the large grants of Bibles and Testaments they have made to us in behalf of the freedmen. They have both given us all that we have asked, and greatly cheered and encouraged us in our work, by the gratifying manner in which they have spoken of our cooperation with them in giving the Sacred Scriptures to the colored population of the South. Our plan is to place a Bible in every cabin, either where there is an inmate to read it, or where there is any indicated desire to have it read to them by their more privileged friends. We cordially hope that the pecuniary cost of this liberality of that noble Society will be more than made up by the increased contributions of its friends.

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY OF BOSTON has also facilitated our work among the freedmen, by the publication of the Freedman and Freedman's Journal; papers especially well adapted by their simple style and high moral and religious character to do good among the freedmen. These and others of its publications have been furnished us for our schools at rates but little if any more than covering the cost, and have been found very useful.

And the strangers will be the strangers of the strangers

SINCE the close of the rebellion the demands for labor among the freedmen and in the South have so greatly increased, that the Committee have deemed it wise still further to reduce the number of their appointments in the general home missionary field. Accordingly during the latter part of the year, as commissions have expired, they have not been renewed, except for those whose labors are more or less intimately connected with the freedmen, or in the late slave States. Thus of the seventeen home missionaries and two colporters in our service, last year, the commissions of both colporters and seven home missionaries ceased. Of the ten who remain, four are laboring or will labor the whole or a part of their time in Missouri and Kentucky; two devote their main energies to the freedmen in Kansas and Missouri, preaching and superintending our school operations among them; one labors in the Egypt of Southern Illinois; one, among a destitute German population; one, with an evangelical Welsh church, receives a little aid; and one is acting as an evangelist and agent of the Association in Indiana. A still further reduction of this number may be anticipated on the ground that the Southern field is more needy, less readily supplied by others, and more directly in the line of our general labors. In parting with the missionaries whose commissions have expired, the Committee take pleasure in testifying that their connection with us has been pleasant, and in their efforts they have been true both to the slave and to Christ.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

OJIEUE AND OTTOWA MISSIONS

STATIONS: NORTHPORT AND ONUMUNESVILLE, MICH.

Mr. Smith's labors are not confined to the fragments of the Ojibue and Ottowa Indians settled about Northport, Grand Traverse Bay, Michigan. He preaches a part of the time to the whites, and the church, which numbers about fifty members, contains several white communicants. Six persons have been received into the church within the year, three of them in August. Of that occasion Mr. Green says:

"Sabbath, August thirteenth, I received three aged persons into my mission church, one man and two women; one was the widow of the old chief. It was certainly a deeply solemn and interesting occasion. To see these aged natives of the forest come forward and profess their faith and hope in Christ, and receive the seal of the covenant with the simplicity of children, was truly affecting, and was, in itself, almost sufficient reward for a life-long labor of privation and trial in the missionary field. It was a scene over which angels might rejoice. A good many were in to witness it, who seldom attend the worship of God."

Brainerd.

Rev. T. B. Penfield, the pastor of the church at Brainerd, who was present at the last meeting of the Association, has returned to the mission. The statistics of the church at Brainerd show a diminished number of members, three only having been admitted, while five have died and thirteen been cut off for disorderly conduct. The excision of so many members has been painful to the pastor and the mission; but it is believed that by increasing the purity of the church, its strength has been increased rather than diminished, and that it is now in a better state than for years previous. Its business meetings are harmonious and salutary.

The prevalent drought and the consequent distress existing for some time previous to the annual meeting of the mission, will account for in part, Mr. Penfield says, though it can not wholly excuse the poor attendance at the Sabbath-schoool and the regular Sabbath services.

Mr. Penfield proposes to leave the mission during the present year, to fulfill an early purpose of ultimately becoming a missionary in India.

Eliot.

This station, which, after the return of Rev. Mr. Thompson to this country, was for some time without a pastor, has been placed under the charge of Rev. F. J. Douglass. Mrs. Douglass died at the Mission since our last report.

The report of the station presents little that is encouraging. The past two years seem to have been a sifting period, and much that proved to be chaff or tares has been cast out. This Church shared largely in the religious excitements and physical manifestations of 1860 and 1861, and many professed converts were received into it. Almost all that joined the Church at that time, says Mr. Douglass, have proved fruitless branches.

The picture drawn by Mr. Douglass of the condition of the people of Jamaica generally is a deplorable one. Some of the vilest sins are fearfully prevalent, and public sentiment against them is not strong.

"Yet," says Mr. Douglass, "there are some bright things to look at, though they are few; and even of the dark ones I do not write despondingly. Amid all that is openly wicked, evidently spurious, or painfully doubtful, God has some true children here, some precious jewels that are without doubt being polished for the Redeemer's crown. There are Christians here, toward whom, as often as I think of them, my heart warms and yearns, while my eyes dim with sympathizing tears. There are those-the salt of the community-who are true to God, and whose hearts groan, with mine, over the abominations that surround us."

Mr. Douglass is now in this country, on a six months' leave of absence.

The school at Eliot, taught by Miss Woodcock, has not been statistically reported.

Richmond.

The church members at Richmond have hitherto been connected with Eliot; but a church is about to be formed at this station,

The Richmond station and industrial school is under the general supervision of Rev. S. T. Wolcott, now our oldest missionary on the island. Mr. Penfield, pastor at Brainerd, has, during a large part of the year just closed, been the principal instructor in the school, having but little assistance from others. The school has secured the warm approval of the inspector of schools of Jamaica, who wishes to have the Government provide for a first-class teacher, to sustain, in connection with the industrial school, a normal school numbering perhaps twenty-five young men. Mr. Wolcott says: "The Inspector takes a deep interest in our plans, and considers the carrying of them out about the only hope of Jamaica."

The school has been successful, but it needs to be more vigorously sustained to meet the wishes of its managers. The privileges of a generation of freedmen have not yet removed the teachings of slavery, that physical labor belongs only to a degraded race. Manual labor schools, under men of cultivated minds and warm Christ ian hearts, will do much to establish the Christian idea that labor is honorable.

Chesterfield.

Rev. C. B. Venning says that during the whole year, only one person has been admitted to the Church on profession of faith, and two by letter. Two have been restored, having been under discipline, while three have been cut off from the Church, and four have died. There are, he says, thirty or forty young persons in a catechumen class, who meet him for instruction every Monday morning, but none of them yet give any decided evidence of being taught of him, but with such division that where there was but one, there are now three distinct denominations, all active to break down each other and gather to themselves the whole colored population. Unhappily their zeal is without knowledge, and their efforts of little avail in promoting a religion of purity and truth. Mr. Venning has sought to repress every thing like a proselytish spirit among his people, as destructive of holiness. He says, dark as things appear, he fully believes God is with his people there, carrying on and maturing the work of grace in their hearts.

Providence.

Rev. Mr. Fisher writes that there is little change to report at Providence station. The state of the Church is about what it has been; it should be better. There is peace and harmony, but this is not satisfactory. They need, both in the Church and out of it, the powerful influences of the Holy Spirit.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have been called to mourn the death of a daughter, - years of age, and Mrs. Fisher has herself suffered much from sickness. The school at Providence is small.

Brandon Hill.

The pastor of this church, Rev. Mr. Wilson, together with his wife, is now in this country, on account of Mrs. W.'s ill-health. In their absence Mr. Fisher resides at Brandon Hill, and has charge of the Church and station. Mr. Wilson said, at the time he left:

"The church seems to be active and alive in every respect. Most generally the meetings were well attended and the people seemed anxious to serve God earnestly and truly.

"Much attention was paid to the Sabbath-school, and all seemed very much interested in it. It was well attended and very pleasant. There was considerable thoughtfulness and concern manifested among the scholars, for their salvation. Several of them were all of the scholars, for their salvation. members of the inquiring class, and two were received into the church just before I left.
"The school was well attended part of the time, but was broken up before I left on account of the small-pox which was then prevailing.

"The church seemed very much interested in the affairs of the station. They made quite a heavy contribution (for them, in their circumstances, to make) toward completing the chapel. There had been very little discipline needed. A few formerly cut off had been restored to the church. On the whole, I think the condition of the church as good, and even better than I ever knew it before, and every thing seems more promising for the future."

The work of the Lord, in the island of Jamaica, is far from being what your Committee and the missionaries would be glad to see it. A part of the causes that have seemed to contribute to this result are physical. Portions of the island have been visited with a very severe drought, and in consequence the people have been in distress, many of them, they say, unable to fit their children for school or themselves for the house of God.

From responses received in answer to inquiries made from the rooms of the Association, the Committee are satisfied that your missionaries feel deeply pained by the state of things, not only within the bounds of their own stations, but in the Island generally. One of them says:

NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

"It is indeed a 'day of reproach,' 'By whom shall Jacob arise?' is a serious, searching question. I suppose we must be as sadly affected by it as you can be. It ing question. I suppose we must be as sadly affected by it as you can be. It is a painful question often forced on us, must I be a 'savor of death unto death?' Must I accept the contrary of what I desire and labor to obtain? Yes, often. But thank God, not always. I think of the prophets, apostles, and martyrs—of our Lord himself, the personification of truth and holiness in doctrine and in life. With all his divine purity, excellence, loveliness, I see him 'despised, rejected of men,' 'a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.' In spite of his faithfulness, of his infinite benevolence, and power, too, I find him saying of and to men: 'Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life.' 'Men have loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.' 'O Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together.' 'Father, forgive them for they know not what they do.' Can the darkness of such a picture be laid to the charge of unfaithfulness either of the Lord or of his servants? We spread the Gospel feast, but it is rejected. The world begs to be excused. So with our Master. But Gospel feast, but it is rejected. The world begs to be excused. So with our Master. But Gos forbid that we should use these things as an apology for our own deficiencies or defects. Let our prayer be: 'Lord, search me and try me, and see if there be any evil way in me.' But may we not take the facts of other times for encouragement and hope, in the darkness of our own? Must we not work on, even couragement and hope in the darkness of our own? Must we not work on even though with the prospect of being compelled to say in the end, 'Behold, your house is left unto you desolate'?' And have we no fruit of our labors?' God knoweth. HUELO and KEOKEA-Under the charge of Rev. J. P. GREEN.

Of Makawao its pastor says:

"Three hundred is the number admitted to the church from the first, within the limits of my present parish. Of the deaths, removals, and suspensions, I can not obtain an exact account. You may report me the three hundred for the present."

The statistics of Huelo and Keokea have not been reported.

This mission has been almost wholly self-supporting, drawing very little from our treasury. The missionaries have, however, subjected themselves to some severe trials in the carrying out of their plans.

Of the seminary established nearly two years since by Rev. J. P. Green, for the education of Hawaiian girls, Miss Green writes:

"I feel bound to do every thing in my power for its success. "It now numbers twenty-six pupils. An additional room was found neccessary, but that, I fear, will not accommodate all the applicants. We shall regret much to have any refused admittance. Our terms are low, in order that the daughters of the poorer natives may be enabled to avail themselves of the benefits of the institution.

"My brother is sometimes sorely tired, not knowing from what source he shall obtain means to carry on this great work. The Hawaiian Board has donated three hundred dollars, which he used for repairs on the house; and before another winter of rain, there must be quite an outlay upon the roof, to make the building habitable.

"As I stood and scanned one and another of the girls at our Sunday-school, last

Sabbath, I mentally exclaimed, 'Thank God for such a change in those dear girls,' and then the sad thought came: 'What if we should be obliged to send them all to their

Rev. J. S. Green makes his report this year, on the twenty-second anniversary of his arrival at Makawao as pastor and teacher. The year, he says, has been one of peculiar trial. Among the discouragements he mentions particularly the constant and rapid decrease of the people. In twenty years the number of the pupils in the schools from Huelo to Keokea, has been reduced from eight hundred to less than four hundred. Meeting-houses much larger than are needed, though once well filled with worshiping congregations; desolated fields, once teeming with inhabitants; and the ratio of two burials to one birth tell the story of an affecting decrease. The nation, he says, can not long stand such a draft.

Other causes of discouragement which he names are: first, the king's taking from the people their constitution, the gift of Kamehameha and giving them one which takes from about two thirds of them the right of suffrage, and in other ways affects them unfavorably. Second, the almost entire failure of wheat-growing, or of finding a substitute for that product, makes it difficult for the church, greatly weakened by death, removals, etc., to sustain their own religious institutions, or aid in sending the Gospel to the neighboring islands of the Pacific. Third, the mode of sustaining other missionaries on the islands embarrasses his efforts to make his church self-sustaining. The experience of the year, he says, deepens his conviction-

"That it was a mistake to suppose that by putting back the old missionaries on a salary, and thus relieving the Hawaiian churches of the duty and privilege of aiding their foreign teachers and pastors, more means would be secured for native pastors, and for the support of missions at the Marquesas and Micronesian Islands. The influence of this movement on my people is injurious.

"I find encouragement in the assured belief that a portion of the church, a few of the

"I find encouragement in the assured belief that a portion of the church, a few of the many who have named the name of Christ, are of the true Israel of God and are growing in grace and adorning the doctrines of God their Saviour.

"The gospel of Christ, with its overtures of mercy, which I have been permitted to preach another year to foreigners and natives, in English and Hawaiian, affords of itself encouragement in my work. I seem to hear the voice of the Master, saying: 'In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

"During the year my labors have been confined to Makawao proper, including a portion of Hamakua and Kulu, and excluding Huelo and Keckea. These two districts, formerly out-stations, I gave up to, my son op his return from the United States, early in 1864. The preaching in English, once on the Sabbath, still devolves on me. For my services in English, I obtain from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars a year, which has enabled me to eke out my support, the few years past, though it may not much longer, as my people—native church—have paid me less than ninety dollars the first six months of the year. Things look dark in this direction, but I desire to 'trust in the Lord and do good,' so as to secure the fulfillment of the promise that I shall 'dwell in the land and verily be fed.'"

SIAM MISSION.

BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries-Rev. D. B. BRADLEY, Mrs. SARAH B. BRADLEY.

No material change has been made at this mission during the year. Progress calculated to cheer the heart, or stir the emotions of sympathizing friends, has not been reported. The usual labors of the mission, preaching the Gospel, holding other religious services, printing and distributing portions of the Bible and religious tracts, and visiting the people, have been pursued, but without marked results. The mission, however, has made no drafts on our treasury, having been sustained by the use of the printing-office, and a personal donation of four hundred and eighty dollars to Dr. Bradley from the King.

When the Association assumed the care of the mission in Siam, it purchased, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, dwelling-houses for three families, and an ample supply of printing-presses and type. Since the mission force has been reduced to one family, these things have been made available to the support of the mission. Dr. Bradley earnestly desires to be relieved from the care of the printing-office, and aided in his general mission work; he therefore requests that two assistants should be sent to the mission, an ordained minister and a practical printer. The Executive Committee have not yet felt that Providence had prepared the way for this; although the persistent faith of the missionaries in Siam, and the preparation made by long years of faithful labor, and the circulation of scriptural and religious reading, suggest the hope that there may yet be a precious ingathering of spiritual fruit in that kingdom. Thousands of pages of the sacred Scriptures, and of Christian tracts have been spread over the land; they have been more or less read, and can hardly fail to work a gradual change among the people. It is thought that a secret but powerful influence is thus affecting the Siamese mind. The Executive Committee will be glad to correspond with any who may be called by God, and prepared for service in that country.

MENDI MISSION, WEST-AFRICA.

STATIONS AND OUT-STATIONS: GOOD HOPE, (SHERBRO ISLAND.) VICTORIA, AVERY, BORTHE. Missiongries-Rev. H. H. Hinman, M.D., Rev. G. P. Claplin, Rev. E. J. Adams, M.D., D. W. Burton, M.D., S. J. Whiton, Mrs. Hisman, Mrs. Claplin, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Whiton, Mrs. Mair, Miss Herrietta Masson.

Assistants-Rev. GEO. N. JEWETT, JOHN JOHNSON.

Rev. C. F. Winship and wife, formerly connected with this Mission, who hoped, one year ago, to rejoin it, were prevented by the continued ill-health of Mr. Winship. He died at Princeton, Ill., July first, 1865. Mrs. Whiton died at the Mission, Good Hope, November ninth, 1864, in child-bed, having been previously greatly weakened by diseases of the climate. Mr. Whiton and Mr. Adams left the Mission to return to the United States in December. Mrs. Mair rejoined the Mission, after a short absence, March twenty-first, 1865, accompanied by Miss Henrietta Matson, who had been recently appointed. In consequence of the entire prostration of Miss Matson's health, they both returned to this country in September. Mrs. Mair is now waiting a vessel, daily expected to sail from Boston, to return to the mission. Mr. and Mrs. Claffin, and Mr. and Mrs. Burton, who have spent the whole year in this country, expect to sail in the same vessel.

It will thus be seen, that in the providence of God, the history of this Mission during the year is one of great vicissitudes. We may add to this, that the cost of sustaining the Mission, owing to the very high rates of exchange, has been comparatively great, more than double what it would otherwise have been. This increased expense, combined with the great demand for missionary laborers among the freedmen, and the absorption of young and middle-aged men in the armies of the country, has deprived the Committee of the ability to reinforce the Mission as it needed. For no inconsiderable portion of the year Rev. Mr. Hinman and wife have been the only white missionaries at the Mission, assisted by native helpers, partly from Sierra Leone, and partly by those educated at the Mission.

Yet the Mission has not been wholly left without seeing fruits of its labor. In June, having returned after a year's absence, Mrs. Mair wrote:

"I can see some progress has been made. Our children give some evidence of the labor that has been expended on them. Two of them are conducting the out-school art this station. They perform the greater part of the duties of a native teacher, and are we trust, being fitted for future labors among their own people. We hope that our young people, being thus able to gain experience in teaching, while still under our mediate care, will improve in stability of character, so that we can with safety send them to the out-posts by and by."

April seventh, Rev. Mr. Hinman wrote:

"You will be pleased to know that the spiritual state of our Mission is rather better than it has been. The regular attendance on the Sabbath and evening meetings is better than formerly. Last Sabbath three native members were received into the church, one of whom was a Kroo boy, one of two who came to us from a distance, as they said, 'to learn about God.' This one, who has been converted, seems to have truly learned of God, and is, I think, a simple-hearted, earnest Christian."

And July tenth, he wrote:

"Every thing connected with our missionary work is as prosperous as we have a right to expect. Several young persons are manifestly seeking the Lord, and at our last communion season two young men were baptized and united with the church. For two years past we have thought them to be Christians, but they did not feel ready to unite with the church until now."

Africa is a most needy and trying missionary field. Its doors are wide open, so that the heralds of the cross may go everywhere and find an abundant and easy entrance; and, aside from the influence of the climate, no heathen country that we know of presents so few obstacles to the introduction of the Gospel. A needy and an open field is God's call to all who, having in their hands the Saviour's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," are not already specially engaged elsewhere. Thousands of Christian young men have laid their lives upon the altar of their country to suppress an infamous rebellion; and now, when a gracious Providence is giving them relief, and allowing them to return home in peace and safety, will they not anew consecrate themselves to the service of the Saviour, to suppress the Great Rebellion against the King of kings, the Lord of lords?

Makes the one promiter on other our care. 'We can have seent-the

We are specially anxious to sustain a vigorous Mission in Africa at the present time, believing that the success of missionary labors among the freedmen will yet furnish an abundant supply of missionaries and teachers, who will rise up, and with songs and rejoicing carry the gospel of their own salvation to that continent. An ordained missionary and family, and one or two female assistants, are now greatly needed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Five hundred and twenty eight life-members have been added to the Association during the year; and the death of twelve has been reported. The whole number of life-members from the beginning has been four thousand three hundred and sixty-three. The Treasurer's report shows an aggregate of cash receipts of $134,181.18, being an increase of about $39,000, over those of last year, and more than double that of 1863. Cash borrowed, $5249.92. Estimated value of clothing for the freedmen, $61,674.40; making a total of receipts and disbursements of $201,105.50, of which $157,459.63 was for the freedmen: no inconsiderable sum in the aggregate, yet your committee are painfully sensible, small, very small, compared with the past or present wants of the people.

An average of 7500 copies of the American Missionary Magazine have been issued monthly, and 17,250 copies folio, making in all for the year, 391,000. We believe its issues have greatly increased the interest felt for the freedmen, and added to the contributions in their behalf.

CONCLUSION.

In this brief survey of the fields in which our missionary labors have been put forth it can not fail to be observed that the providences of God more and more plainly indicate the dark and benighted people of the continent of Africa, and the freedmen and others ignorant and destitute among the colored people of the United States, as the peculiar objects of our care. We can but accept the trust, and in the discharge of it, labor not for a party, nor a denomination, nor yet for our country only, but for a continent, a people, and for Christ. In appealing to Christians and philanthropists in their behalf, we neither forget nor obscure the scriptural truth, that in seeking their welfare, especially those in our own land, we seek our own, in watering them we are watered, in promoting their interest we promote that of the whole country. Nor can we conceal our deep anxiety that patriots and Christians should know their time and opportunity. To every generation is offered the high privilege of making its mark for God and humanity, and of doing a work, the impress of which shall endure so long as the world endures. Our patriot fathers of the revolution improved their opportunity, and proclaimed the right of every man to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," but failed to make the proper application to the slaves of our country, and the opportunity passed from them forever. Our Christian fathers of the generation just passing away, did a noble work for Christ and the world in establishing the great missionary and religious publication societies which have been the glory of the age. These were founded with a Christ-like benevolence; but the demands which that benevolence made in behalf of the slave were not fully comprehended, and the opportunity of bursting the bonds of millions through the power of Gospel truth passed away forever, leaving their emancipation to be effected by the sword, and our land to be deluged with blood. Now to our age, in church and state, is the glorious privilege given of bringing up four millions of an oppressed but now delivered people, through the exercise of Christian benevolence and the practical application of the blessed Gospel. The opportunity is ours, the time is now; shall we be found heart and hand engaged in it, or will we let it pass for another generation, and bring upon ourselves and our children the curse of a lost opportunity, an unfulfilled obligation?

Bran Burnens: I write in response to your request that I would give you may there of what ought to be done for the Freedmen of the South, and what will be done in their behalf if Christians and philanthropists in our land shall perform their whole duty toward them. I understand you to solids these views, not for want of information upon this topic, as you are doubless able to comprehend this subject more clearly in all its bearings than I could do; but to obtain the view of a person more especially conversant with the South, and you or to the friends of your excellence regalation. Indeed, every thing is so uncertain at this time, it is so difficult to foresee what shall be on the morrow, or to guess at the ultimate results of the reconstruction policy which is now prevailing here, that one feels singularly uncertain what measures to take or what counsels to give.

What we wish to do is plain enough. We desire to instruct the colored people of the South, to lift them up from subserviency and helplessness into a dignified independence and citizenship. We wish to liaspire them with all the virtues of individual and social life, and prepare them to cnjoy the rights and perform the duties of free men under the law in one great republic.

We may be sure that this is a work which the South coll not do. They are subdued by arms, thoroughly so, and will not think of lifting up the sword again against the National Government; but, on the whole, they hate the ideas of the North as much as ever, and will yield to them no further than they judge to be politic and helpful of their chances to reasms power and control in the listed. They tolerate negro schools in the larger towns, and under the shadow of bayonets; but in the remote counties, such possible.

If, then, Offristians and philanthropists are, like the Apostie, debtors both to the Jew and in the Greek, the wise and the unwise, they must pay this debt. In gifts and graces, in prayer and labor, in institutions and observances among this people. In no other way can so the properties of the string, in an interest and the tribunch of a possible reaction. Let the ground be precocupied. Let the Oburnd gain possession of it, which is nine points of the law, divine as well as human in in a few months more—perhaps not more than two or three—all utilitary forces will be withdrawn from these States. The people will no longer see the arm that subdiand, them. They will practice what they precedes, and act out their real realings. They will do many things which they dure not do in the presence of a military force. Now is the time, then, to strike a hard blow. Work done in the next few months will be worth more than in the years that follow.

will be worth more than in the years that follow.

In my own ophino, not every important means of doing good in the South, though it does not lie, perhaps, within the scope of your influences, is to settle it with good men, who shall become proprietors of the soil, citizens of the State, and examples of enterprise and thrift, as well as of the Christian graces. I know of no objection to a man's doing good as an agriculturist, a manufacturer, or a mechanic, even if he be making money at the same time. The more of honest, liberty-loving, faithful Christian men, that you can induce to go into the South, and settle there with their families, stimulated in part by the motive of pecuniary gain, the better will it be for the freedmen, the whites, rich and poor, and for the whole land. At this time I count an emigrant with good principles to be half a missionary.

In respect to labors which are more distinctively educational and evangelical, a system which shall group together several teachers employed constantly in schools, with a missionary engaged in out-of-door labors from house to house, would seem to be best adapted to circumstances in this part of the country, and most likely be be successful. It strikes me that there is but little probability that the Southern States themselves will voluntarily establish any system of education for their freed people country, and most likely to be successful. It strikes me that there is but little probability that the Southern States themselves will voluntarily establish any system of education for their freed people which will be likely to supersede the efforts of benevolent organizations at the North for years to come; not until they have been leavened gradually, and moulded by the stow, still hand of time, will they become greatly changed in their habits of thought, feeling, and action.

I do not feel in the least discouraged respecting the work of reconstructing society here, nor doubtful of the success of our agencies in this field. We ought to be full of hope and of faith, full of zeal and of enterprises. By all means, exhort our brethren and friends at the North to persevere and be confient. It is a work in which we can not fall. Let those who engage in it be filled with the Spirit, and ready to endure hardness as good soldlers of Christ. The approxing smile of the Master will be their constant simulus, and the preclous fruits of benevolent love their daily reward.

I offer these suggestions in great haste, and the pressure of cares almost innumerable. If in any strengthen your opinions and ald your efforts.

ONLY ONE HUMAN RACE.

BRETHREN: The enemies of the African race are now disarmed by the military power of our government. But the moral conflict still rages, nor will it terminate until a false public sentiment shall equally have been subdued. Let us, then, wield against it this sword of the Spirit, which I find in the old armory on the shelf marked:

Acrs 17: 26: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to; dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the bounds of their habitation."

This weapon was first used by our great champion Paul, in his celebrated attack on the Athenian philosophy on Mars' Hill.

It should be remembered that he did not address the sages of Greece as a physiologist, but as a Christian Apostle; teaching not anatomy, but charity. He was not giving his hearers the results of "cadaveric autopsy," when thus declaring the identity of the blood in the human races; but, attacking one of the abominable theories of heathenism; announcing a truth which even the acute Grecian intellect had failed to discern-a truth which confronted two of the fundamental errors of its theology. He announced to that Athenian audience a Creator, one Creator of all men; one God, in whose underived essence are concentrated all, and infinitely more than all the attributes their theology had divided and distributed among the several deities of the Parthenon. He exhibited man in the sublime relation he occupies as a citizen of God's empire. He exhibited the human race and its unity, not the product of a soil or a country, not an accident; but the child of one Father in heaven. In this he corrected the proud and arrogant theory of the Athenians, that they were Autocthones, sprung from the sacred soil. He declared that all the tribes of men are distributed over the world by one and the same paternal oversight; implying that this was designed, not to divide and alienate the several races, but to promote their common good; as any patrimony is divided among the children of a family for both their common and their individual benefit. In a word, the Apostle here announces

OUR COMMON MANHOOD.

I now bring it before you, not to advance the boundary of science, nor even to distribute its treasures; not to communicate a single fact with which you may not be well acquainted. My purpose is entirely practical. And it is on its practical side I now invite you to contemplate this subject. Let us, then, notice in what consists,

I. The identity of the human race.—It is strange that any one can have failed to discern the distinguishing endowments of manhood, to mark the definite line that separates man from the inferior races; or can have questioned whether the difference is in kind or only in degree; that even scientific men have claimed to find their progenitor in the squash, and themselves to be monkeys minus the tail; that they have failed to see that a gulf, impassable, lies between man and the most intelligent quadruped. But, strange as it is, we can account for it: it is a necessary consequence of our apostasy from God, that we should be untrue to ourselves. It would be easy to state fifty distinct qualities, properties, and relations monopolized by man. It may, however, suffice our purpose to consider them in a few classes. We notice,

1. His physical peculiarities.—While man combines in himself the mineral, vegetable, and animal, he is infinitely superior to them all; sublimating in his own person all these orders of existence to their loftiest uses; linking the material to the spiritual, the earthly to the angelical, the mundane to the celestial, the finite to the infinite.

From all the other distinguishing features we select one, and that the hand, as our badge. Whenever you find a class of animals that has not a developed thumb, you find a class that is not human. Mr. Roget says, (Bridg. Treat. Roget, vol. i. 314,) "It is only in man that the fore (upper) extremities are exempted from the office of supporting and moving the body, and are at liberty to be applied to other purposes, and employed as instruments of prehension and touch. In the power of executing an infinite variety of movements, and of action requiring either strength, delicacy, or precision, the human arm and hand, considered in their mechanism alone, are structures of unrivaled excellence."

We may say, then, that whatever by its nature lacks a thumb, that is, a fifth finger coming squarely in front of the other four, face to face, has not the family-badge; the right blood is not in it. Our human blood always flows through the thumb, because the thumb is the indispensable instrument of art and civilization. By it we handle the pen, the pencil, the sword, the knife, the ax, the graver, the helm, the rope, the chisel, the trowel, the spade, the organ. Monkeys and dogs may imitate us; but they can not build the Parthenon or sculpture the Apollo, paint the Transfiguration, write the Æneid, telegraph thought through space swifter than wind, span the rivers, or navigate the seas.

If any of you, having a facial angle somewhat acute, a cuticle inclined to the sable, have been told that your skin indicates you are not a man, hold up your thumb, and silence the slanderer. If your hand is crowned with a fully-developed thumb, go on your way rejoicing; you belong to our family—you are not a gorilla, but a man. If any one ever questions your manhood, show him that you can handle the needle, the pen. Write your name, and ask him; "Am I not a brother?"

If you should meet two objects; one of them using its hands as feet, call that an animal; but the other, walking erect, call it a man, even if its hair should be red or gray, (which is not the classic color,) its skin white, with a tinge of carnation, or even olive, or black.

But we leave the physical, to speak of higher things; to run over an inventory of the family possessions.

2. The intellectual faculties distinguish man; some of them absolutely; others, in their combinations and degrees.

Reason is one, including the capacity to recognize spiritual existence. Who believes that a horse or an orang-outang knows what spirit is? Reason is the foundation of general knowledge and of reasoning, because by it we intuitively believe first principles or axioms. By it we recognize the Infinite.

Reasoning is another, or the discursive faculty by which one proposition is proved by other propositions. Judgment is another; by which testimony is weighed, by which comparisons are made. It is the faculty that uses the words long, beautiful, deformed, and all other adjectives and epithets.

Imagination, or the power of intellectual creation, by which a poem or pleasure-garden is constructed. Abstraction and generalization, by which we classify objects and persons.

Memory we share with some brutes, but in such form and degree as to make it, in reality, another faculty. Man remembers dates, processes of reasoning, events, history, poetry. Foresight is feebly manifested in some brutes and insects; but in man, it is the capacity of deriving motives to action, from his endless future.

Articulate language; with all its beauty and power, is an endowment totally human, however brutes may utter their sentiments in the coarse sounds of the barnyard, or the song of the mocking-bird.

Artificial language is another distinction of the human race, in both the peculiar and exquisite organs which produce it, and which appreciate it, and in the mind that employs it. And some of these languages are found, among the ruder tribes of Africa and America, evincing a refinement of thought which ill accords with the present condition of the people there.

3. The moral faculties characterize Man.—He has a conscience or moral sense; not only distinguishing right from wrong, but appreciating moral beauty and deformity; judging character; estimating actions by motives; anticipating the scrutiny of the final judgment, and its awards. Man is also distinguished by

4. His social qualities.—Many animals are gregarious. Bees and ants form organized companies, but man alone can make what man would call society, with its thousand delicate relations, its vast ramifications, its broad and various play of intellectual and moral forces. Man adds to these,

5. The capacity for boundless progress.—Isaac Newton can lie in his cradle a helpless infant, having not an idea in his mind. He can grow into an intellectual stature that is gigantic. Our Saxon ancestors were barbarians; their descendants have made vast advances beyond their condition.

You meet a Feejean, and are puzzled by him, not knowing whether he is a brute or a man. Bring him and his child and his young horse to a Christian family in America; try to educate both the colt and the boy, and see whether the Creator has not drawn an eternal cordon of separation between the lowest specimen of the human races and the highest of the brutes, in this exhaustless capacity for improvement. Man is also distinguished by

6. His relations to God and the Universe.—He is a child of God, made for the moral government of God. As one has said of the stars, we may say of the animals: "God never gave them the ten commandments." The horse, the ape, or the elephant, can never say to God, "Abba, Father." A day of judgment is not revealed to the animals, with an eternity of retribution beyond it—this is the prerogative of man. Love to God is his privilege; it is the attainment of the good, possible to all men.

Man is a religious being. He may worship a stone or a crocodile; it is still the religious sentiment working outward. What we call superstition may be considered part of the religion of man; as the Bassoutous of Africa beautifully express it—superstition is a truth turned into a false track.

You never find a monkey worshiping any thing. Then, also,

7. Man's relations to nature distinguish him.—Man is the lord of creation. He can subdue the forces of nature; he can make all the inferior races subordinate and serviceable. No matter what the color of his skin or the angle of his forehead, he can build a ship, and call it the Great Eastern; he can make a compass, and steer a ship by it at night, away from Sumter, the rebel fortress, to a loyal fleet; he can level mountains, and raise up valleys; dry up marshes, bridge over rivers, and make a railroad or a telegraph to span a continent.

The original command to him was: "Replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."

That was the original enfeoffment of the race, the deed of grant by which man obtained the fee-simple of this vast estate. This was the act of royalty endowing man with lordship and authority, with right to enter and use this whole portion of God's domains for his own purposes. And wherever you find a being that can read, or be taught to read and understand that title-deed, and use these rights, you find a man.

And I would now mention but one other distinctive feature of manhood:

8. God's peculiar treatment of Man. - On this point we can ask no leave of material science, but take the inspired book for our guide, and affirm several facts. All the generations of men, for the last four thousand years, were saved in the same ark, from the flood that drowned a world. Every genealogical record, to be complete, must begin with Noah. Every genealogical tree has its roots in that ark. We all meet there around the one family altar; kings, beggars, House of Hapsburg, cannibal of the South Sea, Wade Hampton, and Pompey. And again, when God would save the world His Son, took on Him our common nature. He became a Jew, but that was incidental; the essential fact is, he became a man. Whenever, then, you find a man, you find a being whose nature the Son of God has taken into eternal unity with Deity. This is the crown that adorns the brow of every member of our race. God has recognized no distinction there. His Son assumed the nature of neither animal nor angel, but man. Then again in consequence of this, the Gospel is God's offer to all men, of eternal life, on the same conditions: Believe, and thou art saved. Whoever can believe in Christ must be a man. There are not two kinds of pardon, one for a rich man and another for a poor man; two crosses; two fountains for the cleansing of the soul; two gates and two narrow paths to heaven; two Bibles; two mercy-seats; two Saviours; one heaven for the white man and another for the black man. One, one; all through time, all through eternity. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." God hath made, not of two, or ten, but of one blood, all nations of men. And he has carried the same unity through his method of salvation. But it is demanded: do not

DIVERSITIES EXIST?

They do. I understand them to be of three kinds: differences in the bony structure; in certain superficial secretions; in the temperament. So far as I am informed, this difference, however, does not extend to a single vital organ, or to the composition or functions of the brain, to a degree that necessitates an essential inferiority in any branch of the race. But, what is vital to our purpose, these diversities leave intact every one of those distinguishing features of manhood which I have now been enumerating and describing.

These diversities evidently were not designed to promote pride in one part of the race, and a degrading sense of inferiority in another, any more than the delicacy of woman in contrast with the robustness of man was designed for this end. They are a part of the beneficent plan of God, by which men are adapted to obey the law of mutual love, and for the promotion of our common benefit. Their principal design seems to have been to secure the religious development of mankind; one race excelling in the sentimental adaptation to religion, the other, in the intellectual; one, imparting; another, receiving, making superiority of endowment in races, as in a single family, promote the benevolence of the stronger, and the grateful dependence of the weaker.

But before leaving this part of our subject, permit me to offer my salutations to physiological science, especially to such of its representatives as have labored to demonstrate the plurality of species in the human race.

Men of material science, why should you and the men of faith ever oppose each other? The ends you seek are entirely harmonious, though diverse, and reached by different processes. Both aim at elevating man; one, by employing and expanding the intellect; the other, by employing the moral faculty. The one gets at facts by believing its material senses and the testimony of man; the other, by believing its moral sense and the testimony of God. The one advances the material interests of man; the other, his moral, social, and immortal welfare.

Do not indulge the vain fancy that science can look down on Scripture; that the dissecting-room is essentially a better place or a more attractive place, than the sanctuary; that the scholar stands on any firmer foundation than the saint. Both are mere interpreters of a book; each has his Scripture, from whence all his particular knowledge is derived. Neither invents the facts of his creed, neither invents the ultimate and eternal principles which lie at the root of all he believes. Both find them, and believe them as they find them, whether revealed by words, or by stars and stones. Faith is as much a human faculty as sight or reasoning, and no more liable to deceive us than they.

Nay, if you urge us to the comparison, we shall go still farther, and say there is a nobler science than that of material forms and forces; a science standing on higher ground than yours, employing nobler faculties, handling loftier themes, effecting an infinitely higher good than yours.

We may live harmoniously together, but we have no fears of a contest, except that it wastes strength, disturbs good fellowship, and diverts many from more useful pursuits.

Let science and faith recognize their peculiar and coördinate spheres, and accord each other a full measure of respect. Legitimately they have no quarrel with each other. For instance, science does not contradict this doctrine of Paul. Science says she finds the pigments in the skin of the African, the Mongolian, and the Caucasian races to differ from each other. Paul says nothing to the contrary. He does not affirm that God-made all men with the same coloring matter under the skin. It is not the pigments of which he here says one word. It is the blood of men of which he affirms identity or unity. Science says she can trace every race of men back to certain habitats or places of their original dwelling. Very well; be it so. Scripture affirms nothing contrary to that, but distinctly admits that there is a habitat for each race, and affirms that God made each nation to dwell in its own. It does not affirm that God made every nation inhabit the same country. It affirms identity only of the blood, and affirms that the race made of one blood were to dwell all over the face of the earth.

While, as before remarked, the Apostle was not lecturing on anatomy to the philosophers of Athens, but on moral and religious principles, and therefore used the word blood in its figurative sense, yet even if Scripture, in this affirmation, had employed it literally, science could not contradict the affirmation. Man of science, have you found that people whose blood lacks a single essential property of human blood, be it structural, chemical or vital! The osseous structure, the coloring matter, the hair, may vary from your ideal standard; but the blood literally, perhaps, certainly as used in a moral sense, is identical in us all.

Does science affirm that every tribe originally had its distinct habitat? We must set that down as mere affirmation, and we shall confidently set the positive testimony of God against her crude analogies. Having then noticed the essential and distinguishing characteristics of a human being, let us now proceed to consider, II. What rights and prerogatives are conferred by our common manhood, and what duties and responsibilities it imposes.

God has made nations and individual men, like all his other works, in such a way as to avoid monotony; incessant variety characterizing those most alike and most intimately allied. But on man, everywhere and forever, he has conferred certain indefeasible and inalienable rights; the great prerogatives of manhood, which it is sacrilege to violate, which are defended by the eternal justice, with its fiery, two-edged sword.

It has often been remarked that man and society can never rise above a semi-barbarism, so long as woman, the weaker sex, is treated unfairly and unkindly by the stronger sex. And it is true. But it is equally true in regard to the weaker members and branches of our race.

Let us, then, look for the rights and obligations of manhood:

1, Self-respect is the first of duties, never to be confounded with pride or self-conceit. Self-respect is the homage due to the nature and endowments conferred on us by a bounteous Creator, perfectly consistent with the profoundest humility, which has reference to the weaker side of our nature, and our moral delinquencies. The negro is bound to respect the manhood that is in him. It is noble, beautiful, grand. His mind, his moral nature, is as noble as Gabriel's; inferior, not in-kind, only in degree. And woe to him that attempts to diminish that self-respect in any negro!

2. Mutual respect.—Reverence is a duty toward God; reverence for him, and for every thing that is stamped with his image. You may chastise a child, not contemptuously, not vengefully, but with a reverential regard for his immortal nature, and a reverential remembrance of his relations to God and the universe, his rank in the scale of being.

3. Justice is claimed by our manhood.—Brutes have no such claim on one another, nor on man. Mercy or compassion, and a patronizing affection is all that is due to them. But he who bears the stamp of manhood, can claim of every other man justice; and if man denies it, the appeal of the injured, though rejected in every earthly court, will be heard on high.

Our revolutionary fathers appear to have been more profoundly versed in political science than we. In their wisdom, they uttered this oracle: Amongst the inalienable rights of man, conferred, not by human authority, but by the infinite Creator, are these—life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness.

All men have a right to life; a right never forfeited by birth under any circumstances, by color of the skin or shape of the bones; but only by personal crime of the highest order: No legislation, no biblical exegesis, no sanction of the Church, no usage or public sentiment can make it other than a crime in the sight of Heaven, to diminish the length of a human life intentionally, or by indifference or carelessness.

Liberty is the right of man, to be abridged only by the restrictions of God's law, never by the demands of selfishness.

The pursuit of happiness is a prerogative of manhood. Any restriction placed on that, in any individual, for the benefit of another individual, or any class, without the free consent of the person thus prevented, is a crime, however sanctioned.

4. Love is the claim of every human being.—The law that binds every man to love his neighbor as himself, at the same time gives him a claim on the love of every other human being. No human tribunal can enforce it; but it will be solemnly, thoroughly enforced by a divine tribunal. Neither a man nor a nation can entertain wrong feelings, or withhold right feelings, with impunity. On the cultivation of delicate sensibility, a high-toned sense of justice, and appreciation of the rights and good qualities of others, depend both personal and national character.

We may build up a form of character that shall pass current as the world now is—yea a piety that men will acknowledge—even what will be regarded as a high civilization, which shall include a profound, cruel prejudice, or a cruel indifference to the welfare of a portion of our race; but it will be a piety, a civilization God does not approbate. A religion that does not recognize the moral unity of the human race can not be Christ's religion. We have, in fact, been contending with embattled hosts on this very point, whether the Christianity of this continent shall be a baptized Paganism; whether it shall resemble Russia, as she once was, is now no longer, of which one thus writes: "On all its broad plains, on the daily life of that serf-owning aristocracy, on the whole class which is neither of serfs nor serf-owners, the curse of God is written in letters so big and black that all mankind may read them."

We may not safely leave out of our benevolent consideration, by design, with positive intention, by accepted principles of politics or morals, any part of the human race. We owe love to every man; a love that, while admitting of intensity within a limited circle of kindred, friends, and countrymen, admits of no such thing as contempt for natural endowments, disregard of the most precious rights, or indifference to the highest welfare of any human being.

Have we not all one Father? God hath made us all, and all of one blood.

And these are the directions he has given us concerning one another: "Be ye kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another." He says we are members of Christ's body; and must therefore feel toward each other the respect and love which becomes so sublime a relation. He says: "If one member suffer, all suffer with it." That is the case with every healthy body. His servant, Paul, expresses his will when he says: "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor, for his good to edification."

In fact, the moment you admit that the negro is a man, you admit that American Christianity has been very unbiblical.

O my countrymen! suffer me to remonstrate with you. My plea, if you will hear it, is strong, for it is eternal truth. I plead,

1. For God's honor; for his image defiled, distorted, effaced, des pised by you. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. So God created man in his own likeness, in the image of God created he him." How will you answer to him, if his image is in the body, when his African children bring their lacerated, maimed bodies, their visages imbruted by the life of intellectual and moral degradation to which you bound them with all the power of a mighty empire? If that image is in the spirit, how dare you despise it, wherever it is found? If God is represented, as every father is, by each of his children, do you not know that a parent's sensitiveness about his children's honor is as great as that which respects his own? This is one of his dreadful indictments recorded for the great day of assizes: "Ye have despised the poor!" Negro's blood has been shed on this soil, in this city, as if he were a brute. But the sentence of Jehovah is: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God made he him."

I plead with you again by,

2. The redemption work of Christ. That work, beginning at the manger, and ending in the sepulcher, was the expression of love; love higher than heaven, deeper than hell, stronger than sin or death or justice; but love of which you and the negro alike partake, and equally. If you stand at the foot of the cross, to have that cleansing blood fall upon your soul, there will probably be a negro by your side. If you go to the mercy-seat at any hour, you will probably find two there to one of your own complexion. If you go to heaven, you will certainly meet an immense multitude of them there; and you will find your color not worth much there. Love the people with whom you are to spend eternal ages in the same family, sharing every honor and favor with you.

I plead with you, by

3. Your nation's honor. The public sentiment of this country, for fifty years, in respect to the African race, has been an immeasurable disgrace to us.

Look at this intelligent people, enjoying the blessings of the freest government on earth, prospered of God beyond any other people, claiming to have a more living and efficient religious character than any other; yet overlooking the essential elements of manhood in an entire group of races, making some superficial differences from the prevalent color and form of the body a ground of contempt, of oppression, of injustice and cruelty, such as never disgraced pagan Rome!

We have, indeed, some pleas and palliations. "The negroes are not agreeable in their persons and habits." This is equally true of some white people; but who ever thought of making it a ground of excommunicating entire white races from their respect and sympathy! Should one object to a person of that race, because he was not well-attired, or cleanly, or intelligent, we should not consider it a prejudice. But this we regard as prejudice: to take an entire branch of the human family, and by one turn of thought settle the proposition, that they are not to be regarded as human; and settle the purpose to treat them as something below the human race. But do we not know that a prejudice is a personal deformity? When the people of the Southern States determined to regard the negro, and even the whitest mulatto, as made for slavery, for the mere purpose of ministering to the comfort, profit, luxury, and pride of another race, they lowered themselves as philosophers, as Christians, as men.

It has been affirmed that the people of the Northern States have more prejudice against the African race than the slaveholders. This is one of many illusions connected with this subject. There is a difference, and it is found here. The Southerner had settled this point beyond question-the negro is not a man. Now, so long as that is held as an axiom, unquestioned by either party, the negro and the dog will receive the same kind-treatment. But the moment the negro asserts any rights that the master is bound to respect, as soon as he claims to be a man, it will be found that it was not as such the master esteemed or respected him. See whether, even yet, the people of those States are willing to allow the negro to choose his rulers, even though he may prove himself as well qualified for the service as the majority of voters; whether they are willing to make personal qualifications, and not race, the test of the right of suffrage. Beside the unfounded prejudices toward this unfortunate race, we are guilty of injustice gross and flagrant.

Let me farther suggest

4. The nation's welfare, as well as its honor. We must remember that nations are on probation as well as men; that they are under moral as well as material laws; that we must have been losing immeasurably in these dark years of prejudice, injustice, and cruelty. Four millions of Africans, cultivated, refined, among us, would have made the Southern States like another world. There would have been no millions of white trash; no bowie-knife, bullying, blustering, treason-breeding civilization.

No, it will not do for a great nation to settle questions about the negro merely by taste and preference, by convenience and custom, by even policy and expediency. Eternal principles are involved in it. God's eternal government takes cognizance of this subject in all its dimensions and ramifications.

The question before us now is, as it ever has been, What is right? We surely have learned one lesson at great cost. It will not answer for a Christian people to put a leprous stone in the very foundation of their great temple. It will infect the whole; and at last require to be taken down, that the infected parts may be cast away.

War was sent, with its rough hand, to tear it down, while the envious nations sat and mocked the misery of our condition.

Shall we build so again? The demon is exorcised; but he is wandering about in dry places seeking rest, and finding none. If he returns, he will bring with him seven other spirits worse than the first.

Can we afford to enter on another epoch of our history with our old notions and habits unchanged? Have we learned nothing by such a war? Is it not manifest that God has forgiven our old sins, and put us on probation once more?

If the black man or the Indian has intelligence enough to vote, let him vote for his rulers; if to make laws, let him make them. If he earns wages, pay him. If he can not hold his own in a fair race, let him come out second best. That is fair.

But did Thomas Jefferson tremble for his country in view of the justice of Almighty God? how, then, would he feel now, after the judgments we have witnessed and felt, in view of the desperate pride and prejudice of the men in the North and the South, who are still determined to treat the negro as a brute, and carry our country directly back over the same career of cruelty, selfishness, and injustice toward this unhappy race!

We urge again

5. The rights of the injured African.—What we insist upon is not a political theory, but an eternal moral principle. The negro's rights are given him by his and our God. He has a right to claim our esteem as a man, his rewards for labor and service, his choice of employment and employer, his choice of a companion for life, and the full protection of the law for his family, as much as any other husband or father.

But we have deprived him of a fair chance in life's great race. For him we have held as naught the filial relation incorporated in the Fifth Commandment; the family, one of God's most precious bestowments. Nay, the very laws of the States have decreed that the negro shall no more have a family than the cattle have.

Now, every degree of this wickedness must be swept from our land.

I am not here to beg any favors for my African brother. I simply assert his rights, and proclaim the enormous wrong we have done him, and are exposed to continue inflicting on him, after all the terrible judgments of God. I would neither pet nor flatter him. Respect for his manhood forbids both. If you meet a negro who is mean, despise his meanness, but not his manhood. If he commits a crime, punish him; but deprive him of no right simply because of his color. Abandon the prejudice which is as galling to the manly heart of a negro as to yours.

I urge, then, my plea but once more. I present to you as an individual the consideration of

6. Your own welfare.—Is yours a prejudice only against this people? For your own sake, abandon it. It contracts the soul, and it hinders you from taking the right position in regard to them. It causes you to miss some precious opportunities of standing for the right, of resisting tyranny, of comforting Christ's poor.

If you are a master, then note the fifth chapter of James, which it would seem as if you had never read, and your preachers had never explained:

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth-eaten. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth."

My brethren of the Missionary Association, we surely have a work to do. We are to do our part in forming a correct public sentiment. That is the sovereign in this land, before whom nothing can stand. Assert the manhood of the negro; make it appear as horrible to defraud him as to defraud a white man of his rights; to inflict on him penalties for being what his Creator intended him to be; to make him the mere tool of another's selfishness; to discourage his reaching the highest attrimments and position he is capable of reaching and attaining. Insist on the principle, no matter who is to enforce it, the General or the State government, that nationality and color shall not be the test of the right to elect our rulers, to testify in our courts, to sue before them, and if a native, to be chosen to sit in the presidential chair. In a word, every human being shall, on this part of God's earth, stand on a perfect level with every other man before the law. Caste-legislation shall no longer dishonor us and mar the beautiful simplicity of our democratic government.

We must educate the race, first for the ordinary intercourse and employments of life, just as the mass of white children are educated. And to the most capable, every avenue of knowledge must be opened, every instrument of mental discipline and culture furnished.

We must preach the Gospel to them in its purity, in its simplicity, and save as many of their precious souls as, by God's blessing, we

We must assist in establishing them. Poor people, on what a tempest-tossed sea their miserable bark has been for four years! And that tempest has at last cast them, shattered and broken, on a shore from which many of them will be swept back, unless rescued by us into, I can not conceive what kind of a troubled ocean. The storm of prejudice, pride, passion, is almost certain to beat on some of them until they find the last haven where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. We can not do every thing. Let us do what we can to fix each family in a home, with the ægis of the law over his dwelling and his little farm, teaching them that which slavery has prevented their learning, of industry, mechanic trades, farming, gardening, housekeeping, training children; teaching them our national history, what an American citizen ought to be, and what his rights are; teaching the negro he is a man, and showing him what is becoming to a man, in reference to himself, his God, his neighbor, his country, his posterity.

The record of our four years of war is now made. We can take no backward step. But the record of the four years succeeding the war is now forming, day by day, hour by hour. God, in his infinite mercy, grant it may be such as will make some amends for the dark passages in our former history, and place us before the world as God's instruments in bringing on this day of universal brother-

April and parties and a treat real many much and to be a contract the side enigness for the property and the court pariet and the court because one partitions of the second second almost an area of the published the published the first of a little of hood.

OF THE

TWENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING

THE Twentieth Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held in the First Congregational Church, Galesburg, Illinois, commencing Wednesday, October 31st, 1866, at 3 p.m.

The meeting was called to order by Rev. E. Beecher, D.D., on whose motion Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, the oldest Vice-President of the Society present, was elected Chairman.

President Blanchard, after brief remarks, read the One Hundred and Eleventh Psalm. Prayer by Rev. L. H. Parker, of Galesburg.

In the absence of the Recording Secretary, Rev. R. C. Dunn, of Toulon, Illinois, was appointed Recording Secretary pro tem., and Rev. J. M. Chamberlain, of Grinnell, Iowa, Assistant.

Rev. M. E. Strieby, Secretary of the Association, read the Minutes of the last Annual Meeting.

An abstract of the Treasurer's Report was read by Rev. George Whipple, Secretary, and the Report was referred to a Committee, consisting of C. S. Colton, Esq., Levi Sanderson, Esq., and Eli Farnham, Esq.

The Annual Report of the Executive Committee was presented by Secretary Whipple, and after remarks by Rev. J. Blanchard, D.D., Rev. W. B. Brown, Rev. R. C. Dunn, Rev. J. M. Van Wagner, Rev. E. P. Smith, Rev. M. E. Strieby, Rev. E. Beecher, D.D., and John Gulliver, Esq., the Report was referred to the following Committee: Rev. W. Salter, D.D., Rev. Robert Brown, Rev. L. H. Parker, and Rev. Charles Cutler.

On motion, the Chair appointed a Business Committee, consisting of Rev. E. Beecher, D.D., Rev. H. M. Storrs, D.D., Rev. I. P. Langworthy, Rev. J. M. Van Wagner, Rev. M. E. Strieby, Rev. C. H. Pratt, and John Gulliver, Esq.

Committee on Nominations: Rev. F. T. Perkins, Rev. W. B. Brown, and Rev. E. Jenney.

After prayer by Rev. C. H. Pratt, Association took a recess until 71 P.M.

In the evening the introductory services were conducted by Rev. W. Salter, D.D., of Burlington, Iowa. The Annual Sermon was preached by Rev. H. M. Storrs, D.D., of Cincinnati, from Luke 13:18, 19. Subject: The Parable of the Mustard Seed; or, Principles of the Foundation and Growth of the Kingdom of God. Prayer and benediction by President Blanchard.

On Thursday morning, November 1st, at 81 o'clock, a prayer and conference meeting, led by Rev. W. D. Clark, of Galesburg, was

Thursday morning, at 91 o'clock, the President took the chair. The minutes of Wednesday were read and approved.

The Business Committee, through Rev. E. Beecher, D.D., reported the following resolutions:

1. That this, the Twentieth Anniversary of the American Missionary Associationmarks an era in its history, and gives it occasion to render thanks to God for greatly increased receipts, for marked progress in its work at the South, and for the general health of our officers, missionaries, and teachers.

2. That the physical condition of the Freedmen, and especially of the many utterly friendless and destitute orphans, still demands commiseration and help. theirly friendess and destitute orpinans, still demands commiseration and help. The want of work and wages, the precarious tenure of their homes and lands, and the extensive failure of the crops of cotton and corn, leaving many of this people, without fault of theirs, in a suffering condition, calls upon this Association for the continuance of its most strenuous exertions for their physical relief.

3. That the educational progress of the Freedmen, attested by the monthly reports of the teachers, the testimony of unprejudiced witnesses, and especially by the early and extended call for Normal Schools, furnishes cheering evidence of the capacity of these people for improvement, and requires a great enlargement of our school operations.

4. That a people so thoroughly religious in their natural instincts as the Freedmen are, and yet so uncultured in regard to practical morality, can be permanently benefited only by an education that is blended with religion, and, therefore, this Association feels the duty to be still pressing on it, to continue the union of education and religion in its work at the South; and, in its entirely unsectarian yet evangelical character, as heretofore, it invites cordially the cooperation therein of the whole Church of Christ.

5. That the Freedmen of the United States have a claim upon this nation, founded upon the wrongs they have suffered, the wealth their toil has given us, the common humanity they inherit, their tried loyalty to us in our struggles, and their valor in many a well-fought field; that God in His providence has committed to us, in trust, them and all the colored people of our land, that we should not to us, in trust, them and an the colored people of our hand, that we should not only enfranchise them, but give them an opportunity of the highest culture in art, education, and religion, so that they may be fitted for the work and mission to which God has called them; and that He has in a remarkable manner identified their welfare with our own, as a nation, so that we can not be free, elevated, just, and honorable except in the fulfillment of our duties to them, and has opened a field before us for the highest of moral victories, a victory over the spirit of caste, and of national prejudice and antipathy, and is calling on us to illustrate, on a vast scale, in this and other cases, the spirit and principles of the unity of all nations in the love and fear of God.

6. That in view of the large increase of its income during the past year, and the demand for greatly enlarged efforts, humane, educational, and religious, now pressing upon it, the Association will endeavor to raise $300,000* in cash during the fiscal year upon which it has entered.

* Increased to $400,000. See page 5.

The sixth resolution was, on motion, referred to the Committee on the Treasurer's Report, and Messrs. Ralph Emerson, of Rockford, Illinois, and John Gulliver, were added to the Committee.

The first five resolutions were then taken up seriatim, discussed, and adopted.

The Committee on the Treasurer's Report reported that, after a careful examination, they found it entirely correct, and duly certified by the Auditors. They recommended its adoption and publication with the proceedings of the meeting. Report accepted and adopted.

The same Committee reported resolution sixth amended by sub stituting $400,000 for $300,000. The resolution, after some earnest remarks in favor of the amendment by Ralph Emerson, Esq., and others, was made the special order for the evening at 7 o'clock. After prayer by Rev. E. Jenney, a recess was taken until 21 P.M.

In the afternoon the Lord's Supper was celebrated, Rev. W. Salter, D.D., and Rev. W. G. Pierce officiating at the table.

After a short recess, President Blanchard resumed the chair, and by his invitation, Rev. E. P. Smith, Rev. M. E. Strieby, and Rev. H. M. Storrs, D.D., addressed the Association.

The Business Committee, through its chairman, presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That we hail with joy another revival of the missionary spirit in our churches, in their increased devotion to the missions of the American Missionary Association among the freedmen; and we trust and pray that, as in the entrance upon the Foreign and Home fields, so in this advance, we may be baptized with a pentecostal effusion from on high, and that a more earnest type of piety may be the product and the support of our work; and that, to this end, we welcome the appeals and agencies of benevolence, as powerful helpers in the revival and spread of true religion.

The resolution was laid over for discussion in the evening.

Rev. F. T. Perkins, in behalf of the Committee on Nominations. reported the following persons as officers for the ensuing year.

Rev. W. B. Brown offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association are cordially expressed to the Trustees of this church for the use of their house; and to the citizens of this beautiful town of Galesburg for their generous hospitality and kind reception of strangers from abroad during this anniversary occasion. Also to the railroad companies that have favored the members with half fare in coming and going from this place.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be tendered to Rev. Dr. Storrs, of Cincinnati, for his able and timely sermon, and that a copy be requested for publication in the minutes of the Association.

Rev. Dr. Salter presented the following:

The Committee to whom the Report of the Executive Committee was referred, would respectfully recommend that the Report be adopted, and published under the direction of the Executive Committee. They would also call the attention of the Association to that portion of the Report which refers to the importance of reënforcing the Mendi Mission in Africa. The field is there open, and demands more earnest cultivation, in connection with the great work pressing upon us at the South.

Report accepted and adopted.

Prayer by Rev. S. G. Wright, of Neponset, Ill. Recess until seven P.M.

In the evening addresses were made to a large and interested audience, by Mr. K. A. Burnell, Rev. J. R. Shipherd, Rev. E. M. Cravath, Rev. E. P. Smith, Rev. W. B. Brown, and Rev. E. Beecher, D.D. The resolutions which were laid over—one substituting $400,000 for $300,000, and the other referring to a spirit of revival—were heartily and unanimously adopted.

Closing prayer and benediction by the Chairman, and the Association adjourned to meet at the call of the Executive Committee.

^{*} The election of Treasurer was referred to the Executive Committee, who filled it as above.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

WE commemorate to-day the twentieth anniversary of the formation of the American Missionary Association. These years have been memorable in the history of the nation, having witnessed its gigantic and successful struggle, moral and material, for the overthrow of slavery and the emancipation of millions of its people, thus confirming its future stability and marking an era in the progress of the human race. We are called to rejoice, with gratitude to God, in these vast and beneficent results, and in the part, humble though it was, which this Association had in securing them. But these results have only opened a wider field of Christian activity, and into this the Association has also entered. Its labors during the past year have been the most extended, and, we trust, beneficial in all its past history. We have occasion to render thanks to God for vastly increased receipts, for marked progress in our work at the South, and for the general health of our officers, missionaries, and teachers. But yet death has been among us, and now, as last year, he has chosen shining marks. Rev. S. W. S. Dutton, D.D., the genial, loving, and simple-hearted man. the true friend of the colored people as well as of all the poor, and the faithful and able pastor-a Vice-President of this Associationhas been called from aiding his fellow-men on earth to his reward in heaven. Mrs. Harriet E. Goodrich, (formerly Miss Townsend,) whose letters had rendered her name familiar, and whose labors as a missionary had endeared her to a wide circle of friends, has also passed away. She died December 5th, in Adrian, Mich., in the full assurance of a blessed immortality. Mr. D. Brown, an amiable young man, but in feeble health, went to Georgia as a teacher, only to discover that he had gone there not to toil, but to die. He closed his career at Augusta, in March last, peacefully trusting in the Saviour.

FINANCES.

The receipts of the past year have met the expectations of our most sanguine friends. The income from all sources is $253,045.98 in cash, $105,441 in the valuation of clothing, $358,486.98 in all; a gain over the previous year of $118,864.80 in cash, $43,766.60 in clothing: total $162,631.40! The expenditures, as shown by the Treasurer's Report, have been $271,586.78, leaving a balance against the treasury of $18,540.80. But it should be understood that more than the amount of this difference has been expended in appropriations, in advance, for the coming year; so that the account under review for the year exhibits, in reality, no deficit. We take pleasure in saying that a large share of the increase of income for the year is due to the action of the National Council of Congregational churches which met in Boston in June, 1865, and which recommended to the churches the contribution of $750,000, to be apportioned among three societies: to the American Home Missionary, $300,000; to the American Congregational Union, $200,000; and to the American Missionary Association, $250,000. At the time this vote was passed this Association was without the adequate agencies for collecting the funds, and some fears were expressed as to its ability to accomplish the object. But the Executive Committee at once accepted the responsibility and set itself to the task of providing for it. The first step taken was the appointment of three district secretaries. Rev. C. L. Woodworth accepted that position in Boston, Rev. E. P. Smith in Cincinnati, and Rev. William De Loss Love, temporarily, in Chicago. On his retirement, at the end of six months, it was deemed expedient to establish a Western Department of the Association, and to appoint a secretary with headquarters at Chicago. Rev. J. R. Shipherd accepted and now holds the place. These officers were aided by the following-named agents: Rev. E. Davis for Maine, Rev. L. Grout for New-Hampshire and Vermont. Rev. S. W. Magill continued his acceptable services in Connecticut. Rev. H. G. Ludlow was for a short time engaged in successful labors in New-York, until the failure of health compelled him to relinquish the effort. Rev. J. P. Bardwell remained in Ohio for a portion of the year, and Rev. J. M. Chamberlain was commissioned for the West. Several other esteemed brethren have also acted as agents, under appointments previously made, or for brief periods. Besides these arrangements, it was deemed advisable to send representatives abroad to solicit aid from Great Britain and the Continent. Accordingly, at different times, or together, Rev. Sella Martin, Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D.D., and Rev. W. W. Patton, D.D., have performed effective service in that behalf. Under their representations, the Congregational Union of England and Wales and the Scotch General Assemblies have voted collections for us, or commended us and our work. These testimonials we esteem most valuable, and they are inserted in the Appendix (A). The Executive Committee would recommend still further efforts in the same direction, from time to time, as the aspect of affairs abroad may warrant.

As it required some time to bring all these instrumentalities into operation, it seemed proper that the year recommended by the Council should coincide with our fiscal year. The result we have given above; but we find that if we had taken the first twelve full months after the adjournment of the Council, the aggregate cash collections lacked but ten per cent of reaching the $250,000.

We refer to these figures as a matter of historical interest, and as a pleasant indication that Providence is raising up helpers for those so long neglected.

We can not conclude our statement of our sources of income and help, without referring with gratitude, to the efficient aid and encouragement rendered to us by Major-General Howard, the head of the Freedmen's Bureau. In his devotion to the highest interests of the colored people, in his impartial attention to all who are laboring for their good, and in his able administration of the Bureau, amid all its perplexities, we feel that this conscientious Christian officer deserves the thanks of the country and the profoundest love of the emancipated millions of the land. The facilities which the Bureau has furnished us for prosecuting our work have often saved us much expense, and enabled us to do much more than we should otherwise have attempted; and the presence and assistance of its officers have given security to our property at the South, and protection to the lives of our teachers.

PRINCIPLES.

The Constitution of this Association is explicit in the enunciation of its principles, setting it forth as a missionary organization, on an evangelical and unsectarian basis. It owed its origin to the strong sympathy of its founders with the colored people, then in slavery. It sought the good of that race, here and abroad, in every way that their circumstances and its ability permitted; and when, at length, emancipation freed the millions in this land, it felt itself providentially fitted for the work of their elevation, for it had become familiar with their character, and enjoyed their confidence. To this great undertaking it still feels called upon to devote its main attention.

Its missionary character enables, nay compels, it to undertake all parts of this work, the physical, the educational, and the spiritual. The precepts and practice of the Founder of our holy religion urge it to the care of the physical as well as the spiritual, and the inseparable intimacy between the intellectual and religious instruction of an unlettered people, felt by every missionary society, makes plain its duty to maintain schools among them, and its organic law, the charter obtained from the New-York Legislature, provides for it. In certain quarters there has arisen of late a claim that our missionary character debars us from the maintenance of schools among the Freedmen. On the contrary, we are firm in the conviction that this peculiar people, so thoroughly religious in their natural instincts, and yet so uncultured in regard to the practical moralities of religion, can be permanently benefited only by an education that is blended with religion. But we can not here enter into the full merits of this vital question. We insert in the Appendix (B) an article which is valuable as a (part of the) history of the discussion, and as a more complete statement of our views.

The evangelical feature of the Association is set forth in the Constitution, and maintained by the Executive Committee, in no controversial spirit. It has always rejoiced in the cooperation of all who sincerely sympathized with the oppressed and the poor, but when, at its organization, the question was raised of combining in the missionary work with those who, though firm friends of the slave, yet received not Christ as a divine Redeemer, it did not hesitate, but chose a more humble commencement on an evangelical basis, rather than present magnitude and importance, purchased by gathering with those who know not our Lord. Painful as might be a separation from them, it could not forsake Him. And now, again, if the question in any form must be pressed, it will make the same choice. Many evangelical denominations will probably choose to work denominationally, but to any which have not the arrangements made for reaching the Freedmen with schools and physical supplies we present this Association as a congenial and well-prepared channel for that purpose.

The unsectarian character of the Association invites the cooperation of evangelical Christians. Since the work among the Freedmen has begun, it has been made the bearer of the alms, schools, and missions, in a greater or less degree, of the Wesleyan Methodists, the Free-will Baptists, and the Congregationalists, together with those of individuals and churches belonging to other denominations. The Free-will Baptists make their own collections of money, select and commission their own teachers, to be approved and commissioned also by us, and they are then sent out with all our facilities, and the aid we can secure from the Freedmen's Bureau or the Government. The Wesleyans, in like manner, make and transmit to us their collections, and we sustain in the field a proportional number of their teachers and ministers. With the Congregationalists the arrangement is more full. The National Council of these Lead es, finding the Association providentially prepared, by its evangelical principles, its past history, and its present plans, for the elevation of the Freedmen, selected it from all others as the instrument for reaching them. Thus commended to their churches, we became the collectors of the funds, and we have aimed to discharge faithfully the trust committed to us, spending their money in promoting the welfare of the Freedmen, in accordance with the views of the Council and the wishes of the churches. This we can do, and also maintain like faithfulness to the other denominations that have, or may hereafter, come into special arrangements with us for limited and definite modes of cooperation. We will conscientiously use the funds of each for the purpose agreed upon, and no other. Hence, in all sincerity we renew our standing proffer to the various denominations of evangelical Christians, that they may send through our channels, and with our facilities for reaching the people, their own ministers, missionaries, and teachers, chosen and supported by themselves, and under our commission, to teach and preach and found churches, if God shall so prosper them according to their own denominational forms and doctrinal belief, untrammeled by us.

THE FREEDMEN.

GENERAL SURVEY.

Before entering upon the details of the work of the year among the Freedmen, we offer some general observations that will give a more comprehensive view of the situation of affairs, the number of persons employed, the hinderances in some directions, and encouragements and progress in others.

1. We have had under commission during the year 353 persons, of whom 89 are males and 264 females, 41 are ministers of the Gospel, nearly all of whom have devoted more or less of their time to the educational work. Their distribution on the field was as follows: Washington and the District of Columbia, 27; Maryland, 9; Virginia, 100; North-Carolina, 34; South-Carolina, 43; Georgia, 50; Mississippi, 27; Tennessee, 26; Kentucky, 9; Missouri, 9; Illinois, 14; Indiana, 1; Kansas, 2; Florida, 4; Alabama, 2; Louisiana, 2; Texas, 4.

2. The physical condition of the Freedmen still makes its appeal for help. Amid the many and varied hinderances, some of these people have found work with fair wages, and have consequently accumulated money, which they have invested in lands and homes, or have deposited it in the Freedmen's Savings Bank, awaiting more propitious and secure times before investing. We insert in Appendix C some statements showing the character and success of this most excellent institution intime with the mass of the Freedmen the case has been different, and that, too, without fault of theirs. The want of work, or of confidence that the work would be paid for, their removal from localities where they had been placed, the lack of assurance that they could retain any new spots on which they might settle, and the unfavorable season which in many sections has ruined the crops, both of cotton and of corn, have all conspired to leave many of these people in great destitution. There must be much suffering during the approaching inclement season, and the charitable and humane will still need to lend a helping hand. Food may be provided by themselves or by the Government, but clothing must come from the North or from abroad. The most pitiable and helpless among them are the orphans, made so by the war, or the ravages of the small-pox, which has extensively prevailed. So touching have been the appeals made to us, and by us thrown before the public, in behalf of these orphans, that we have been able to commence two asylums. one at Wilmington, N. C., and the other at Atlanta, Ga. The funds for the first came as special gifts from various donors; those for the other, from the generous donation of a tried friend of the colored man, Hon. I. Washburn, of Worcester, Mass. But such asylums are needed in every large town in the South and in every district densely populated by the blacks. In the year upon which we now enter it is our purpose to meet this pressing want as fast as the means can be gathered. As a first-fruit in this endeavor, we have the satisfaction of announcing that the venerable Lewis Tappan, Esq., our late Treasurer, has deposited with us the sum of $3000 with which to found another asylum. May the God of the poor and helpless raise up many more such helpers!

3. The progress of schools among the Freedmen has exceeded the largest expectations of their friends. The enthusiasm of the scholars has not been the mere outburst of curiosity, but has been steady and effective. The sure evidence of the monthly reports of our teachers proves this, while the testimony of unprejudiced witnesses corroborates it. The Rev. Dr. Johns, the Episcopal Bishop of Virginia, who recently attended the closing examination of our schools in Norfolk, pronounced them to be the best schools in Norfolk, white or black. But a still more decisive test is found in the fact that their progress has been such as to demand the starting of normal schools in which the more advanced pupils may be qualified to become teachers! It is a laudable ambition on their part, that they should assist as the educators of their own people. In a dozen cities of the South are there scholars for such normal schools, and it will be our aim, as far as the means are furnished, to establish them. The citizens of New-Haven, who are so capable of appreciating the benefits of the highest order of school privileges, are taking measures to lead off in this needed work by founding a New-Haven school for teachers at Fortress Monroe, Va. We invite other communities, as well as individuals, to follow this laudable example.

4. The religious advancement of the Freedmen is going forward with steady but less obvious progress. Those best acquainted with this people can most fully appreciate the statement that this advancement "cometh not with observation." We can not expect that it will be marked immediately by the frequent formation of churches. and the ordination of ministers. The REAL progress of religion among them will begin and keep pace with their Christian education. With the adults, the grand instrumentalities of religious advancement will be the Sunday and night-schools; the female missionary, visiting from house to house; the better education of the ministers of their own color; and the efficient aid of white ministers, blending preaching and teaching. For the young, and upon them rests our chief hope, all these influences will be helpful, but the main dependence, for a time, must be upon the Christian education of the day and Sunday-schools. It is a marvel to us that persons who really understand the character of this people, could ever expect any real religious progress among them in the divorcement of education from religion. With our views of the case we shall yield to the separation only under the stern compulsion of necessity, and with that necessity we shall surrender, especially in these incipient years of the undertaking, a large share of our hopefulness of the true religious development of the Freedmen. We can not be faithful to Christ, and to the souls of this people, except in the union of education and religion among them, and, by the help of God, we will be faithful to them and to Him!

At the opening of the present year the American Missionary Asso-Giation had schools at four distinct points in the city of Washington. At Campbell Hospital four teachers were employed; at Soldiers' Library, three; at Pisgah Chapel, corner of Q and Eleventh streets, one; and at Third street Church, four. .

The number of pupils reported for January was, in the day-schools, six hundred and thirty-eight; in the night-schools, about two hundred. Two Sabbath-schools were carried on, one at Campbell Hospital, and the other at the Soldiers' Library, numbering together about two hundred.

The prejudice against these schools in certain localities in the city, and its happy removal, are thus stated by one of the teachers:

"When Campbell Hospital was assigned to us for establishing colored schools, the residents in the vicinity were much disgusted with the idea, and a great deal of trouble was apprehended; now the people confess that at no time since the hospital buildings were erected has the neighborhood been so quiet as at present So, also, when it was proposed to us to establish a school at the Soldiers' Library, Judiciary square, the residents in that aristocratic locality protested very strongly against the measure; and it was at one time feared, even by our friends, that the school would be a nuisance to the vicinity, and might be broken up. After three months' trial, the school proves to be no nuisance, nobody objects to its continu-ance, and it was declared by a gentleman who resides near, in a speech he gave us at our Christmas gathering, that all his fears were dispelled, and that he had never known a school anywhere make less trouble to the neighborhood, or to deport themselves more creditably both in the school-room and out of it."

In January the school at Arlington Heights came under the control of this Association. We subjoin some interesting statements in regard to the place and its school:

"Arlington Heights possesses historic interest, not so much from its former proprietorship, as being the burial-ground of some twelve thousand Union soldiers, and the spot where systematic efforts were early made for the protection and education of the Freedmen.

"This village is built upon the estate formerly owned by G. W. P. Custis, and, after his death. occupied by his son in-law, General Robert E. Lee. It is a beautiful estate, comprising some eleven hundred acres lying along the heights across the Potomac, opposite Washington.

"Here the Government, in the spring of 1863, determined to found a village for "Here the Government, in the spring of 1863, determined to found a village for the Freedmen. Accordingly, in May, a party of one hundred, under the charge of Rev. D. B. Nichols, was sent over to commence the cultivation of the farm, and to prepare the site for the new village. This village was built in the fall of 1863, and was dedicated to its use, December 3d of the same year, by appropriate services at the chapel and school-house. In the spring of 1864 an addition was made to the village of fifty houses; making a total of houses now standing of sixty-two, containing two hundred and forty-eight tenements.

building, was erected by the contributions of friends in Providence, R. I. It has been a grand success from the beginning, giving a comfortable home to hundreds who otherwise must have been left to suffer. The necessary funds for the erection of this building were collected by an agent of the American Tract Society, and the building was put up by them, and was under their supervision and direction, until its transfer to the American Missionary Association.

"While the village was building, the American Tract Society of New-York was invited by the officer in charge of the Freedmen to erect a building, to be used for school purposes, and 'the entire religious and educational interests of the village were placed under their control and supervision.'

"Money for this specific purpose was collected in New-England and Philadelphia, and a building, thirty by seventy-two feet, was erected.

"A school was commenced here, December 7th, 1863, under the charge of H. E. Simmons, of Providence, R. I., numbering at first only ninety-nine scholars, yet soon increasing to two hundred and fifty; and, in the summer following, to nearly six hundred scholars. From this time the population of the village began to decrease, but the school has always averaged three hundred, or over, in actual at-

"For over two years the Society sustained all the expense of this school, amounting to nearly $4000 a year, mostly from funds given expressly for the benefit of the Freedmen. During a portion of the time a chaplain was also sustained by the Society, who devoted himself to the religious training of the people. A Sabbath-school has always been taught by the teachers in charge of the day-

"This school was established as a model, experimental school, to ascertain the kind of books needed for the instruction of this people. The objects for which it was instituted having been accomplished in January, 1866, the Tract Society transferred its interest in the school to the American Missionary Association, by whom it is now carried on. The principal and teachers also passed temporarily into the employ of the Association, and remained with it until April 1st, when Mr. Simmons and two of the teachers were obliged by ill health to resign.

"The Association have now a full corps of teachers engaged in this school."

Some colored soldiers, under the tuition of one of our excellent teachers at Washington, and their interest in the Colored Orphan Asylum at Atlanta, are thus referred to in a letter from another teacher, just from Atlanta:

"I went with Miss Stebbins, teacher of Co. G and Co. C, 107th Colored Regiment, to visit her classes. The day before my arrival Miss S. had read to Co. G the appeal in the American Missionary for the orphans at Atlanta, and they had contributed $25. My introduction to them, as a missionary directly from Atlanta, seemed a marked 'reception;' and when I told them I had seen the site already purchased for the asylum, and described its locality, overlooking the city where Gen. Sherman fought, and the beautiful spring, the largest in Atlanta, that bubbles up on the upper side, and throws a stream clear across the lot, and then told them here was to be a real Christian home for the children whose fathers and mothers had here was to be a real Christian home for the children whose fathers and mothers had perished in the war, you would have thought from their interest that each one of them owned a part of that lot, or expected to have a child in the home.

"Company G enjoyed our visit so heartily that we decided to go to Fort Corcoran and interest other soldiers of the 107th. The colonel received us cordially, called out his men, and introduced Miss Stebbins. The men listened to her appeal in breathless attention, and with faces full of pity as she read passages from the American Missionary, and asked if they would not like to contribute to help a people who were struggling so hard to help themselves. All who had money gave freely. (They had just made a deposit in the Freedmen's Savings Bank.) I thought I had seen colored people in all circumstances, but this was a novel sight—those dusky faces and uncovered heads in line, under a cloudless sky, answering to the appeal of a gentle woman in behalf of the little ones of their own color in distant Georgia. The colonel went with us to C. C. They their own color in distant Georgia. The colonel went with us to Co. C. They contributed gladly and generously, and we had $50, the gift of the 107th Regiment, for the Atlanta orphans."

In our last report we stated that "the formation of the Baltimore Association, for the moral and educational improvement of the colored people, superseded to a considerable extent the operations we had planned, and already most successfully inaugurated in Baltimore." Our schools in that city were subsequently discontinued. The following statement, by a gentleman connected with the Baltimore Association, reveals the difficulties it encounters:

"Our people generally are much imbittered against the education of the negroes; from the counties we have received but five dollars. By hard pressure we got ten thousand dollars from the city authorities, but we can not expect an appropriation this year, as all the members who voted for the bill, with one exception, were defeated at the recent municipal election on account of their votes. We applied to the last Legislature, (which was largely Union.) but received nothing; we will apply to the same body, which meets to-morrow, but expect nothing. After we found private collections difficult, we applied to the churches for aid, only two of whom did any thing for us, and they were Jews. The only collections taken up for us on Thanksgiving day were by the First Congregational and First United Presbyterian churches. Does not this show the necessity of missionary work among our white population, to bring them to a case of justice toward their colored brethren? But little can ever be collected in Maryland for home missions, until this spirit of animosity is eradicated by Northern emigration, and the education of the blacks, by which we will force the old slaveholding power to acknowledge that they (the blacks) are human beings, and capable of the same culture as our race.

"We are not only opposed by the rebels, but by the great majority of the professors of religion among the Unionists; we therefore feel our labor is to educate the whites as well as the blacks.

"We now have forty applications from colored school societies in the counties or teachers to open schools; this demand we are unable to meet."

In other portions of Maryland our schools have been at Darlington, Port Deposit, Weston, and Mount Pleasant. They have been sustained by the people of the place, except traveling expenses and monthly salary.

We devote a large space to the reports from this State. This is demanded by the numbers of the colored people, the extent of the work we have carried on there, and the length of time we have occupied the ground with schools.

The physical destitution has been great in some localities; it has been patiently borne, and, in many instances, we are glad to say, happily relieved.

Mr. Paine writes from Hampton:

"Many of the children are orphans, and more have no fathers, and now that the hospitals are closed there is very little for their mothers to do. It is very hard for them to get along. The children often tell me that they come to school without any breakfast. They have come barefooted when there was ice in the roads; and with clothing so worn and scant that it was no protection against the wind and rain, but, thanks to the good friends in Worcester, Cambridge, Franklin, and other places, we have been able to supply some of them with comfortable clothing. Oh! if you could see some of the little ones after we have taken them in and taken off their filthy rags, and put on new garments, and see the joy and happiness that beam from their eyes, you would feel that those who give are truly blessed."

Miss Peck says, dating at the same place:

"Children come to school barefooted over the frozen ground, and we sometimes find the tears running down their cheeks, caused by actual hunger, and the sufferings of the sick and the aged are untold; yet even in the greatest extremity they are never found looking back wistfully to the flesh-pots of Egypt.

"From none of them do we hear a murmur or a complaint, and from some we hear such words as these: 'When the Lord shuts one door, he opens another.' They that put their trust in the Lord shall never be confounded.' It might be expected that their privations and sufferings would engender a feeling of bitterness toward their former masters, but it is not so; we are often deeply affected by their feyrent prayers for their old masters, prayers breathing a spirit of forgiveness, 'till seventy times sevem.' Instead of dwelling upon their troubles, they seem inclined to magnify their blessings, and make the most of them."

Miss Campbell reports:

"A woman came to work for us, leaving three children at home. From her conversation we judged that they were needy, and went to see. The oldest child a boy about ten, was sitting by the stove barefooted; he kept the door open to admit light, for there was no windov in the cabin. We looked around for the other children. The little woolly-headed sisters were snuggled together upon the bed, shivering beneath a piece of tent-cloth, a spread no thicker than a sheet, and a bed-tick. All the clothing that one had was a little cotton freck and stockings, the other had rather more. And yet this mother said she knows God would never leave her to suffer. She had neither knife, fork, nor spoon in the house, and no food excepting a little we gave her the day before. Surely, if she does not call that suffering, she will never suffer."

Mrs. Foster, at Norfolk, writes:

"The question is often asked me by friends at the North, What is the prospect of the colored people getting a living this year? I answer them by giving facts such as these: Here comes a woman, the mother of nine children, some of them with her, all rags. 'Please, ma'am, give me some clothes for myself and children.' I ask: 'Have you got a husband?' 'The rebs took him acrost the lines and I have not seen him since.' 'Where do you live?' 'About fifteen miles in the country; walked a part of the way yesterday, camped out all night, and came in the city this morning; have been looking for you ever since I got in the city.' This is about 2 P.M. 'What do you do for food?' 'Well, honey, I works in the field when I can get a day's work. I get along the best I can, but it 'pears like I never can get money to buy clothes.' Some come twenty-five miles with similar stories. Some have rented land, from one to five acres, and are paying from one to three dollars per month rent for it. They have to put up a house, or rather a hut; then fence in the land, and as it is all bush and stumps, it has to be cleared and grubbed up. This has to be done as best it can, for father and mother both have to work out to get food for the family and money to pay the rent every month; these say when I visit them, or they come to get clothes,' It is such hard times I can not get clothes.'

"I think if our agents would exercise faith in every place they go, as strong as an old auntic that came to me last February, we should not want for any good thing. She came in one morning and said she had come out to see if I could give her a dress and a pair of shoes. She was very old, trembled as she walked, leaning on her walking-stick. I found a dress, and told her I could not find the shoes. She looked up—and such a look; I never shall forget it—and replied, 'Honey, I did think my Jesus would give me the shoes to-day.' I repeated I could not find any for her, yet she repeated her faith that her Jesus would give her a pair. I had one box, not opened; I took my hammer and opened it, to see if I could find any in it. After taking out about half the contents of the box, I was about ready to give up. I looked at the auntic, she seemed to be looking by faith to Jesus. I went to work again, and down in the bottom I found shoes just right, and when I told her there was a pair I thought would fit her, she gave a shout such as I never before heard. Her joy was such I could not help shedding tears of joy with her."

2. The schools, notwithstanding all hinderances, are prospering. At Hampton the Butler School House has been assigned to the use of the Association. It is in the form of a Greek cross, each wing being seventy-five by thirty, with seats for two hundred scholars. By the aid of the Bureau it is now partitioned off into smaller rooms.

The facilities at this point for a normal school make the demand for one pressing, and it has been determined to commence one here at the opening of a new term. The Executive Committee would anew press upon the Association and its supporters the importance of this department of labor. Only by training teachers from the people themselves can the demand be at all met.

The schools at Hampton are thus reported:

"Our day-schools, under the superintendence of Mr. Paine, are prospering finely. The pupils number upward of fifteen hundred. Of course, among so many, there are some who try our faith and patience; but taken as a whole I think the children are getting along extremely well. We are blessed with an earnest, devoted band of teachers, who seem possessed of the true missionary spirit.

"Our night-schools are held in the Baptist Church in Hampton, and are peculiarly interesting. Would you like to glance in upon us while in session? The room is spacious, but the ceiling very low. Long rows of rough settees afford seats, and in the middle of one side stands a plain board pulpit. Standing by this pulpit, and looking over the room, the heart of any lover of freedom would thrill at the sight which met his eyes. On the left, two or three seats are filled with learners, varying in age from the gray-headed man to the youth of sixteen. A lady from Massachusetts is passing from one to another, teaching them to read easy lessons. Further back, a lady from Maine, and another from Boston, are busy with large classes of a similar character. In other parts of the room teachers from almost every New-England State are engaged in the same good work.

"Oh! how earnestly those gray-haired men bend their wrinkled ages over the Freedmen's primers and how their countenances light up with joy as they read those simple sentences! You can see many traces of agony in those weary-looking faces, and tears spring to your eyes as you think of the long, toilsome years in the house of bondage.

"Yonder sits a white-haired old man, whose dimming eyes compel him to wear spectacles, and by his side is a gentle lady from the North, patiently teaching him to read. Now and then a strange light flashes over that black, care-worn face, as he masters sentence after sentence from the primer which he holds in those hard, muscular hands. God bless the earnest old man! Beyond, in the corner, are several aged women, learning the alphabet. See how patiently they toil on, hoping yet, ere they go down to the grave, to be able to read God's blessed book for themselves."

Mr. Paine says:

"But the picture is not all dark. When I think that within two miles of me there are more than fourteen hundred pupils in our day-schools, and three hundred in our night-schools, that five hundred of these can read intelligently, and are studying arithmetic and geography and writing, and that the first class, numbering over fifty, have commenced Eaton's Practical Arithmetic, have a very good knowledge of geography, and will in a few days commence the History of the United States, I feel that something has been already accomplished, and that there is ground for encouragement and hope in regard to the future."

From Norfolk, Mr. Percy thus writes:

"I am pleased to report a happy and unexpected change of sentiment in this vicinity respecting us and our work. The more intelligent class seem to be favorably disposed toward, if not in perfect sympathy with, the educational movement and the efforts to elevate the colored people. We have even received friendly visits, both at school and the mision house, from prominent citizens, whom we had until now supposed our enemies. A few days since we were no less gratified than surprised to receive a eall from Rev. Dr. ————, who had incidentally formed the acquaintance of a teacher at a church meeting. In a conversation with him he expressed his belief that the colored people would be far better in slavery than in the enjoyment of freedom; yet, as the fortunes of war have unconditionally made them free, he is in favor of their education, and will by his influence cheerfully second any efforts for their instruction. It is his opinion, however, that this work must for some time be continued by Northern benevolence. The South is so poor, and so much aid is required for support of their own feeble churches, as to render further charity an impossibility. Upon invitation, the doctor promised at an early day to visit our schools, which he has already done, addressing the children with kind words of encouragement and counsel."

The pupils in this city number six hundred and seventy, and a normal school could soon be supplied with scholars.

A pleasant incident is given by one of the teachers in Norfolk:

"The day after our school-house was burned, little Robert said: 'Well, Miss Duncan, if they did burn our school-house, they can't burn what we have got in

"Robert is quite a small boy, not quite ten years of age; he has been going to school but two years, six months of which time it took him to learn his alphabet; school but two years, six months of which time it took him to learn his alphabet; during the remaining eighteen months he has worked his way up to the first class (the most advanced class) in the school. He is very desirous of becoming a preacher, and thinks that if he studies 'right hard,' he can.

"'Does Robert think,' I said to him one day, 'that book-learning is all that is required to make a good preacher?' He looked up at me awhile, and then said, 'I know what you mean—I must have religion.'"

By arrangement with other societies, this Association occupies the whole ground at Norfolk, and its schools can be easily graded with a view to progress and a higher education.

The schools in Portsmouth were much delayed at the commencement of the year by the then developing policy of the administration, and the difficulty of obtaining suitable buildings. A mission family was established there in December, and six teachers and a matron were speedily at work. Rev. W. T. Richardson, formerly in our service in South-Carolina, was transferred here. The year was finally a successful one.

Schools were started by the Association in Richmond soon after the surrender, but by the arrangement with the Assistant Commissioner they were transferred to other bodies.

Our Free-Will Baptist friends have entered the Shenandoah Valley with teachers, under their and our commission, and amid many obstacles have established schools at Harper's Ferry, Charlestown, Martinsburg, Shepardstown, and Front Royal. They also had teachers at the Downey Farm, the Wise Farm, and missionaries and teachers at Roanoke Island, N. C., Cairo, Ill., and some points in Missouri, and are doing a noble work.

3. The religious history of the year among the colored people of Eastern Virginia is marked by a great revival. Of its character and results the following extracts will furnish the data for an estimate:

"TYLER HOUSE, Fortress Monroe.

"I am glad to be able to report an encouraging state of things in this field. A precious revival is in progress among the colored people. The work goes forward very quietly, and with little excitement. Hardly any extra meetings are held, but the regular ones are fully attended. There have been many hopeful conversions in this neighborhood, and many are anxiously seeking Christ.

"Many little incidents, occurring every day, show what a deep religious feeling pervades the community. Two little girls were talking in the mission yard the other day, and as they separated we overheard one say to the other, 'Don't forget to pray.' Walking with one of the teachers among the cabins, a few days since, we found a small girl who professed conversion. 'How are you going to show that you are a Christian, Julia?' said the teacher. 'By the way I live, ma'am,' was the prompt reply."

One of our teachers near Fortress Monroe writes, under date of June 1st:

"The Holy Spirit has been manifested among us, and it has been our high privilege to see many of our pupils seeking Jesus, and to speak, in willing cars, the glorious, ever new story of His death for us. As I listen from day to day to the outgushing of their hearts in their rude and simple joy, I call to mind the words of the hymn so expressive of full possession of Christ:

"'I've found the pearl of greatest price, My heart doth sing for joy; And sing I must, for Christ is mine, Christ shall my song employ.'

"Something like five hundred have united themselves with the various churches. While I fear much of this is excitement and will soon die out, I am yet rejoiced to believe that very many, whose life gives evidence of the change God has wrought in them, have passed from death unto life."

Our Superintendent at Norfolk writes, under date of June 7th:

"On the last evening in May, we made a formal closing of our night-school although the actual closing was a week before, on account of the intense religious interest in all the churches. We had less than a dozen pupils at each of the last five sessions. I hardly know what to think of this revival. There have been many seemingly sure conversions, but there is so much confusion and disorderly noise at their meetings, which are held daily and nightly in churches crowded almost to suffocation, that it hardly seems like 'the work of the Spirit.' Many of our school children are entertaining a hope in Christ; many more are seriously girls commenced sobbing and crying for mercy. She was not one who had been sober, on the contrary seemed very gay that morning. It seemed, indeed, as if the Spirit had come upon the scholars, for in a half hour's time more than half of my scholars were crying, 'Mercy, mercy,' and 'Save me, Lord; oh! save my soul.' I talked with them awhile, and went to Miss D. to know what I was to do. We concluded it was best to have a prayer-meeting right there. Miss D. gave her scholars permission to go into my room, and nearly all the scholars rushed into the room, down upon their knees they went, praying to be saved.

"One of the largest boys was in such agony that he rolled about and could hardly speak. After two days' hard struggling he came out bright and happy, and hardly seemed able to express his great admiration and love for the God who had done so much for him."

These extracts and letters, and the phenomenal facts of which they give account, must excite both anxious and earnest interest and inquiry in every Christian mind and heart. Concerning them it certainly seems no gratuitous assumption that there is here an imperative demand for religious teachers, to guide and instruct those so deeply moved. The admission that much of it is mere excitement and sympathy, only makes the demand for such guidance and instruction all the more imperative. If with religion our teachers feel so much at a loss, as one expresses it, fearing that they "shall not speak the right word," how impotent must they be, in the presence of such demonstrations, who have never "tasted that the Lord is gracious," and have no personal experience in such matters! Can Christians wisely and consistently intrust their gifts for the Freedmen to such, however well qualified in every other particular?

From this State we are compelled to report much physical suffering. Miss James writes:

"ROANORE ISLAND, Nov. 29th, 1865.

"I am not now teaching. It has been very sickly here; for months we had no physician, and the people called on me as though I had power to heal. I have been visiting among them, laboring for and with them, writing their letters, business and otherwise, and in a variety of ways endeavoring to assuage their woe. Many are returning this autumn to the main land, and more will soon be compelled to return. They shrink from this, fearing lest their condition be as bad or worse than before. My heart aches for them, for there is little to hope.

"I have just spent two weeks in Elizabeth City, I went to see what I could do for this people. Rations are being cut off. They are to be driven by starvation from the island. Where shall they go? No foot of land do they possess, no cottage in the wilderness. They can not all be hired by their original owners. Many have set their faces as a fiint against them. Are they to be left to die?"

Mr. Beals says:

"Little know the multitude at the North the significance of that word poor. Often we walk half a mile, sometimes a mile, to carry a mess of sweet potatoes, or any thing we can take from our scanty table, to allay the cravings of hunger. Last Saturday night I found a woman more than eighty years old, who had nothing the state of the state of ing to eat the past twenty-four hours but a part of one sweet potato.

"Ten barrels of clothing came to hand, for which we thank you and every body represented in the packages. Some of the children, now in school, had no article of clothing but a single shirt till the barrels came. Thus far, we are only fixing up the sick people, and children almost naked.

"I have now visited every house, among more than two thousand Freedmen here. If any one wishes to see human suffering in the cheerless homes of the Freedmen and refugees, I could show them enough, in a single afternoon, to give them a sleepless night, a night of tears. I do not mean to represent the whole class of Freedmen in this destitute condition. Small families, and strong, able bodied persons are able to work and supply their own immediate wants; but a hundred homes here are devoid of every comfort. Damp, chilly winds whistle through them. Little or no bedding, except rags, are found in them, and we despair of promoting virtue and purity where whole families herd together to keep themselves from freezing."

In another letter Mr. Beals describes the joy which kind friends in England occasioned among these sufferers:

"With nine packages of clothing I received that splendid lot of English blankets. God bless the donors of this rich gift, which will very soon warm the bodies of two or three hundred shivering Freedmen. It will do more than this.

† Com. and sustained by F. W. Baptists."

These gifts, in many instances, inspire the most grateful devotion to God, as well as love to men. Last evening I hurried away to a distant portion of the city with three of these blankets under my arm. One old man, crippled in the cotton-field, two aged women, and three children lived, in the shed to which I directed my steps. The little girl was reading the Testament by the fire-light to the rest of the family. I knew how they shivered and huddled together these cold nights, for I had often been there. 'Dese yere blankets,' said the choking voice of the old man, 'will warm soul and body.'"

These representations of suffering culminated in the appeal of Superintendent Ashley, which led to the establishment of the Wilmington Orphan Asylum. We append a few extracts from that appeal:

"You are aware that last spring Gen. Sherman sent into this city and vicinity thousands (about twelve thousand) of refugees Freedmen. Full one third of them died before summer was past. Very many of the deceased were parents; some were the guardians and protectors of children whose parents had perished on the way; consequently, crowds of young orphan children were left to be provided for by charity. Most of these orphans are now in the city. In addition to the orphans of refugees, there are many whose parents were living on plantations in that vicinity. Those parents were either obliged to leave the plantation on which they were residing, or the children were too young to be of raduable service to the planters, and were therefore turned adrift or thrown upon the 'Bureau' after their parents' death. The Bureau has no home in which to place them, consequently they live about as they can.

"Some of these orphans are very young, and are perishing through sheer want. Take a single instance, and it is only one of a score. Last Sabbath afteraoon, as was returning home from meeting, a colored man met me and said he wished to call my attention to a case of suffering. Just across the river there were a father, mother, and four children; the children were all small, the oldest not above ten years. The parents sickened and died a few weeks since. The children were left alone and lived alone. They were attacked by the small-pox. Two days ago one of them died, and the corpse is still lying in the room where the living children are; another of the children is lying by the side of the corpse sick with the small-pox, the other two are ailing and will soon be down; there they are, the dead and the living—the dead unburied, the living starving, naked, sick, and none to care for them. The dead one was soon buried, and the living are in the small-pox hoshelal. What shall be done with these little children when they come from the hospital? 'Bind them out,' I hear some one say. Yes, but they must have a home until a place for binding can be found. Besides, many of the orphans are too small to be bound out; some are sick and can not be."

This dark picture is relieved by the light thrown upon it, not only from the new asylum, but from the school-room. One of the teachers writes:

"Although our school has been of a seemingly most unwieldy size, and the session-room but meanly adapted to its office, yet I believe that, without just suspicion of vanity, I can report a progress which is at once a joy and an encouragement to me. My school has reached a state of discipline for which I had scarce a faint hepe when, three months since, I assumed the (so called) command of the most chaotic mol of children ever misnamed a school.

"The children sing with a spirit and sweetness that is heart satisfying. I defy any Northern skeptic to spend an hour in my school, and depart unconvinced that Southern negroes are endowed with not merely common but very noble manhood."

Concerning a class of young men in his night school, he writes:

"This little school is a very oasis in the desert. I do not by this mean to imply that the field here is generally a barren one, for fact would warrant no such estimate; yet I feel no humiliation in owning to a greater zest in the instruction of this choice circle of intelligent and earnest young men than in the training of my school-room host of heedless children. Three evenings in the week I feel myself a king, as my twelve zealous pupils gather around me, for surely never was teacher called to more royal task, and never did monarch bear sway over nobler or more loyal subjects. Herein, at least, you have commissioned me to an office that any true man, surely any Christian believer, may deem himself honored

The schools in Wilmington number ten hundred and fifty scholars, and will soon call for a normal department.

Spiritual blessings have not been withheld from this portion of the field. Miss James writes from Roanoke Island:

"I have given for rewards the Testaments I received from you, and the spark-"I have given for rewards the Testaments I received from you, and the sparking eyes of the glad recipients were reflected on every side. They prize God's Word above all other books. O brother! I rejoice every day of my life that it is my privilege to be a missionary teacher! I long to see stands converted to Christ, and Christians living rightly before God, and He has graciously given me my hire. Thirty-five of these Sabbath scholars have, I believe, been converted within the past two years, my little Jennie among the number. She was converted three weeks ago last Sabbath night, on the way home from Mr. Nickerson's prayer-meeting. She had been for many weeks in the attitude of the publican, weeping and praying the Lord to convert her soul. I took her there that night for the first time. We had an excellent meeting, and she not only by rising asked the prayers of others, but when we knelt she used her own voice, pouring out an agony of petitions that the Lord would cleane her bown, sinful heart, and yet came away with the burden resting upon her soul. I had gone, as usual, upon horseback, taking her behind me; returning, I walked my horse all the way, talking with her of the love and tenderness of Christ, and just before we reached the gate the light of heaven beamed into her soul. I would you could have heard her when, before retiring, she, as usual, followed me in prayer at family devotions. It was one burst of joy, so different from before. Since then she has lived a Christian, and though she was a conscientious child before, there is a great change in her.'

Our educational efforts in this State are mainly confined to Charleston and Hilton Head. The schools at Charleston have been among the best under our care. The following notice, taken from the Charleston Daily News, will give a disinterested view of them:

"Through the politeness of Mr. Reuben Tomlinson, 'State Superintendent of Education, we received an invitation to be present at an examination of the colored school in the Normal building, on Thursday afternoon, May 31st. We arrived about half-past three o'clock, and found the large centre room on the third floor, where the exercises were to come off, already filled with children, teachers, invited and volunteer visitors. The hall was crowded with civil and military, ladies and gentlemen, black and white, great and small, male and female; all in perfect order and in the best of humor, expecting to be amused and determined

'Among those present we recognized Generals Devens and Scott, Surgeon De Witt, Mr. Tomlinson, Mr. Sawyer, Mr. Geddings, Hon. Geo. A. Trenholm, Rev. C. P. Gadsden, Judge George S. Bryan, and Dr. R. Lebby. Various missionaries, military officers, and civilians, from the North, also assisted on the occasion.

"The upper-tendom of colored Charleston was out in full force. Their handsome, intelligent faces, and really elegant dress, presented a very fine appearance. In courtesy and native refinement they are far in advance of the upper-ten of many cities it has been our good fortune to visit.

"The scene was novel; colored 'exhibitions' in Charleston are still in their infancy. But what offered the greatest attraction to our best colored society is the fact that the Normal School is the recherché seminary, to which all the aristocracy send their children. This school is supported by the American Missionary Association of New-York. Rev. F. L. Cardozo is the Principal. He is assisted by a corps of twenty teachers, ten of whom are from the North, and the remainder colored natives of Charleston. Mr. Cardozo is also a native of this city, where he received his primary education. He afterward finished his studies at the University of Glasgow.

"This school has about one thousand pupils; average daily attendance, eight hundred. These are divided into three departments and twenty classes. The studies comprise the entire range of elementary branches, from the English primer to the Latin grammar. The institution was opened under the present auspices in October, 1865. Tuition free, the children paying for their books only.

"About three fourths of the scholars are Freedmen, the remaining fourth (comprising the more advanced classes) is composed mainly of those who were born free, and who now constitute an aristocracy of color. This school must not, therefore, be considered as giving a fair average idea of colored education in the city. The first class of girls, we learn, are under charge of Miss Weston, and some of them have been her pupils for five or six years. It is the design to make this a Normal School for the education of teachers, and the best material only has therefore been retained, as far as practicable, and the remainder sent to other schools, Thus, in some of the classes scarcely a single pure black is seen. The greater number of scholars in the more advanced classes are very fair; all hues are represented from the pale-faced Caucasian to the shining ebony of the native of Da-

"They were all very neat and clean, well-dressed, and bore themselves throughout the exercises with great credit to themselves and their teachers. Mr. Cardozo is evidently a good disciplinarian, fully appreciates the value of system, and, by having every thing reduced to method, has accomplished much in a brief

The appreciation in which the most influential persons in Charleston hold these schools and the importance of educating the colored people may be seen in the following facts given by Mr. Cardozo:

"We had two visits this week, one from Geo. A. Trenholm, ex-Secretary of Treasury of the late Confederacy, Rev. A. T. P., and two ladies; the other from Rev. Messrs. G. and P. These three ministers are prominent and influential Episcopal clergymen here. Mr. Trenholm every one knows.

"They said they came because they felt an interest in the education of the colored people, and because they have been appointed a committee, by the Episcopal Convention of South-Carolina, to establish such schools all over the State, in accordance with the offer of the Episcopal General Convention, which met in Philadelphia last fall. They want to begin by establishing one in Charleston.

"They expressed themselves very much pleased both with our method of teach-

GEORGIA.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

These were the first white natives that ever came into our school. We have had visitors almost every day, but always Northerners until this week. "I was requested by a very prominent lawyer and influential citizen of Charleston to tome to his office and confer with him on the subject of schools. 'I did so, and was surprised to find the greatest liberality expressed. He told me he was intimate with Governor Orr, who was in favor of a common school system for the State, for both white and colored."

From a very interesting letter of Miss Alcott, we make room for the following extract, which relates to the religious interests of the people:

"CHARLESTON, Dec. 28th, 1865.

"We realize very fully, I am sure, how much the Association is expending here in Charleston; yet, even in view of this large expenditure, I am confident that you would be more than satisfied could you visit us and see the amount of work actually performed. With day, evening, and Sabbath schools, distributing clothing, writing letters for the people, and visiting the families, your teachers are by no means idle. We came here to work, and we are happy in working, notwithstanding some deprivations and some annovances inseparable from a position like

"One thousand children flock daily to the Normal School, where a 'Northern dispensation is in active operation. Every child, as Rev. Mr. French says, is a text to the old masters, and every child is certainly a text to us, not for sermons, but for earnest working. These children, though, for aught I can see, they possess as much 'human nature' as fairer school children at the North, have possess as much 'human nature' as fairer school children at the North, have an appreciation of school privileges rarely found at home. 'Please for don't give us long holiday,' said one and another on Friday. 'We want a few days, but not long. We like to read.' Parents testify to their eagerness for school; "They needs no driving; they is always talkin' about their teachers.' 'I can't keep my Margaret from her book,' says one mother, with hardly concealed delight. 'Pears when she gets her dinner, she sits right down again for her leasen.'

"We find very much that makes us feel deeply our need of the Holy Spirit's influences. The special need of these people and of these children is Jesus. Elevation after Christianization is comparatively easy. Christianization is not more needed here than in every school, perhaps; only the need of refining influences is so manifest. There are, I'm glad to say, some very encouraging indications that our instructions do not fall on deaf ears. There are cases of troubled consciences, voluntary confessions of wrong, new efforts to be obedient, that no one but a teacher knows how to appreciate. These children are so emotional, so full of surface-feeling, and withal so naturally religious, that one needs to train and restrain with exceeding care."

In Beaufort, mostly occupied by another Association, we have had but a single teacher and one missionary.

At Hilton Head there have been nine teachers and a superintendent, who have done good service, though, from the peculiar nature of the population and the circumstances under which it was collected, there has been less stability than in other portions of our field. Now that the plantations are to be sold, there will undoubtedly be immediate changes. There have been two teachers in colored regiments in that vicinity during the year.

The Empire State of the South will require a somewhat extend. notice at our hands.

There has been a good deal of physical destitution in this Single during the past year. "Sherman's march" disturbed and unset many things there, and amid these changes the colored man, thous exulting in the boon of liberty, is for the time and in some localitie a sufferer. Miss Drake thus writes from Savannah:

"There has seemed lately to be an unusual influx of poor destitute people fro. the country. 'Soon as we made de crop, dey run us off, an' gib us nothin'," the pitiful story they tell of their cruel masters, too well confirmed by th wretched appearance and tattered dress.

"One of the first of many scenes of destitution which I recollect was dural the cold weather so severe at the North, and very biting even here to bare at and unprotected limbs. On that cold Monday morning, January 8th, I found and the cold Monday morning, January 8th, I found and the cold Monday morning. wharf two or three families, arrived from Thomasville a few days before, no waiting for a boat to convey them to some other point. In all the city there no shelter for the homeless wanderers, and during those nights, men, we and children had remained on the wharf beside their few possessions, exic. retthe freezing air. How eagerly they hailed my offer of clothing, and glad in I was that from our stores their comforts were greatly increased.

"Not long after this incident, a feeble old woman, panting from asthmacle to ask for a 'Sunday dress.' I followed her to the comfortless shelter whed had lived since the incoming of the army freed them from their hard chic In a miserable little outbuilding, without window or chimney, by a little kindled on the floor of earth, sat the crippled husband, trying to mend in already covered with patches of as many colors as were in Joseph's coat a only shoes which they had worn for three years, she said, were those on away by the soldiers; and her dresses were made from the coarse bags flact their deserted camps. On receiving a large bundle of clothing, the poor ed knew not how to express her gratitude. She laughed aloud in her joy, ing. 'May de good Lord put up a reward for you in heaven. What I a to do for you, de good Man up dere will.'"

The large number of orphans at Atlanta led to the appeal of Sectary Smith, and to the generous response of Hon. Mr. Washburn, hose bounty has been applied to the purchase of lands for the asylum and a normal school. We append a few paragraphs from the appeal:

"The Contraband camp supported here by the Freedmen's Bureau has been broken up and all the refugees scattered, except a few who are old and broken down, and the children of those who have died of small-pox during the winter, and the children of soldiers who have died in the war. These orphans, about one hundred in number, are in a most pitiable condition. Some of them have been taken in and sheltered by the colored people, who have but little more than they. Others-wander about the town, stopping at any hut or shanty where they can get in for a night's lodging. Others are still at the Contraband camp, in the huts built by the Twentieth A. C.; little fellows from ten months to eight years old living on hard tack and salt pork, and nobody in the wide world to care for them but the Government. A sergeant from the Freedmen's Bureau brings their rations, and some of the broken-down aunties who are still lingering and waiting to die, hobble about, and, as they say, 'nuss'em the best they can.' I looked in at one of the log shanties—no floor, a few rags and blankets for a bed on the ground, and no other furniture or comfort of any name or kind in the house. 'Who lives here?' I asked. 'We all,' said a little girl seven years old, standing beside her brother, four years old, who was sitting on the ground holding between his feet another brother ten or twelve months old. 'And who is we all?' 'We d brother and baby.' 'Where's your mother?' 'She's done and dead.' 'And r father?' 'Dun no.'" ur latest information from Atlanta is given by the Rev. Mr. Cra-, and is this:

At Atlanta the Society owns a pleasantly located and comfortable home for / teachers. A large school-house and chapel will be ready for occupation the re part of October. This building, which will accommodate three hundred pils, will be additional to the buildings occupied last year. For an orphan ylum and a normal school, the Association has clear title to a five-acre block of nd, on a commanding position overlooking the city, which block is now fenced, d arrangements are made to erect buildings for the occupation of the orphan ldren, as soon as our other buildings are completed.

'We are waiting for some large-hearted man, like the one who purchased this ck of land, to come forward and build a boarding-house for the normal school, ch is so much needed."

fur earliest movement in Georgia for the establishment of schools in Savannah. The following abridgment of an extended notice he Savannah Republican of the "Dedication of the Mission ol Building for Freedmen," will exhibit the happy issue of e interesting ceremonies of the dedication of the buildings recently erected the auspices of the American Missionary Association took place at the Mischool, at the corner of Harris and Price streets, at four o'clock yesterday on. The proceedings were of an exceedingly interesting character, as inting a new and very important educational scheme.

school-house is a commodious frame building, and though not of finished enship, is well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed. It was stefully decorated with wreaths and bouquets.

exercises were opened with a fervid invocation to the Throne of Grace, Rev. Mr. Woodworth.

history of the building was then read by Mr. E. A. Cooley, from which it d that the Mission was indebted to the military authorities for the material building, having been formerly the property of the Confederate States government, and used by them as a depot for stores at Whitesville, about thirty miles from the city. The fortunes of war placed it in the hands of the United States military authorities, and it was by them transferred to the American Missionary Association for the purposes to which it has been dedicated. After the reading of this document the boys and girls, to the number of two hundred, united together, under the direction of Miss Julia M. Marshall, of Brooklyn, in singing 'Hosanna,' which was rendered with much effect, evidencing the painstaking bestowed upon them in this department by their instructress.

"The children again sang, with much taste, 'Where Liberty dwells is my

"The Rev. Hiram Eddy, of Connecticut, was then introduced to the audience, and in an address full of sound wisdom, practical admonition, and feeling eloquence, enlisted the attention of the audience for some time."

We are much indebted to the untiring perseverance of Rev. Mr. Pettibone for this building.

Schools were established in Augusta by Rev. W. P. Russell, and were in successful operation during the year.

Our next advance in Georgia with schools was from the West. A letter from Rev. E. P. Smith will give the facts:

"Mr. Cravath started for Nashville, last Thursday week, with a corps of ten teachers. He had previously secured a house for a 'Home' in Macon. On reaching the city, the company went directly to their quarters, and were most agreeably surprised to be welcomed to their home by a company of colored ladies who had learned of their coming, and had volunteered to make the house ready. Mr. Cravath says: 'We found our home swept, scoured, and garnished, and quite a number of the good people waiting and anxious to show their gratitude by any help they could render. It was an ovation delicately done, but done to

"In the five churches (colored) of Macon, the ten teachers are to commence their work. Rev. Mr. Eddy will be missionary at large, and will undoubtedly extend the work in all directions from there, if we can get the means. The colored people are organized into a voluntary association, and will provide the rooms for schools, furnish fuel, and kindle the fires. Miss Martha D. Ayers, of Worcester, Mass., is to be the matron of the Home. I trust you will get many voices of cheer from that apostolic band of twelve at Macon.

"In passing through Atlanta with his company of teachers, Mr. Cravath was fairly plundered of one of them. The schools at Atlanta were full to overflowing, and the teachers were so overworked that Mr. Cravath could not resist the appeal to give them more help. The great want at Atlanta is a home such as that secured at Macon. With it we could use twelve teachers at once. Then we need very much another preaching-place, and a school-room near the Contrabance

An article in the Macon Daily Telegraph gives some details in re gard to the schools in that city:

"More than four thousand colored people of both sexes and all ages are sed ing the privilege of instruction in the schools in this city, established, pic the advent of peace, by the charitable people of the North, and under the she vision of Rev. Mr. H. Eddy and Mr. Rockwell, assisted by ten or twelve the from the Northern States. These ladies are the teachers, and they are states. evince energy, zeal, and talent in the management of the schools.

"There are four morning schools, one in each of the four African churacr there is one afternoon school, embracing the more advanced pupils of the ed ing schools; and there is one night school, where freedmen of every color age, of both sexes, meet to learn. In the morning schools about six hund tend; and as many as three hundred and fifty sometimes attend the night s, which indeed may be denominated a mixed school, on account of the heteroge character of the pupils; for from old men of seventy down to the mere chill from the old married dame to the sprightly yellow lass, all sizes and ages n

The dedication of "Storrs Chapel," in Atlanta, is thus described in the report of schools in that city:

"Adjoining the 'Mission House' a lot has been secured upon which a large government building has just been moved, to be transformed from a Confederate commissary building into a chapel thirty-two by eighty, and four school-rooms thirty-two by twenty. It is already named 'Storrs Chapel,' in grateful recognition of a monthly concert collection of $820 (to be made a thousand) taken in this behalf in the First Congregational Church of Cincinnati."

The state of feeling toward the schools in Atlanta, together with some facts as to progress and numbers, are thus given:

"Our schools have been growing in numbers and interest and popularity—I may say, making friends even among the whites, and those, too, quite opposed when we first established them. Recently two ladies of secession proclivities surprised my wife and me by a call at our school-room. After spending half an hour, they, on arising to depart, expressed their gratification at the good appearance of the scholars, and wished us success in our charitable efforts in doing what the Southern people could not do were they so disposed.

"Occasionally we hear of remarks like this: 'When the Freedmen's Schools were set up, we felt opposed to them; but our views are changed, and we favor them.' On asking a lad who attended our night-school how he bought his new book, he replied: 'The man that I live with bought it for me; he was my master.' 'Then he likes to have you learn.' 'Yes, he helps me himself, and Miss Eliza, his daughter, is teaching my mother and sister.'

"We have met no opposition from the first. Our work has grown gradually upon our hands, until six hundred day and one hundred night scholars are now actual pupils on our school rolls; and if we had suitable buildings and enough of eachers, we could, in a short time, 'drum up' one thousand.

"The Freedmen's Bureau, through order of Gen. Tillson, has turned over to use government building thirty-three by sixty feet, which we purpose to fit up for the school-house. It is designed to use it also for religious gatherings. This object secured, our facilities for carrying forward our work will be greatly increased.

"The statistical report shows six hundred and four scholars on the rolls this month, making about one hundred and twenty pupils to each teacher. Our night school, which was started on the 1st of January, 1866, has averaged seventy to eighty, and drawn heavily upon our strength."

The entrance into the capital, Milledgeville, is thus described by Mr. Eddy:

"Two weeks ago last Sabbath I visited Milledgeville, and preached there. I went by invitation from the colored people, who sent a delegation to ask that a chool might be organized in that place. I found the utmost eagerness for a chool, and all the facilities required; I found a good church edifice, belonging to he colored Baptist church, and with the best convenience, for a school of two hunlred and fifty scholars, of any churches in this region. I immediately made the regements, and notified the people of Milledgeville that I would open a free it there on the 12th instant. I went over on Saturday, and found the most se excitement, in view of what, to them, was the wonderful event. The child he old man were alike excited. I preached on the Sabbath to three most ined audiences, besides talking to the Sunday-school in the forenoon; and I remark, in passing, that I found the most orderly and well-conducted Sunchool here of any which I have found in the South that was under the enontrol of the colored people. In the afternoon service I was encouraged by resence of several white people; among them were two members of the Leg-re, three ministers, one professor of Oglethorpe College, and one judge. Prof. on took part with me in the services; I mention this to show that the apparent ssion of sentiment in the community is in favor of the schools. And I was his morning by a South-Carolinian, a minister, that the prejudice against the ls was beginning to give way, and would, and must, ultimately all disappear. t the afternoon service I announced that a free school for colored children dults would be opened at ten o'clock on Monday. There was no effort made out an audience, but when ten o'clock came, one remarked to me that the urch and grounds around seemed like a camp-meeting. The teachers, Mr. RockTWENTIETH ANNUAL REPORT.

Natchwell and Miss Sands, arrived on the ten o'clock train, and as they passet regi-the streets, doors and windows were filled to catch a view of the Yank pedagogues. The church was a scene of deep interest. There were precand classes and conditions of men, from the child of five years up to the child ag-ld eighty. The galleries were crowded, the aisles full; and with them appeared o white man, the Rev. Mr. Brooks, pastor of the Baptist church. I was g ad to see him present, and he did us good. The scene was of the most lively character. The school was opened with religious exercises—singing, reading the Scriptures, and prayer—when short addresses were delivered. First, I introduced the matter, then called on Mr. Brooks, who in a few remarks fully and cordially indorsed the enterprise, and, Mr. Rockwell having made a few remarks, we proceeded t organize the school by taking the names of those who expected to attend. W found the parents were generally present, observing what was going on with th most affecting interest. They bent over the breastwork of the galleries, looke down from the pulpit, (for they had crowded every part of the house,) and seeme to say, 'Surely the year of jubilee has come.' But, notwithstanding the deep er citement of the occasion, the audience was under the most perfect control. M Rockwell hushed them to silence by a wave of the hand. There is no more obtdient people in all the world than these poor, despised ones, and I believe there is great destiny in store for them. Their readiness to obey, and their eagerness t learn, lay the foundations for very sanguine expectations.

A pleasant little incident-welcome to a teacher:

"The Legislature has adjourned, and it is very quiet. The most of a stir, and the only bustle I have witnessed, was occasioned by the arrival of Miss Sands, former teacher, yesterday morning. The children had been told that a teacher would come in on the train from Macen. At recess they climbed a hill while overlooked the road leading to the depot, and as soon as they discovered the Miss Sands had returned, they ran wild with delight and rent the air with their shouts. The school is large and very interesting, and I think promisque one of the most successful in Georgia. It numbers two hundred and eight sides those attending night-school. The teachers engaged here are of the grade, and enthusiastic in their work."

MINISTER AND TEACHERS.

Rev. Gorham Greely.

Mrs. H. B. Greely, Miss E. B. Eveleth, Miss C. Jocelyn.

Several plans are projected for settling the colored people on t fertile and unoccupied lands of this State. Mr. Greely mentio the following:

"St. Augustine, Fla., January 4th, 1866.

"Chaplain Moore, who is detailed as Superintendent of Education for the Freedmen in this State, under the Freedmen's Bureau, a good friend of the cored people, together with another gentleman, has bought, for the benefit of the colored people, 8000 acres of land on the right bank of the St. John's river, below lars per acre. The land being good, and the location eligible, it is being rapid taken up. About one half of the Protestant colored people of this place he engaged lots of land, and are making haste to move. One installment of the expect to leave the first of next week, and the rest soon to follow. Probably, few, except the Catholics and the soldiers, will remain by the last of this mon They take from three to twenty acres to a family, averaging about fifteen acre the probability is, that the tract will all very soon be taken up and settled more than a thousand people, and the settlement be extended."

The various ways of treating the freedmen, and the results, thus given in the Florida Times, a new and sprightly loyal jour published at Jacksonville:

The y come in contact with representatives of the two classes, and it is in their in their experience. One comes in theiring his niggers, and with despairing, haggard, exed countenance, the d—d niggers won't work, and there is no use in trying them; I atteen dollars par month, and rations more than they can consume, and two them won't do as much work as one slave; they won't work—we can raise no itton by free labor!' Another planter replies, 'I have no difficulty; I work fty hands, pay them ten dollars per month, and two of them do more work han three slaves! It is the way you treat them. I find no difficulty.'

"An intelligent slaveholder, a gentleman of cultivation and liberal views, met a ge planter foaming, fretting, cursing, despairing—the country was ruined, no re cotton could be raised, niggers wouldn't work, his plantation was valueless, etc. 'What will you take for your plantation?' asked the gentleman, after n attempts to induce him to reason. 'Twelve thousand dollars,' said the netr. 'I'll take it.' The property was transferred, and the new proprietor mediately placed it in charge of the negroes, the former slaves of the old proctor, who, to the number of ninety, entered into contract to cultivate the farm on shares, they receiving one third the crop. They assure the new proprietor they will raise two hundred acres more cotton than ever before."

The schools are thus referred to by Mrs. Greely:

" St. Augustine, Fla., September 30th, 1865.

'Our Sabbath-school is prospering, notwithstanding our great want of teachers.
e still hold the children of Catholic parents who have been accustomed to atid, although the priest and 'sisters' have been making attempts to draw them is is a Catholic city. There are here three priests and six 'sisters' in the that, all practical if not real Jesuits, constantly on the watch to draw in unity souls. As soon as they hear of the birth of a colored child, they immedity visit the mother, if she be not a member of some church, and insist on the debing christened by their priests; and they give her no rest until the child hristened; and it is not unfrequently the case that the mother, though not a fessor of religion, brings the child to Mr. G. to christen, in order to get rid of ir constant teasing.

"This is a strong power here, but it is evidently weakening among the coled people. It seems doubtful now, if they succeed in their plan to draw the liddren of Catholic parents from our schools. There has been quite a little common among the parents. We have heard them say, while talking together: They are in favor of colored people learning to read, why haven't they done it tre? I want my children to go where they can learn every thing that white dren do."

Rev. S. G. Wright, formerly Superintendent of Schools at Natchez, taking for a time the position of chaplain to a colored regiment at Winchester, thus notices his parting from his associates, and his work at the former place, and his introduction to his new field of labor:

"NATCHEZ, November 18th, 1865.

"We have just closed our weekly prayer-meeting. It was a serious, profitable hour. It will be the last some of us will ever enjoy together. This prayer-meeting has been a means of great good; we established it last fall, and it has been maintained without interraption until this time."

"WINCHESTER, November 28th, 1865.

"We left Natchez Wednesday evening, 22d inst., and arrived here Saturday, half-past ten o'clock P.M. The officers of the regiment were anxiously awaiting our arrival. The camp is near the station on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The town is composed of a few families of poor people.

"There are several families of colored people living about in the woods. We intend to have a school for them. A pious lieutenant has been teaching a school in the regiment since they arrived here last August, and he has preached the Gospel faithfully to the soldiers every Sabbath.

"I have never anywhere on the river witnessed so much of earnest Christian devotion as in this regiment. Lieutenant H. is a graduate of Illinois College, studied for the ministry, but entered the army before commencing the study of theology. He has formed a Congregational church here, only his members are not baptized, as they had no ordained minister; about a dozen will be baptized uext Sabbath. Last Sabbath evening twenty came forward for prayers. Meetings are held in the quarters all through the regiment. They have a large school-room, and a house nearly completed for us."

Persecutions await our agents and teachers in this State. The assault upon Rev. J. P. Bardwell, and the murder of Lieutenant Blanding, though extensively published, deserve mention here as a permanent record of the atrocity:

"Rev. J. P. Bardwell, agent for the American Missionary Association in Mississippi, was lately enticed into a law office in Grenada, Miss., and set upon by a ruffianly crowd that gathered in the street, in open day. This missionary to the freedmen could get no reason for the choking and beating which they proceeded to administer, except that he was working for the 'niggers.' The Bureau Agent, Lieutenant Blanding, helped him wash the blood from his face, and advised a complaint to the mayor. On reaching the mayor's office, Mr. Bardwell found that the man who had led the crowd, and beaten him, had already been before the mayor, made complaint against himself, and paid the fine of ten dollars imposed by his honor, and was ready for more work at the same price. Three days after, Lieutenant Blanding, Agent of the Bureau, was attacked on the street, shot three times, and died in twenty-four hours."

May 4th, Mr. Bardwell wrote from Jackson:

"I hoped the shooting of Lieutenant Blanding would have a tendency to quiet the rufflans, for a time at least, but it seems otherwise. While Lieutenant Blanding lay dying, a committee of citizens waited on Captain May, Sub-Commissioner of Freedmen's Bureau, telling him that the teachers must leave town. He told them that the teachers were not government employée, and had no control over them. With this committee came a committee of condolence, and also the information that if he did not leave he would be shot next. The man with whom the teachers boarded is threatened with prosecution for stealing cotton, cattle, etc., and of course, if he is prosecuted, they will convict him of any crime they choose."

At Brandon Miss May Close thus describes the hinderances offered, and her mode of meeting them:

"I shall close my school June 30th. I had expected to remain over the summer, but I now find that I could not teach through the heat of the season with my present accommodations. I have had much opposition from the press and people. White school-boys have stoned my school-house, breaking out the windows and endangering our lives. The mayor stopped this at my request. An editor of a paper then notified me, by letter, that if I continued my night-school, the consequences would be upon my own head. I replied that I should teach both night and day, bidding him to bring on his 'consequences.' He said that if I was a person of any refinement I would not remain in a community wherevery one looked upon me with loathing and disgust. He added that the children in the vicinity of my pew get up and leave when I enter church. I replied that children of well-bred Christian parents never left the pew when I entered, in this or any other town. He said that he could hardly prevent one of these parents from coming right up to see me. I repeated it, and said I should be happy to see this 'Christian parent,' but he never came.

"I exchanged three letters with this editor, and I made no concessions. I was entirely alone, and boarding in a mulatto family. Yet my defiance astonished these rowdies. The presence of troops at Jackson, twelve miles from here, saved me, Oh! how much they dread the presence of troops! The mayor and a few older citizens censured this editor, telling him that he had gone too far, that the next thing the town would be garrisoned, etc. The gentlemanly editor came to the man with whom I board, telling him that he would let me alone now; he supposed I thought I was doing God's service in teaching niggers, etc. I am sor, that this is the close of the school year, as I want to hold my post here; but my room is so small, and I feel the wearing effects of teaching night and day, so I will close until September or October."

The great event of the year, in our operations in this State, was the opening of the "Fisk School," in Nashville, an abridged account of which we glean from the Nashville papers:

"The building west of the Chattanooga depot, heretofore used as a military hospital, was yesterday formally dedicated as a colored High School, by appropriate addresses by distinguished military and civil gentlemen of this city.

"Prof. John Ogden, of the Western Freedmen's Aid Commission, and Rev. E. M. Cravath, of the American Missionary Association, will be Superintendents of the institution.

"The following figures will give some idea of the extent of the building: The first division is 170 by 20, and divided into twelve rooms. Three wards 200 by 20 extend back, each divided into four sections, the rooms being 50 by 20, and two buildings in the rear, 20 by 60. The whole structure is well ventilated from the roof. The rooms are fourteen feet high, plastered and well lighted. There are four hydrants with water and fire-pipes extending through the buildings. The courts within the wards are handsomely sodded, and over 100 by 60 feet. The whole appearance of the place is very neat and attractive.

"A large concourse of teachers and pupils connected with the various colored schools in the city, with a number of distinguished invited guests, Governor Brownlow, Chancellor Lindsley, of the State University, and Superintendent of the City Schools, Senator Bosson, General Fisk, and a goodly number of other civilians and officers, were present to witness the opening of this institution. The band of the Fifteenth U. S. C. I. were present and varied the exercises by some excellent music."

We regret that we have not room for the excellent addresses delivered on that occasion by Chancellor Lindsley, Senator Bosson, Gen. Fisk, Governor Brownlow, and others. We add the following telegraphic dispatch, sent to the Cincinnati Gazette:

"NASHVILLE, June 15th.

"The great 'Fisk' free school for colored children closed its first term to-day. A large number of citizens crowded the chapel to witness the examination. Nearly one thousand pupils are taught in this school by fifteen excellent teachers. It is supported by the Western Freedmen's Commission of Cincinnati and the American Missionary Association of New-York. The examination to-day was a brilliant success, delighting every body, and astonishing especially old Tennesseeans, who never before gave countenance to a negro school."

The opening of Lincoln Chapel, at Memphis, was a worthy accompaniment to the Nashville inauguration. Rev. E. O. Tade, to whose self-denying and persevering labors the colored people are indebted for this chapel, thus describes the occasion:

"January 1st, 1866, was a high and glad day to your missionary in Memphis, Tenn. Three toiling and wearying months having passed, he was on that day permitted to see a humble place of worship opened for the special benefit of the colored people of that part of the city, and, he trusts and believes, for the general good of that despised because wronged race in every State and through every clime.

"A general invitation was given that on New-Year's day, at two P.M., Lincoln Chapel, on Union street, would be opened and dedicated to the glory of God, and the cause of truth and righteousness.

"The meeting-house was crowded to its utmost capacity, and then it was estimated that more than two thousand stood without, seeking to hear from open doors and windows. Your missionary gave a short history of Lincoln Chapel, and what its aim was; this often called forth shouts of approving gladness. After these prefatory remarks, Rev. A. L. Rankin led the congregation in solemn prayer, giving thanks for what he was now permitted to see and hear, and consecrating that house to the service and glory of Almighty God."

The burning of this chapel in the riot at Memphis adds one of the shades that make up the unmitigated blackness of that nefarious transaction.

The friends of the colored people will rejoice in the subjoined statement from Mr. Cravath:

"At Memphis the A. M. A. holds title in fee-simple to two building-lots, on which are now being erected a primary school building 15 by 64 feet, and a central school-house 47 by 57 feet, two stories high, making four school-rooms on first floor and a chapel on the second. The funds have been raised for the heating and furnishing of these buildings, so that our schools will be much better furnished than before the Memphis mob destroyed the colored churches and school-houses"

A pleasant little incident is given by the Nashville correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette:

"A TENNESSEE PLANTER AND A NEGRO SCHOOL.—No man about Nashville is better known than Gen. Harding; his plantation is one of the finest in Tennessee, and he went into the rebellion with all his soul. But he has been subdued, has taken all the oaths, and seems disposed to observe them. He has on his plants—tion one hundred and ten negroes, the remnant of a once valuable stock owned before the war. Yesterday Gen. Fisk went out to Gen. Harding's to talk withhim and the colored people about a school. When the matter was first broached Mr. Harding expressed himself in strong terms against it. He was willing to pay for the work he obtained, but a colored school he would 'never have on his plantation. However, a meeting was called, Gen. Harding introduced Gen. Fisk, told who he was, what was his business, and sat down.

"Then the general took the floor and explained his views in regard to a school. The scene just there and then formed a spectacle worthy the pencil of a Raphael. There sat the ex-rebel planter and general, and before him a congregation of exalaves, whose dusky faces, when they heard of the school, were lighted up with a joy better imagined than described. One old man broke out, 'Bless de Lord, Massa General, dat is just what we want, exactly!'

"After hearing the general, and beholding the enthusiasm of the blacks, Mr. Harding gracefully surrendered one of the most wicked prejudices of the South, and agreed that a school should be opened on his plantation, to which he would give all possible encouragement. As soon as arrangements can be made, and a suitable teacher procured, a school of sixty children will be opened."

Rev. Gabriel Burdett, Rev. John G. Fee, Rev. A. Scofield, Rev. J. A. R. Rogers.

Mrs. Scofield, Miss E. Belle Mitchell, Miss Sarah G. Stanley, Miss Luthera Wilson, Miss Scofield.

Violence toward the colored people has reigned in some parts of this State. From a report made to Gen. Howard we condense the following statement:

"GENERAL: In compliance with instructions received from the department, directing me to proceed to the city of Lexington, Kentucky, to examine into the condition of the freedmen in that part of the State, I have the honor to report that I visited Lexington and vicinity, and prosecuted my investigation for the period of about one month.

"An examination of the sworn evidence, or the abstracts made therefrom, will reveal to you sixty cases of outrage in a limited district and period, unparalleled in their atrocity and fiendishness—cruelties for which, in no instance, as developed by the testimony, is there the least shadow of excuse or palliation.

"I have classified these outrages as follows:

"I have classified these outrages as follows:

"Twenty-three cases of most severe and inhuman beating and whipping of men, four of beating and shooting, three of robbing, five men shot and killed, two shot and wounded, four beaten to death, one beaten and roasted, three women assaulted and ravished, four women beaten, two women tied up and whipped until insensible, two men and three families beaten and driven from their homes, and their property destroyed, two instances of burning of dwellings, and one of the inmates shot. Of these victims twelve men were Union soldiers, and three women the wives of Union soldiers."

The Rev. John G. Fee, whose name is identified with anti-slavery efforts in Kentucky, and the Rev. J. A. R. Rogers are making commendable and persevering efforts to sustain permanently a school of high grade, and open equally to blacks and whites, at Berea, in that State. Another feature of the plan contemplates the purchase of lands adjacent to the school, to be sold to the colored people at reasonable rates, and thus encourage their settlement around the school.

Report of Berea Mission for 1866:

"First among the fruits of the past year's missionary labor in Berea must be reckoned the reëstablishment of Berea Literary Institute on the broad principles of human brotherhood, and the practical demonstration that a school on this Christian basis can here be sustained without any interference of military powers.

"Other results, through the grace of God, have been achieved. At this place fifteen persons have taken upon them the vows of the Lord, two of whom hope to be heralds of salvation; the Sunday-school has increased from twenty-five to one hundred members; the place of holding meetings has become too strait, and a subscription started for a new church; material prosperity has begun, houses have been built and machinery introduced, and the eyes of thousands both of friends and foes turned here 'to see whereunto this thing would grow.' After Christmas many of the best colored families in Central Kentucky are proposing to move here in order to obtain the advantages of the school; multitudes of freedmen, who have never seen and never will see Berea, have had their hearts cheered and hopes kindled by learning that at this place all men were treated alike, and that in the opportunities afforded for culture no distinction was made because of race.

The institution was opened in January last, but, in consequence of previous arrangements about buildings, colored scholars could not be admitted till the first of March. Owing to the former reputation of the school, large numbers were eager to obtain its advantages. One lady from Rock Castle, an adjoining county, said that all the young people of the region were purposing to come to Berea. When colored scholars were admitted, more than half of the white students left. Threats of violence were rife, and lukewarm friends turned away. But some held fast, humbled themselves anew before the Lord, and, sustained by his presence, went calmly forward. Children of God's poor came to take the place of the scholars who left, the hearts of many were emboldened, and the truth that we are all one in Christ Jesus was exemplified anew. From that day to this, the institute has slowly, but without serious interruption, been extending its roots more deeply and firmly into the soil. Two thousand dollars have been secured for the school besides funds for building purposes. We do not expect that the school will come to its maturity like Jonah's gourd, in a night. From the nature of the case, it must have time for its growth. If the adage as old as Herod that' beginnings are half' is true, then much has been done. If it is a blessed result that there is one white community in the South that takes a deep interest not merely in the education of the freedmen, but in their education in an institution which sets itself against the whole spirit of caste, to Him, who by his Spirit has wrought the work, be all the glory. Of far-reaching importance as are these results, we trust that they are but the beginning; that the seed sown, with all its wonderful possibilities, which has begun to take root, is to produce a glorious harvest.

"We wonder at the results in view of the small measure of love for Christ that we have had, but are thereby cheered on to labor and pray for the development of the church, and the accomplishment of those things which the Christian eye can see at a glance are here so greatly needed.

"The results of the preaching of the Gospel in long circuits from this place, to the freedmen, and the people of the 'hill country,' demand a special report."

At Camp Nelson, Rev. A. Scofield describes the destitution:

"Tell the good friends in England that we feel grateful for their kind remembrance of our suffering poor. The blankets (one bale) they sent us through your kind ministration have warmed and comforted at least four hundred needy women and children. I will mention a few cases in particular. One woman called on us for a blanket, and, as she appeared destitute, we gave her one. I followed her a few hundred yards to see how she fared. But O me! what a house! Slabs nailed in the form of a pen, about eight feet square, with a rude fireplace on one side, and one bench and a pail comprised the whole furniture. On a few loose boards, which served for a floor, lay a pile of rags which served for a bed, a loose board answered for a door, and open cracks and corners supplied the place of windows! And whom do you think I found there? Two women and six children, two of them quite young. There they were, cold and huddled up around their fire, made of boards gathered up here and there around the camp. It was a sad sight, and I trust neither you nor the good friends in England will blame me for sending them a second blanket. Only a moment ago one of these children was in here begging for bread; on this bitter cold day, and not one pint of food for the whole eight to eat!

"A day or two since I saw a ragged blind man passing by. I caught up a blanket, and running up to him, threw it over his head. With surprise he asked what that was for. I replied, 'A present to you from the good people of England.' I left him pouring out his blessings upon the heads of the donors."

Mr. Scofield is making exertions to secure lands for the people, and to maintain schools among them. His labors have been earnest and self-denying.

Schools opened in Louisville are thus described by Miss Stanley, a teacher:

"The month has been one of pleasure and profit both to myself and my pupils. At no previous time has there been such close application to study, and continuous effort to gain the mastery over difficulties encountered, as have been exhibited during the month. Instead of employing the closing weeks of school in preparing for a public exhibition, as is the custom in the schools of Louisville, we omitted all attempts at rhetorical display or private theatricals, and spent the last four weeks in reviewing the studies of the term. The result was highly satisfactory; there was manifested a power of continuity and concentrativeness which I did not suppose could be developed in natures so mercurial. I think it was a pardonable vanity I experienced on the closing day of school, when the classes in history and grammar, geography and arithmetic, passed examination creditably, responding to questions not found in the text-books, with correctness and that easy confidence which evinces familiarity with general principles as well as the letter of books. The severe training of this month of hard study has been of incalculable benefit to them. They became so thoroughly familiarized with the branches pursued as to cause the knowledge acquired to seem a part of themselves, and capable of practical application in every-day life: they have learned to have confidence in their own powers, and properly to estimate their capability for improvement.

"Summarily, the work in Louisville for the five and a half months I was engaged here abundantly repaid the effort made. Considering it in a character merely intellectual, it was decidedly a success: for thoroughness in the rudiments taught, for accuracy and precision in recitation, cheerful submission to government, and propriety of demeanor, the school was unsurpassed."

Miss Stanley furnishes a pleasant little sketch of negro logic and shrewdness:

"An officer of one of the Freedmen's Commissions of the North called at the school, and was invited to address the scholars. He did so in a very pertinent and attractive manner, keeping the bright eyes of the eager listeners fixed upon him with interest and attention.

"'Now, children,' said he, 'you don't think white people are any better than you because they have straight hair and white faces?' 'No, sir,' cried the children, with intuitive comprehension of the great truth uttered by Paul on Marien, with intuitive comprehension of the great truth uttered by Paul on Marien, with intuitive comprehension of the great truth uttered by Paul on Marien, with intuitive comprehension of the great truth uttered by Paul on Marien, which is great government; they control this vast country; they invent elegraphs and steamboats; they construct railroads and war steamers. Now, what makes them different from you? The answer, 'Education,' seemed inevitable; but, instead, a chorus of little voices instantly responded, 'MONEY.' 'Yes, aid the speaker, 'but what enabled them to obtain it? How did they get money?' A simultaneous shout burst forth, 'Got it off us; stole it off we all.' A different answer might have been returned, but hardly a truer one as applied to the people of the South."

INDIANA.

TEACHER.-Miss E. E. Johnson.

For some two years before the war, we had a colored school in Evansville, designed mainly for those who had been driven from other States. For seven years Miss Johnson, of Massachusetts, has labored nobly, efficiently, and successfully. She now retires from the field, and the subjoined extract from an Evansville paper gives an account of the closing examination of the school:

"The examination of the colored school of this city, taught by the Misses Johnson, came off yesterday morning. We regret that we had not time to attend during the entire examination, but the exercises after recess well paid us for going. During the term these ladies have had registered two hundred and seventy-three scholars. There were at the examination one hundred and fourteen, ranging in ages, we should judge, from sixteen to five years old. There were quite a large number of visitors, both white and colored, in attendance, who, we are sure, were greatly delighted with the examination; and some we heard speak were most enthusiastic in praise of the entire school, and especially of the excellent teachers, who have braved public opinion and labored quietly, earnestly, faithfully, and assiduously to elevate the offspring of an unfortunate race, long held in bondage and the chains of slavery. We do not think there we one present at the examination but felt grateful in his or her heart toward those excellent ladies for the noble work they had accomplished.

"The scholars were examined in reading, spelling, geography, and arithmetic. The class in geography recited from the maps of the States, North-America, North-America, Stath-Area in the state of the states of the states of the states.

"The scholars were examined in reading, spelling, geography, and arithmetic. The class in geography recited from the maps of the States, North-America, Surope, Asia, and Africa, failing in but few questions during the entire examination. The questions were answered with a promptness and readiness that was in the highest degree commendable, while in arithmetic the class was quite as good.

"The reading and spelling were excellent. The Misses Johnson must have labored hard to train the minds of those pupils so successfully. During the examination the exercises were interspersed with singing and declamations. One little boy, not exceeding six years old, declaimed a piece of five or six verses perfectly. Another, a piece entitled 'God's Time,' was declaimed by a boy about fourteen years old; and another, 'Are we yet Free?' by a boy about ten years old. There were several songs sung, in which the taste of the colored race for singing was fully exhibited. One, suited to the tune of 'Dixie,' entitled 'What will be done with the Lazy Scholar?' pleased the visitors well."

From Missouri, Bro. Copeland writes:

+ Sustained by the Free-Will Baptists.

"KANSAS CITY, December 1st, 1865.

"I have organized a Congregational church in Kansas City, small but promising, and hope its numbers will soon be increased. During the last month I held a protracted meeting here, continuing about ten days, in which I had some assistance from the Rev. Mr. Hill, the N. S. Presbyterian minister of this city. As the result of the meeting, some six or eight profess to have embraced the Gospel. About twenty during the meeting came forward for prayers. What will be the permanent fruits of the meeting the future must determine.

"The church at Westport continues to prosper. There have been eight additions during the quarter, and two excommunications; one for the habitual use of intoxicating drinks. Our weekly prayer-meetings have been fully attended and intoxicating drinks. Our weekly prayer-meetings have been fully attended and deeply interesting during the entire season. We sometimes hold them for three hours with unabated interest to the close. The numbers are growing in grace hours with unabated interest to the close. The numbers are growing in grace and the knowledge of the truth; they ardently love their meetings, their church, their minister, and, above all, their Saviour. Our meetings are not attended by unnatural excitement, but it is a rich feast to attend them. Take the church as a whole, I can truly say that I have never ministered to a white church which could compare with the church of Westport in active, devoted, and whole-hearted piety. This I say, making all due allowance for the imperfections of our fallen nature, and especially for this 'broken fragment' of Adam's posterity."

From Kansas, we give extracts from our correspondence. Bro. Platt, at Topeka:

"I commenced my labors here on the fifth of October last. Since that time I have been laboring among the colored people with hope, but meet many things that show how great a need of labor there is. I meet the people on Thursday evening in a kind of singing school and prayer-meeting. The Sabbath school had procured a number of copies of the S. S. Hosannah, and I take my violin and spend an hour singing with them. I call on some brother to lead in prayer, and after singing some time I select a hymn that brings out some truth, and use it as a text for a ten minutes' talk, and have from one to four pray afterward.

They are all very fond of music, and I succeed in reaching a great many in that way that I can not in my Sabbath exercises. I sometimes think that I am really accomplishing more in this way than by my preaching."

At a later date he says:

"I felt that if I were to labor among this people, it would be better for me to be an ordained minister, and a council was called by my church, which ordained me on the thirty-first of last month.

"In my labors here I have not as much to report as I should like. One incident that I will mention interested me. A good sister in connection with the Methodist church here, on whom I called, asked me if it did not take a good deal Methodist church here, on whom I called, asked me if it did not take a good deal of my time to be around among the colored people so much? I told her that I spent the whole of my time among them, and that friends of the colored people in the East gave their contributions to support me. She said that the colored people ought to do something to help me, and took out her pocket-book and handed me two dollars. This was a part of her earnings by washing. You will please credit Rose Jones with two dollars, and charge me with the same amount. "Our greatest need is a house of worship. We have been using a small room that was occupied by a colored school, but it is not large enough to accommodate us, and I fear we shall not be able to have the use of it much longer."

Bro. Fox, of Ridgeway, says:

"When I last wrote you I was about starting for Wakarusa, to aid in 'a meeting of days.' I found quite an interest among the people, and I preached one week every evening save one. Then we stopped on account of the weather and the darkness of the nights. One not acquainted with a prairie country can have but a faint idea of the difficulty of holding meetings in dark nights. With a lantern and on a good trodden road there would be less risk. But to follow a blind track is next to impossible.

"Our meetings were quiet, but marked with deep feeling. Eight or nine seemed to give evidence of their acceptance with Christ. Five of them were men; one of them a young man who had but recently left a praying home in Michigan. All were deeply affected in view of their sins and the mercy of God

"I have learned of another school for the freedmen recently started in Olathe. I hope to visit it ere long. I will then give particulars. This school, like nearly all our schools, is mainly sustained as a free school. We are holding meetings in our new house of worship, although it is not finished. The cold has been severe, and of longer duration than we generally experience here."

Bro. Payne, of Lawrence, says:

"I have commenced an appointment about five miles out of the city, where I go once in two weeks, in the afternoon. There is a settlement of colored people there. They have a Sabbath-school conducted by a good Connecticut farmer, who resides in the neighborhood. The school numbers from forty to sixty persons of all ages. They meet in an arbor in the grove near the Wakarusa river. It is a rude temple, but it answers a good purpose in pleasant weather in the absence of a house of worship. A free school has been opened in North-Lawrence, within a few weeks, for the colored people on that side of the river."

In Alabama, Prof. Silsby has done missionary work and maintained a school in Montgomery.

In Louisiana, the education of the blacks has been in a precarious and unsettled condition since General Banks's plans were laid aside. But schools have been maintained in various ways, and a normal school has been kept up in New-Orleans by Mr. Warren. Two wealthy and benevolent gentlemen in Illinois, Messrs. Emerson and Talcott, have generously proposed to expend $2500 per annum, in support of this or some other normal school there, provided this Association will devote a like sum to the same object. We shall accept the proposal, and thus add another, and perhaps two, to the list of these advanced schools.

In Texas, schools have also been maintained in towns and on the plantations, supported variously; in some instances, the planters themselves assisting by furnishing the building or the boarding.

We have commissioned Rev. G. Honey, a minister of the Weslevan Methodist body, who has had much experience in that State, as chaplain, missionary, and teacher. He will devote himself, under our auspices, to preaching and promoting schools in the State.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

OJIBUE AND OTTOWA MISSIONS.

STATIONS: NORTHPORT AND ONUMUNESVILLE, MICH.

Missionaries: Rev. Geo. N. Smith, Mrs. Smith.

Mr. SMITH reports a longer and more severe illness than at any previous time in his missionary life. During his sickness William Natoshing, an Indian, conducted regular religious services with interest and profit. During the year he has baptized and received in the Indian church five members, two young men and three women.

Mr. Smith thinks these Indians are making slow but steady improvement.

During the year, Rev. John Thompson has been added to the mission, and has for a short time had charge of the Brainerd station, preaching occasionally also at Eliot. In July, Rev. C. C. Starbuck, formerly connected with the mission, by invitation of the brethren, applied for reappointment, and is now on his way there.

The spiritual death that has for some years spread over the island of Jamaica has continued; and the difficulties in the way of missionary effort have been a good deal aggravated by the disturbances at Morant Bay and the violent acts of the governor.

At CHESTERFIELD, by removals, exclusion, and dearth, thirteen have been taken from the church and only one added; yet Mr. Venning, the pastor, says there is certainly as much evidence of genuine religion in that church as at any time for the last twelve years, the time of his connection with it; there are unmistakable signs of progress in God's children, and more true piety and Christian virtue in the church than at any time in its previous history.

Brainerd and Eliot stations have both been without a pastor during the greater portion of the year. Rev. J. Thompson, now in charge of Brainerd, says there is much uphill work there; but there are s me who love the Lord, and others now anxious to know the true as it is in Jesus. The church at Eliot, which has been without a pastor since the return of Rev. L. Thompson, has been much tried, but is hopeful; the Sabbath-school is reported as "prosperous both in numbers and holiness," and much good, Mr. T. says, is being done among the young people.

Brandon Hill reports the addition of eleven members, and the cutting off of three. Rev. Mr. Wilson had been absent from his charge for a year, in this country. Soon after his return he wrote:

"Our congregation and Sabbath-school are both larger than ever before. . . Every thing in the church appears pleasant, . . and, as far as I know, there are no discords or divisions among the members. . . Almost every thing looks encouraging."

Since Mr. Wilson's return he has taken the pastoral charge of the church at Providence. The church is small, and has been without a pastor since Mr. Fisher's return to this country, early in the present year.

AT RICHMOND, the Industrial School, under charge of Mr. Wolcott, has been reduced in numbers on account of the disturbances on the island. At the close of the year, August 1st, it numbered but twenty scholars. Their selection is carefully made, and the scholars retained are commended. For prudential reasons, Mr. Wolcott, who has some connection with the cultivation of a farm, has relinquished his salary for the present, and is at this time giving his services to the Mission. A more self-denying missionary can scarcely be found. We trust he will see the fruit of his efforts to improve both the temporal and spiritual condition of the people.

It is due to the Jamaica Mission to state that they do not regard the apparent declension of their churches as all real. It is not so much a departure from God, as, under the enlightenment of better instruction, a revelation of the spirit that was in them, an uncovering of their deceptions, which is regarded as the work of the truth, and which, though it leaves the churches fewer in numbers, they hope will show them purer in life, and stronger to do the work of the Lord. The expenditures for this Mission during the year, including the cost of exchange, have been $7301.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

MISSIONARIES.

Rev. J. S. Green, Mrs. A. C. S. Green. Assisted by Rev. J. P. Green, Miss M. E. Green, Miss M. H. Parker.

Hawaiian: Kekua, Kalawe, Maliche, Kaiwi, Nui, and Pohaku.

Rev. J. S. Green has been laid aside by sickness during a small part of the year. He says, however:

"There has been no interruption of our Sabbath labors in either language, (English and Hawailan.) During my sickness, my son and helper in the Gospel supplied both pulpits. He has also administered the ordinance of the Lord's Super quarterly at Huelo and Keokea or Kalepolepo, besides spending an occasional Sabbath at each of those places. He has frequently preached for me in Hawaiian, and he uniformly assists me in administering the Lord's Supper.

"The labors of the station have not been in vain in the Lord. This I say with gratitude unfeigned, as the past year has, in some respects, been a more than usually trying one. The decrease of our population has been exceedingly rapid. Deaths and removals have well-nigh depopulated some parts of my field. We feel the hurtful influence of living under a government decidedly destitute of sympathy with us, a Protestant and puritanic church. Our schools are removed as far as possible from missionary influence, and committed to the control of one whose sympathies are with the Romanists. Iniquity abounds and mischlef is framed by law. The influence of this state of things we have felt at Makawao during the past year. Still the Lord has helped us. Our congregations on the Sabbath here, and also at Huelo and Keokea, are intelligent and wakeful. Though we can not report, as we have often done, accessions to the church, we can not but hope there is a growth of the divine life in the hearts of our best members, so that we cherish the hope that now the enemy is coming in like a flood, the Spirit of God is, by or through the church, lifting up a standard against him."

In a communication accompanying his report, Mr. Green gives a brief review of his mission at Makawao since its commencement. The following is an extract:

"During my residence at Makawao, I am happy in the persuasion that I have not labored in vain, nor spent my strength for naught. That there has been a gradual but genuine work of the Holy Spirit among our people I can not doubt. When from time to time I have gathered from this field what, in the judgment of charity, we regarded as the trophies of grace, till from one hundred and sixty we numbered nearly eleven hundred, could I doubt that we had been favored with the gracious influences of the Spirit of God? Of these hundreds admitted to our church, a great number, perhaps one half, have gone to give up their account, to test the soundness of their hope. A goodly number left us comfortable evidence of their preparation to see God in peace, and we love to think of them as now before the throne, clothed in white robes and palms in their hands, uniting with the blood-washed throng in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb. And though of others who have died, and of not a few of the living, we stand in doubt, yet we have admitted none to the church without careful and prayerful examination—none whom we did not hope had become new creatures in Christ Jesus."

SIAM MISSION.

MISSIONARIES.

Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D., Mrs. Bradley. Mr. George Graham, assistant.

During the year Dr. Bradley has purchased of the Baptist Mission all their printing-presses, types, etc. He has also, with the approbation of the Executive Committee, secured, as an assistant in the printing-office, and in general missionary work, the services of Mr. George Graham, an American, with whom he became acquainted in Bangkok.

This mission has this year also been almost wholly self-sistaining, mainly by means of its printing-office. Dr. Bradley is very anxious to be enabled to expend larger sums in publishing parts of the Bible and religious tracts, such as have been approved in this country.

In spiritual things, there has been very little visible result to missionary labor in Siam during the past year, either in our own or other missions. The missionaries generally are strongly confident that God will yet, by his blessing on his own chosen instrumentality, perform a good work in Siam. A little of the good seed of the word sown has already germinated in each of the missions; but the growth is slow, and as yet the blade only is seen, but the ear and the full corn in the ear is confidently hoped for.

. MENDI MISSION.

STATIONS AND OUT-STATIONS.

Good Hope, (Sherbro Island,) Avery, Bonthe, Lawanna, (Boom River.)

MISSIONARIES.

Rev. G. P. Claffin, Mr. D. W. Burton, Mrs. Claffin, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Mair.

Native assistants: Rev. G. N. Jewett, Daniel Düring.

Mr. and Mrs. Claffin, Mr. and Mrs. Burton, and Mrs. Mair returned to the mission after a protracted absence, in this country, early in this year. Rev. H. H. Hinman and wife left the Mission about the same time on account of ill-health, and returned to this country, purposing to remain here.

Mr. and Mrs. Claffin are stationed at Lawanna, an old town of considerable size in the Boompey country. The use of two acres of land for mission purposes is given him, as long as we shall wish to occupy it. He has there a small school in the native language, and has regular religious services (preaching) and Sunday-school each Sabbath. The place is new as a mission station, but the people are attentive to his ministrations, and he hopes to find in them a people prepared of the Lord. Upon Mr. Burton's return to Africa, he was furnished, by special contributions of friends, with a mill, which he has erected, and hopes to find useful to the Mission and the people.

The two native assistants, Rev. Geo. N. Jewett and Daniel During, are rendering good service, the former at Avery, and the latter at Good Hope.

It will be seen that this mission is yet feeble and greatly needs reënforcement. So long as the rebellion lasted, and the rate of exchange was so great that every dollar sent to Africa took from two to three dollars from the treasury, and while men and means were in such demand for missionary purposes in this country, Providence seemed to forbid the immediate enlargement of effort in Africa. The same Providence appears now to demand an earnest attempt to reenforce our mission there. Every consideration connected with the field, its openness, its necessities, the condition of the people, their requests for missionaries, and its relations to the evangelization of Africa, all cry out for help; while, on the other hand, a special fund designated for this particular field, that can not be used elsewhere, large enough to enable us to increase the number of our missionaries there, is being furnished us. Nothing is wanted but that a few of the many whose hearts are divinely prepared to labor for the children of Africa should turn their attention to the parent land, and inquire of the Lord if they can not best serve him there. Some there are who would go, but can not: will they not unite with us in prayer that the Lord of the harvest will send forth laborers into this harvest?

MISCELLANEOUS.

Seven hundred and seventy-three life-members have been added to the Association during the year. The death of thirteen has been reported. The whole number of life-members from the beginning has been five thousand one hundred and thirty-six, (5136.)

The Treasurer's report shows that the total disbursements for the year have been, in cash, $269,839.96; adding the estimated value of clothing and supplies included in the above, $105,441, makes a total disbursement of $375,280.96; of which $318,653.78, or a little more than twice that of the previous year, was for the freedmen. Large as this sum may appear, the wants of the freedmen and the opportunities for imparting to them religious and educational instruction are so great that double this sum could have been wisely used, and, we have no doubt, with the happiest results for the freedmen, the Church of Christ, and the country.

The issues of the American Missionary have been, of the magazine, 8000 copies monthly, and of the paper, 19,000, the aggregate number of copies, 324,000. We believe it is read with increasing interest; and is an efficient help in our work.

CONCLUSION.

This survey of the whole field impels us to engage with fresh vigor in the vast labors upon which we have entered. The work among the freedmen is broad, hopeful, and Christian. We have clothed the naked, we have opened asylums for orphans, we have maintained schools for children and adults, and have preached the Gospel in the day, night, and Sunday-schools, by the lips of the female missionary in the family, and of the minister of the cross in the public assembly. We can not arrest or even curtail this work. We can not turn again into the streets these orphan children that have been rescued from death and moral degradation. We can not deny to these scholars, whose progress has been as astonishing as it is gratifying, the knowledge they so eagerly seek. We can not leave without the intelligent Christian instructor those who are so hungry for the written Word and the preached Gospel. Nay, so far from contracting, we hear many and appealing voices calling us to enlargement. God has crowned our past labors with more than anticipated success. He has abundantly blessed our patrons, and made them richer for their giving. The workers are ready, and the freedmen are stretching out their hands to us for helpers. While other missionary fields are appealing almost in vain for men, we have entreaties from hundreds of educated, refined, and Christian men and women to send them into this: and, on the other hand, the calls from the South are so urgent, so touching, and so promising of immediate, permanent, and glorious results, that we know not how to resist them. We need to open more orphan asylums, to respond to pressing demands for normal schools, and for more ministers of the Gospel. It is the burden and the grief of our position, as officers of this Association, that we have been compelled to close our ears against so many such demands. Trusting in the good hand of our God, and in the generous appreciation of our patrons, we will strive to meet, in some measure at least, the call of the hour. The wants and sufferings of these freedmen, their eagerness for knowledge, and their thirst for the Gospel are motives enough to impel us forward; but when we see that the destiny of the poor whites at the South will follow that of the blacks, and that the fate of our country is involved in the future of both; when we see, too, that Africa will feel the effects of the elevation of the freedmen, who, if enlightened and cultured, will be the bearers of a Christian civilization to their fatherland, we can then perceive that the elevation of this people involves the welfare of two races and extends its influence over two continents.

The work of the Association is thus shown to be not only vast in the effects it aims to promote, but with its several parts well adjusted to each other. The missions in Jamaica touch the negro race, the labors at the South reach millions of them, whose capacities, position, and opportunities for development give them unusual facilities for advancement and usefulness, while our missions in Africa—a present blessing to that dark land—are still more important as starting-points for the future enlargement of Gospel labor by the enlightened and Christian freedmen, who will soon begin to visit those shores as the founders there of empire and Christian civilization. May God grant us the means for the work, and grace to perform it in the spirit of Christ and to the glory of his name!

CONGREGATIONAL UNION OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

At the meeting, October, 1865, at Bristol, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That it be recommended to the Congregational churches of England and Wales to make collections for the lately emancipated freedmen of America, if possible, on the second Sabbath in January next; and that the amount contributed be sent to the Chairman of the Union for the present year, or to the Secretary, Dr. Smith, to be transmitted to the selected organ of the Council of the Congregational Churches in America." That Council has chosen the American Missionary Association as its organization for reaching the freedmen.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

At the meeting of the Synod, May, 1866, after a presentation of the claims of the American Missionary Association by the Rev. Drs. Patton and Holbrook, a committee, appointed subsequently, reported a form of appeal in behalf of the work of the Association among the freedmen, and the Synod directed "that this paper be remitted to the same committee to have it printed and circulated among the congregations of the Synod; also, recommend that the general collection, in behalf of the cause advocated by those brethren, be made on some Lord's day in the end of June next, or the beginning of July, and transmitted without delay to the Synod's Treasurer."

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

At the Session, June 2, 1866, the following action was had:

"Rev. Dr. Patton, minister at Chicago, was heard upon the subject of Freedmen in the United States of America. Rev. Sella Martin, minister of the Third Presbytery of New-York, was also heard on the same subject.

"Thereafter the General Assembly adopted the following deliverance, namely: The General Assembly have heard with the deepest interest the account given by Dr. Patton and the Rev. Sella Martin of the proceedings of the American Missionary Association in behalf of the freedmen in America, and commend it most earnestly to the prayers and liberality of the people of this church."

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND,

In the Assembly of May and June, 1866, passed [the following minute: "That the Assembly, having listened with profound interest to the statements of the Rev. Dr. Patton and the Rev. Sella Martin, concerning the physical, intellectual, and religious wants of four millions of freedmen in the United States of America, and the work of the American Missionary Association in behalf of the freedmen, and being impressed with the peculiarity of the case, as calling for the sympathy and aid of the whole Christian Church, return their thanks to the reverend gentlemen for their addresses, assure them of the Assembly's fraternal and Christian regard, and warmly commend the American Missionary Association, in behalf of the freedmen, to the sympathy and assistance of the members of the Church of Scotland. And further, that Mr. A. T. Niven, Treasurer of the General Assembly's Committee on correspondence with foreign churches, be requested to receive and transmit any contributions for the aforesaid Association."

UNION OF RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL EFFORT.

Referred to on page 12.

(From the American Missionary for July.)

SPECIAL efforts are being made to create an impression that the work among the Freedmen is to be, or ought to be, divided; leaving the whole educational work to be done by the "Freedmen's Aid" Societies, while the American Missionary Association shall devote its whole effort to what is called its missionary operations. It is even affirmed that no missionary, or religious organization, can properly carry on the work of educating the Freedmen of the South; that the two departments of Christian and intellectual culture are so distinct that they can not be carried forward by any one organization.

We have not hitherto referred to these objections, trusting that the real Christian friends of the Freedmen would see their invalidity, and render any public statement unnecessary.

We wish now to state briefly that no such division of labor is contemplated:

- Because the instruction of the people is a legitimate part of our work.
 The charter of the American Missionary Association makes distinct provision for educational efforts.
- 2. Because the division would be highly inexpedient, uneconomical and injurious, and
- 3. We can not abandon our educational work among the Freedmen without forfeiting more than half our power to do them good, and diminishing the real benefits done to them far more than could be compensated for by any fancied good to result from our relinquishment of it.

As a missionary organization—the first body to commence the work of supplying the physical wants of the Freedmen, the first to send them missionaries and teachers, we can not, without unfaithfulness to them and to God, relinquish to other hands our efforts for their education. Most especially we can not relinquish it to those who do not require a Christian standing in their teachers.

The work to be done for the Freedmen is in reality one work. The supply of necessary clothing is but a part of that work; the intellectual education of the people is another part. The grand work is the elevation of the people—fitting them for the duties and the responsibilities of their new position, making them better men and citizens, winning them to Christ and preparing them for eternal life. For accomplishing this end, the American Missionary Association insists on using the highest motives that God has furnished, the best means that he in his wisdom has provided—the Gospel in the hands, and with the example, of living Christians.

All that other organizations can do for the Freedmen we can do. Is clothing for the body less a blessing to the naked because he that invests them with it does it in the name of Christ, and with a word of Christian greeting? Is a teacher less prepared to instruct the people in letters because to the learning of the schools and the wisdom of men he adds divine teaching and the word of God? To ask these questions is to answer them; and surely it will not be pretended that an association, Christian in its aims, though undenominational, is therefore less prepared than others to carry forward a work for the mental improvement and general elevation of the people.

As a matter of economy, it costs no more to sustain the almoner of the benevolence of Christian philanthropists, because with the garment for the body, he, as a missionary, speaks a word in the name of Christ. It adds nothing to the cost of sustaining a teacher because he teaches in that name and proffers a prayer for the Divine blessing, or gives Christian consolation to the weary and the afflicted. A work of such harmony, such unity of parts, where every step is so important to the succeeding one, every acquisition so conducive of continued growth, is one work and must not be divided. It is confidently believed that, under the Divine blessing, it will be more and more appreciated, and more liberally sustained by the friends of Christ and of humanity.

It would be worse than suicide, it would be treachery to Christ, for this Association to attempt a separation of what God has thus joined together, and willingly put away from them the power of giving a garment to the needy that, with God's blessing, often warms and opens the heart to Divine truth; to abandon the great vantage ground which the teacher everywhere obtains among the young—rather among all classes—to speak a word for Christ and eternity.

[To the question in the above article, "Is a teacher less prepared to instruct the people in letters because to the learning of the schools and the wisdom of men he adds divine teaching and the word of God?" a distinguished Unitarian responded, We answer frankly, "Yes; if the two classes of learning are mingled together, or if the teaching of divinity and the word of God crowds out, takes precedence of, limits, defines, or colors the instruction in letters and the wisdom of men."

The September number of The American Missionary, after stating our general dissent from those whose views are expressed in the above response, added:

"The subject has such important bearings on the vast work, so suddenly precipitated upon the American people, of elevating and christianizing four millions of their fellow-beings, that we can not forbear a further expansion of our views in relation to it. Indeed, this great work is not confined to the Freedmen of the South. The destiny of the poor whites will follow that of the blacks, and the fate of our country is involved in the future of both. Africa also will feel the effects of the Christian elevation of the colored race here, for if the people are cultured and enlightened they will be the bearers of a Christian civilization to their fatherland. The elevation then of this people involves the welfare of two races and extends its influence over two continents. We can not, therefore, be too careful in settling foundation principles.

"What, then, is the great lever for the lifting up of races? Christians answer unhesitatingly—the Gospel! The next question is, Shall that Gospel be held aloof from ordinary enlightening influences, or shall its power permeate all those influences? We shall endeavor to show that history, reason, and the peculiar character of these Freedmen require that its influences should pervade all efforts for their elevation.

"1. The history of Protestantism shows that religion and education have been most intimately blended in every instance in which nations have attained greatness—moral and material. The English parish school was the special care of the Church, and the education was religious. John Knox was the founder of Scotch greatness, not only by building it on the rock of evangelical truth, but also by planting the school-house hard by the Kirk, and giving a religious character to the school. The fathers of New-England were so zealous in linking together the school and the church that the two seemed scarcely separable. Now the Freedmen are to be raised from a much lower depth than were either of these peoples. Will history warrant the experiment in our great task with less potent means than were then used?

"2. The two plans of schools with religion, and schools without religion, originate in two radically different views of human nature. Those who believe that men are depraved, have no hope of seeing them, as individuals or in masses, aroused out of the torpor and death of that depravity, by the influence merely of the light of education; they think it essential that the spring-like warmth of the Divine Spirit should also be evermore present. On the other hand, those who believe in the essential rightness of human nature, and that ignorance and surrounding circumstances will account for all the sins of men, can consistently look to schools and industries as adequate to their elevation. The reader need fear no discussion, in this article, of the subject of depravity. We are simply giving a reason why persons of evangelical views must insist upon the presence of religious influence pervading all their efforts for the Freedmen. Nor can they think it sufficient that there be first, and for a time, the light and then afterward the warmth. The two must be blended together.

"3. But the most cogent reason for the union of education and religion at the South is found in the character of the Freedmen themselves. They are naturally religious, and welcome with cordiality those teachers that love our Lord Jesus Christ. Indeed, others can have but comparatively little influence over them, lacking the grand talisman for reaching their hearts. In one of the Southern cities where schools under non-evangelical auspices had been inaugurated, our teachers were importuned by parents and children to take all the pupils in the place; and the reason assigned by the parents was that our teachers loved the Saviour, and our schools were opened by prayer and the reading of God's word. They wished their children to be educated under Gospel influences!

"But while these people are religious, having shown, during their long two hundred years of oppression, as well as under the anxieties, trials, and sufferings of the war, a faith in God so sublime as often to put us all to shame, yet their religion is incomplete and unsymmetrical. Slavery has almost crushed out of them the sense of the guilt of untruthfulness, unchastity, or theft. Their consciences must be educated, recreated, born again, on these points, and that can not be done by a mere intellectual education, nor by the teachings of a dry morality. The motives of the Gospel and the power of the cross alone can reach the sources of moral life in any human beings, but especially in these emotional and instinctively religious people; and that transformation must not be sought for after their intellects are cultured, but in the culturing. It must be inwrought into the fabric of their moral nature during the weaving, and not printed en afterward.

"The operations of the American Missionary Association are based on these evangelical views. It can not, it will not, divorce education from religion. Its schools must be pervaded by religious influences, and its religious efforts with these people must be educational. The garments we give, the asylums we found, the schools we open, the churches we plant, must all be in one Name and for one object—the physical, intellectual, and religious elevation of this long-crushed people to the high plane of a Christian civilization."

FROM A REPORT OF REV. J. W. ALVORD TO GEN. O. O. HOWARD.

FINANCES OF FREEDMEN.

THE Savings and Trust Company for Freedmen, chartered by Congress last winter, and placed under your advisement, has gone into successful operation in nearly all the States South, and promises to do much toward instructing and elevating the financial notions of the freedmen. The trustees and friends of the institution believe that the industry of these four millions furnishes a solid basis for its operations. Pauperism can be brought to a close; the freedmen made self-supporting and prosperous, paying for their educational and Christian institutions, and helping to bear the burdens of government by inducing habits of saving what they earn. That which savings banks have done for the working men of the North, it is presumed they are capable of doing for these laborers. I was charged by you in my late tour with this subject, and can say that everywhere, privately and publicly, the freedmen welcomed the institution. They understand our explanations of its meaning, and the more intelligent see and apprehend fully its benefits. Calls were made upon me at all the large towns for branches of the bank. In fifteen of the more central places, namely, Washington, Richmond, Norfolk, Newbern, Wilmington, Charleston, Beaufort, Savannah, Mobile, New-Orleans, Vicksburg, Huntsville, Nashville, Memphis, and Louisville, such branches were established.

GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

"THEN said he, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it? It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and east into his garden; and it grew, and waxed a great tree; and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it."—LUKE 13: 18-19.

WE find two causes paralyzing effort. Want of confidence in the means at command is hardly less fatal than despair of success by any instrumentality whatever. It seems that we are forced to recognize them both as working adversely to Christian Missions.

Even where faith rejects an absolute despair of the entire ultimate conversion of the world to Christ, the mind is often oppressed by the feeling that, as measured against the magnitude of the work in hand, the whole Christian body, and all its agencies, are as nothing; that, at best, we can hope merely to hold our ground and maintain the present measure of religion on earth, awaiting the evolutions of hitherto unemployed and irresistible providences for any further progress. It is possible, however, to look at this matter with such faith, and to set so high a value on agencies of God already dispensed, that we shall count no magnitude of resistance invincible, invigorating our activities by divine testimony as to divine purposes. Hope gathers confidence from promises like this parable, until, in its high accumulation, difficulty only stimulates to exertion. We work as secure of results; our labor is felt to have its place and proportion as fixedly as God's. And, confident in his declarations, we multiply instruments through which the exceeding greatness of his power may be hurled against sin, and the latter day glory hastened.

The positive gain in Christianizing the race during the past eighteen centuries has not, indeed, been such as to justify any strong language of immediate expectation. While we remark a very certain advance in the preliminaries to our triumph—such as the subjugation of material forces, and the utilizing of scientific achievements to human welfare; progress in higher knowledge, and its wider distribution; and the firmer establishment of healthier social and political and commercial relations between men and nations—we are also compelled to acknowledge, as to the essential matter of real religious gain, that the rejection of Christ is still intensely prompt and general. The "minding of earthly things" seems not less earnest or universal now than when Paul wrote, nor has it diminished in its necessary antagonism to spiritual life. If Good has been busy creating power and methods and results, Evil has been at work subsidizing more efficient instruments, and is still able to keep the aggressive almost everywhere along the line.

To reach a just estimate of this work, we must also remember that it is the whole world, (with quite an inconsiderable exception,) which stands forth in alienation from God. It is not some one island of the sea, on which the moral forces of an otherwise entire Christian world might instantly be concentrated; it is not one mighty nation on some continent; nor the combined nations on some one isolated continent taken together; nor even the masses densely crowding the continents and islands which go to make up one entire hemisphere of our globe, on whom the remaining hemisphere, in solid union, might pour floods of light and glory, fresh from God; but the entire population of both hemispheres, with all their vast continents and thick-set islands, which is to be reached and saved by this handful of Christian men and women.

Still further, so far from finding these masses instantly accessible, you discover them to be intrenched behind a pride and prejudice grown heavy and immovable by ages of continuance; and intense, intolerant, exclusive, contemptuous by "illuminations of philosophy" or the darkness of hereditary mental torpidity. You discover them to be enslaved by the tyrannies of social wrongs, or seductive pleasures, or profitable gains to an enacted unrighteousness. A demoralized conscience has been universally added to a blinded mind; a corrupt imagination everywhere invigorates a rebellious will.

It increases the oppressive weight of these facts that we are contemplating the condition of the world at this distance of more than eighteen centuries since the first planting of the Redeemer's kingdom. Were we standing with those who first listened to this parable on the threshold of Christian history—not a church yet securely planted, not one widely diffused effort of a missionary character yet fairly inaugurated—we might more easily defend the height of our hopes./ But now, after these centuries of labor and sacrifice and martyr suffering, to what one nation can we point, saying, "This is in reality a Christian nation, its rulers and its citizens are alike all regenerated men?" to what one lesser community, whose life in all its ongoings flows only in channels of divine love and righteousness? what one family? what one heart?

But through all this array of discouragement we are to force our way in the strength of faith, by the sword of the Spirit. Sluggishness of early progress-being itself a fulfillment of his word-shall strengthen belief in the rest of that word. Therefore we are the more confident that the whole earth shall be brought unto God by his people; his Spirit working through them according to that glorious power whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself. Turn. ing to this parable, and others grouped around it, are we not to see in their prophetic disclosure of facts and principles underlying the growth what also guarantees the triumph of Christian missions and the Christian kingdom? In that of "the sower of the good seed" we are distinctly told that three parts of our works shall go for little or nothing toward a harvest; and in that of "the tares growing among the wheat," that such corruptions shall obtain, even in the small remainder, as most seriously to curtail the expected results. And now, as if to save us from exceeding discouragement, the blessed teacher, singling out "the mustard-seed," makes it the text of truths and disclosures on which we may profitably engage our thoughts on an occasion like this, and to which I would invite your attention.

The first fact, then, presented to us concerning "the kingdom," is the designed seeming insignificance of its germ—"a grain of mustard seed, the least among all seeds."

This kingdom not only was, but was intended to be, quite insignificant to human view at its initial point; "which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."

Suppose it proclaimed to listening worlds at the appointed hour, that amidst these earthly kingdoms of simulated dignity and perishing glories—organizations of craft and cruelty, of pride and power—the majesty of heaven was now to inaugurate a kingdom of another spirit and different laws; a kingdom of righteousness and peace and joy; an empire to eclipse all others by its superior and unfading glories; to overwhelm them all by its power; to gather its subjects from all nations, and bind them in an allegiance of heart stronger than death; a kingdom that, taking empires on its royal way, should go forward across continents and oceans, spreading its triumphs everywhere, till at length it fills the earth. Suppose that proclamation made to listening worlds, would not the derived expectation have been that, calling up his moral forces and assembling together his omnipotent instrumentalities, the mighty God would so have precipitated them upon the field of achievement as to impart to that inauguration such strength of demonstration, such vastness of instant movement as to command immediate and universal homage? But this was not his way. That kingdom was found compressed into the single person of Jesus Christ; and even he so appeared as to be "despised and rejected of men." He was that germ. In him lay the whole future with all its growth and ultimate greatness. The wisdom of man would certainly have designed a more startling effect at the beginning. But the wisdom of man is foolishness with God. The startling effects He works are at the end, not the opening of processes.

We find a daily renewing of vigor from this first fact enunciated. Christian enterprises-movements based on Christian law and loveare generally insignificant at the initial point. The present vast Sabbath-school system, with no thought of such expansion, humbly began in providing for the ragged children of a single neighborhood; modern American Missions, in the unobserved prayers of a few students behind a haystack. And such seems to be God's plan for whatever is to grow with the power of an endless life. That godly saint, whose hoary head is a crown of righteousness, before whose presence the scoffing tongue is dumb, in whom all things now seem brought into captivity unto Christ, what has been his story? Was not this redundant life at first found in him as "a little leaven hid in measures of meal"? "as a grain of mustard seed, the least of all seeds"? What has been the record of almost any among Christian nations? You behold a few disciples, ages since, approaching the shores of a pagan people. To human sight the means is totally inadequate to the end they have in view. Almost instantly they are swallowed up and disappear in that surrounding darkness. How hopeless their whole scheme and hope! But with all the splendors of their civilization, did not most of modern Christian nations date from such beginnings? Or, if we come home to ourselves, was not the origin of this Association, and has not all its history been an illustration, and in keeping with this first fact of the parable? Its origin was seemingly insignificant. Its life began among God's hidden ones. It was despised and rejected of men. It began its work in poverty and obscurity. It chose its field amongst a despised race. Its triumphs have been among the weak. But in all this it was standing in harmony with the kingdom itself, all whose best agencies consent to such a beginning. "For the kingdom is like a grain of mustard seed," "the least of all seeds."

Let us come now to a second fact or principle suggested by the parable—that, in this kingdom, life and growth are to result from death and loss. Small as the germ may be, it is to die; for except it die, it abideth alone. It must purchase enlargement by yielding up its separate individual existence and passing its life out of itself into another. Only when that life so passes out of the original germ, enfolding and restricting it to itself, can it be reproduced multiplied in a thousand recipients.

At the moment of Christ's death his kingdom was supposed to be annihilated. He, its founder, its vital centre, was seemingly perished. His disciples buried their hopes in his grave. Yet we know that, as a germ, in dying he set free his individual life to be a diffusive spirit, and then liberated more renewing efficacy than he had been able to emit while living, whose flowing tides indeed are still spreading through the race with ever-increasing volume. Here then is a permanent law of this kingdom. Each higher stage in the world's moral or physical state shall be secured only through the pains and seemingly disastrous losses, or even immolation of its first friends. Their life must go for its life-must, in truth, pass out of themselves to enter and forever expand in that. Their blood and sacrifices do not so much soak to its roots as, already planted, pass up from them the seed into its spreading greatness. Thus their individual and otherwise very narrow life, by entering into and animating an else mere lifeless truth or principle, gets a vehicle on whose now living wheels it goes out to the ends of the earth and of time. Thus only does separate individual life gain immortal enlargement or ever become a universal presence. Then, after short disappearance, it reappears with an unwasting increase upon it-with power of unwasting increase, but with necessity of slow increase for a time also. Many sacrifices, many lives must go to fill up the measure of requisite suffering before the new force can go out swiftly. Growth, in earlier periods, is painfully slow; so many stages must each complete their work before a successor may begin. And to this, moreover, is ever added positive repression; pruning, loss, death, preceding the desired expansion. But we remember the vine is forbidden quick growth above, that it may increase below. Denied branches, it accumulates roots. Shall we not so read this parable? During the season of repressive experience is not the stock—the root of the kingdom-accumulating life for rapid expansions? This lengthened immaturity, is it not, instead of really impairing its vitality, to nourish it to degrees of faith and power unimagined yet, and to a rapidity and richness of results never witnessed? And when, in prosecuting its work among our freedmen, or on heathen shores, the church of God loses some of its choicest blood; when its offerings and sacrifices appear wasted, as seed on barren soil; or when at home, in crowded cities, or pleasant villages, on these broad prairies, or on Southern plantations, our strength is spent for naught, and the years die without yielding, our prayers and our very lives seem to perish, let us take heart from this great law in the kingdom, that life must evermore be given for life—a lower for a higher; that if it thus pass out of us, it is to gain liberty for acting more diffusively on men; and that each costly gift of this sort, from church or man, has a wondrous certainty of reduplicating under His care whose own life so passed from him that it might spread to be the life of the world.

It seems that our Lord would suggest, by this parable, the quietness of increase and progress characterizing his kingdom.

"It grew," but so silently that, to one fixing his eye there, it scarcely seemed to do this at all; nor, on returning to-morrow and next day, should he be able to prove its increase. Yet between the first tender leaf and its autumnal height among the trees, how great the difference! At times growing the less above because more thoroughly rooting itself below; but, whether lifting its top above, or sinking its roots below, the vitality of the plant was working steadily on to its final greatness. So, if one fix his eye on this kingdom of God, taking the whole world into view, he is tempted to ask, "What growth since yesterday - since a year ago - since my childhood? what increase and accumulation of moral power? what augmentation of spiritual force on earth? what enlarged scope and triumph of justice? what greater supremacy and wider sway of real love and truth through the hearts and habits, the business and customs of men? what gain in the depth and fullness of Christianity in the Church? what nearer approximation of the world as a whole to the state of God?" But, taking longer ranges, for purposes of comparison, shall we not see that this nineteenth century presents a gratifying contrast with the ages before Christ came? Shall we not confess Christian life to be nobler in conception, purer in spirit, and more influential on affairs? Have not Christian truth, and aim entered more positively into legislation, social habits, the economies of public and private life? Are they not felt more pervasively in literature now than when the middle ages shut down and Satanic power was enthroned amidst the groans of an oppressed world?

The intrinsic growth of this kingdom, we are told, is the quiet development of the plant—first the blade, then the ear, and after that the full corn in the ear; is the quiet unfolding of the flower, petal after petal, from bud to full-orbed blossom. Nor are we to be disturbed because this silence and quietness characterize its progress; as though it indicated any thing of failing life and spirit force. Quietly but irrepressibly, because it is God's life which lies inclosed within, it makes advances from age to age. It grows by a divine necessity, because He who filleth all things is steadily expanding it to contain his greatness.

By selecting this emblem the Lord ascertains for us the ultimate greatness and power belonging to his kingdom. This "least of all seeds" is to become—because of the relative vigor of the life inclosed—"the greatest of herbs;" the amount of original vitality hidden in it, rather than outward conditions, determining the measure of its expected expansion.

So do all kingdoms, all human societies, measure for us the real vitality of the forces in which they originated. None live long beyond them; when they are exhausted, growth ceases and life ends. Great conquerors have founded personal empires, and these have perished almost as soon as they. If, indeed, our fathers established here a nation, not on men or transient policy, but imperishable principles, our state need never perish. Let them live on in the nation still organific and vital, and it shall bear forward an enduring life into coming ages.

We apply this test to the kingdom of God. Its very name answers the question-"the kingdom of God." God himself not merely its founder by external omnipotent will, but its assimilating and vital centre-its germ, whose life, passing evermore from himself, enters it, swelling and expanding it to limits commensurate with its own dimensions-what limits shall be set to such vitality? When shall it have reached a maximum exhaustive of its expansive powers? God himself its life, it must become the greatest of kingdoms. To us Christ is God, and we have seen how, in very truth, he was its germ, and that his life was given from himself to live expansively here. In that life was eternal vigor, an absolutely infinite power to assimilate all things unto himself. Shall it not then of necessity come true-despite the seeming insignificance of its initial point, the slowness of its growth, and its fixed law that death and sacrifice shall be the price of all gain and life-that of the increase of the greatness of his kingdom there shall be no end?

We may not pass from the parable without noticing its closing thought—I mean the foreshadoved beneficence of this kingdom in its greatness. "And the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it." Mankind have nothing to fear from this rising power. Its triumphs will bring nothing of oppression, nothing of pain. Other kingdoms must be curbed. Balancing of power alone restrains their violence. Universal empires of human construction become crushing despotisms when passion contracts alliance with power to work wretchedness and despair. The process of establishing this better kingdom, it must be acknowledged, involves severity and distress. Nations are dashed in pieces. Thrones, social institutions whose roots have wrapped themselves around whole classes of society—many of them profitable in appearance, but standing in the way of this kingdom, occupying its room and contesting its progress—plants which our heavenly Father did not plant—shall be rooted up. And this in God's far-seeing and merciful providence is going forward with swifter progress. Ye shall hear of wars. The face of the earth must be drenched in bloody baptisms; pestilence, earthquake, famines shall walk through a miserable world during their time; the crushing of nations and races goes on through the preparatory ages till sin has worked out its power against God. But the end shall be peace. Over and beyond the day of darkness and struggle and gloom, he—this God for whom we have waited—shall reign King over the whole earth, and his rest shall be glorious. In him shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. The work of righteousnes shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever.

"It waxed a great tree, and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it." The weary race of sinning man finds its resting-place at last under this benign government and within this blessed kingdom of God. How glorious that closing day in the world's history, long protracted, when nations shall be gathered together in one people, learning war no more; when the spirit of wisdom, of love, and a sound mind shall take the place of the universal insanity of sinful passion and passionate sin; when the sighing of the prisoner and the groans of the oppressed shall have come to an end; when in high places and in low the sweet ministries of love shall have supplanted the crimes of power, and the voice of universal praise shall everywhere be heard from earth's delicious valleys and along her mountain chains ascending to God.

Upon that day the eye of prophecy has loved to fix its gaze. The sweetest notes of its tuneful harp are ever drawn forth at mention of it. To hasten its coming, and at length to usher it in, has been the prayer and hope and labor of God's dear children. With this in view, and having its certainty before him, our Lord led forth the martyr host. For this a great multitude, of whom the world was not worthy, have offered themselves, not counting their lives dear unto them. We may not falter. We can not doubt when the sky already brightens with its coming. If now we seek to apply these thoughts of the parable, it seems, Christian brethren, that the spirit of patient working and of patient waiting should be their first suggestion.

The progress of righteousness, truth, and love is slow; the swing of its pendulum but once in a century. We die waiting a vibration; the good cause for which we are offering ourselves is scarcely a step onward. God can wait; we can not. His life is eternity; ours a span of time. He waits to fortify advances and secure results. But his method, if slower, is surely progressive. A point once gained for right and truth is never lost; once wrought into the faith and heart of man by deep and fiery experience, it is never worked out by any casualty. He forces nothing upon man. He overlays nothing of moral conviction upon them. He changes them interiorly. The result is not base metal plated but transmuted. The divine alchemy is inscrutable but durable. Plated virtue wears thin; the transmuted is bright to the last. All convictions and principles in God's kingdom are slow-wrought experiences. That which is not experience does never grapple the life and subdue it-does never enter the soul, as chyle the blood, to nourish and increase it. Moral recovery, for the man or the race, is spiritual transmutation through experiences which work their way slowly and painfully down to the centre. God is a patient worker. He uses his mighty powers deliberately, allowing each mighty act full time to accomplish its effects. A flood sweeps the earth clean but once in the world's lifetime. Other cities may have been more guilty than Sodom, but the sight of cities flaming amidst such a storm from heaven is not repeated. Sufferings like the agonies of Jerusalem in her dissolution shall never be seen to the end of the world. To stay the rushings of sin, God throws across the stream the occasional barrier of such a terrific judgment; and human life thunders and chafes against it till, bursting through, it rushes on to find, far down, another but different barrier. The heavens oftener smile than frown. There are more stars of peaceful love than meteors of baleful light ever sweeping round us. With mingled goodness and severity he is bringing man slowly to repentance, and most perseveringly. He is patient, laborious, earnest, wise. He will never withdraw his hand. He will keep the race in the smelting and refining fires till the work is done. This parable, and all the thoughts of it, are suggestive of it. We are to learn of him this patient working and patient waiting. The spirit of quiet is to brood our hearts as his. Righteousness, truth, goodness go down to-day beneath the resistance of a nation or mankind. But the nation-mankind shall then go for a time into some smelting-pot, where they shall be filled with the fruit of their own ways, nor find escape till, as transmuted metal, they come forth refined gold and fit for the Master's use.

It seems also, Christian brethren, that by such thoughts as this parable suggests our Lord would lead us back from our strong and too exclusive reliance on visible agencies and natural forces to recognize and rely upon the constant supernatural element which underlies and interpenetrates all Christian missions and work. With what ease, especially in this age, does all living sense of this supernatural presence drop out of our hearts! Entangled in the meshes of "the natural," we are fettered where faith in that other element is requisite to liberty. Doubtless material creation might have been made to demonstrate God and his inter-acting presence at every turn. But it does not compel us to behold him. It leaves him unobtrusively disclosed. Its very uniformity becomes a bar to such recognition. How gently and with what process of fixed law did the late summer, for example, pass through all its wonderful steps till it laid at our feet its matured abundance! Second causes seemed clothed with independent energy. The sun warmed the earth, the clouds watered it, the electric fire engendered it, and the ready seeds were already in its bosom. No one is driven to look beyond these for this bountiful production. God did not obtrude his hand. We did not see his fingers stretching out the heavens as a curtain over the sleeping earth by night, or drawing them back in the morning. We/can push causation back link after link, and never discern or believe that it anywhere buries itself in his inclosing hand.

Is not the same true of his providence? Doubtless he might have so disposed all history as to force a sense of his presence there upon us. But one can read its entire volume and nowhere confess God. He dwells within events rather than on their surface. He plants the seeds of lengthened histories and wonderful revolutions in very ordinary furrows. The tread of omnipotence along the course of events is lighter than a child's on the green sward. And so the dynamics of material powers, the developing of social laws, the irresistible tendency of institutions, the expansive or contractile impulses of races-these things may be taken as the supreme forces at work in history, and as sufficient to account for its results. But all our Christian projects and work are marked by weakness if we do it. The strength of good men-the only hope for missions and regenerations-is the immediate contact of God. If we come to be entangled in nature's laws till he is far off, we lose our faith in some of his best promises. We sink discouraged because "there are no causes in Nature" to bring on their accomplishment. But the promises of our religion involve and carry on them the supposition of a very present God-of a grand and powerful system of supernaturalism moving on side by side with the system of the merely natural, penetrating it at all points and overpowering it with its greater weight, momentum, and divine personality wherever desirable. It would seem that our Lord by this parable restores and invigorates our faith in the presence of God in grace as in nature-in the kingdom of redemption as in that of the vegetable world. He could rend the meshes of the merely physical and pantheistic, and renew in us the power to apprehend the immediateness, certainty, and constant inflowing of divine activity. For this is our strength in Christian work, and prophetic, in sure verity, of triumph to this kingdom in which we toil.

The work especially committed to this Association is, beyond doubt, a work calling at once for hopeful patience and profound conviction of this immediate, powerful presence of God. Expended upon a race defrauded of improvement and degraded by slavery, and carried forward against the skepticism or prejudice of heavy majorities, its projectors and supporters have had no other refuge. Amidst weakness and contempt, with few friends, with slender funds, with the doors of labor for the colored man-for whom it was organized and determined to labor-nearly closed against it, on this continent. by obstructing masses seemingly immovable by its power, or by all human power, this Association was evidently forced back upon faith in an interposing God and upon patience in its work. Behold, now, the reward of faith and patience; the open and effectual door set before you by his great and terrible acts. "By terrible things in righteousness hast thou answered us, O God of our salvation, who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth," Slavery has been dashed in pieces, its walls of exclusion broken to the ground, and millions of liberated men are seen within, imploring from us the true Gospel and kingdom of God. We recognize in them the lineaments of a common humanity. They have our suffering, our grief, and our sin. They have the same capacities of earthly happiness, and the same immortal aspirations. They have stood with us under condemnation; they stand with us under the covenant of redemption; they are pressing on to the same judgment and eternity. We recognize them as our brethren by every tie, and brethren before whom every prospect is unutterably gloomy, unless their appeals be heard and answered by the Christian world. Let it not be in vain that we hear them pleading by all the thousand tongues of their too manifest wrongs; not more for that immediate relief which shall give them fair vantage, than for that strengthening Christian education which shall place their future securely within their hopes. Degraded by slavery, let them receive what they require-a civilization built up from religion-religion containing a personal God, an almighty Redeemer, a regenerating Spirit, a law and a gospel, a discriminating morality and righteousness of life, enforced and sustained by all the motives and powers to be brought from eternal retribution and eternal reward. We are at liberty now to go to them with such a Christtian education. We can go to them with such an enduring civilization. The necessity is immediate. The door is now open. An excited and impressible people, with the enthusiasm and eagerness of new liberty, are waiting on us. The future is all uncertain. What clouds may gather and break over them-what obstructions may arise to us, we do not know. The present moment is ours, and full of inspiration. By what great arguments are we urged of God! Behold this enlargement of our treasury, this rallying of friends, this urgency of the Church of Christ that we should go forward! Consider these recent revolutions, wrought of Providence, to prepare our way. If we look into a mill-race when the gates are lifted, we shall see how swiftly our nation had been moving on in subjugation to the slaveholding interest. That interest demanded to elect the Presidents. It ruled the Senate. It dictated legislation. It shaped treaties to its will. It controlled and used treasury, army, and navy, It absorbed the territories. The courts of justice had succumbed. Their decisions were the submissive registration of its decrees. It dared to lay sacrilegious hands upon the Constitution itself. It did not shrink from putting God's Word and God's Church and the holy ministry to torture in its behalf. And finally, in its frenzied but seemingly justified audacity, it proclaimed itself absolute and permanent dictator-asserting its commission from God to use the nation in perpetuating that slavery which destroyed marriage and consecrated lust; and which, with the sobriety of judicial madness, pronounced upon its wretched but intelligent and immortal victim that he was no longer a human and immortal being on probation for eternity, loved of God, and redeemed by the blood of his Son, but a mere thing, to be immured in mental darkness, to be degraded to brutal, lustful life, and to be bound under conditions of perpetual helplessness through all his generations, for the selfish ends of his buyer, and absolutely with no rights which his dominant race was bound to respect.

And up to this point the nation had bowed its neck to the voke. The most flagrant crimes against mankind, perpetrated in the name and for the benefit of this monstrous system at home and abroad by the Government, or by individuals with its guilty connivance, raised but a murmur of disapprobation instead of the indignant and irrepressible denunciations of a nation's outraged morality. The pressthat engine of power-was threatened, cajoled, suborned, stifled. The pulpit—that ministry of heaven's mercy—was widely compelled to silence. Literature itself was being expurgated and no longer rang with the ancient cries of liberty. It looked as if our every means of resistance to this ruthless enemy of the human race was to be turned against us. It seemed as if its miserable victims were to be put hopelessly beyond reach of human mercy; as if the giant strength of the African were condemned to grind forever, with an extinguishing intelligence, in that dungeon impenetrable to Christian service. The nation was moving in that direction with so much unity and intensity of will, it seemed as if nothing could save it from such moral destruction. "At this moment," it has been graphically said, "the current paused upon the brink—no momentum already on it, no pressure from behind could prevent its backward flow." Such a fact demands supernatural intervention. It witnesses to a personal God. It links human prayer and work with interposing divine strength; "for naturally the declivities of moral and public decline are never remounted."

It adds strength to our inference, that our people were not unconscious altogether of the perils in determining and proceeding to wrest this power from that intolerant and terrible interest. They could not but apprehend some of the grave consequences. The instinct of the people is long sighted. Surely then God was in this great revolution so recently sweeping over and through the nation. It was the breath of the Almighty which gave inspiration. Surely that was his power which touched the impregnable barriers of slavery against our work, and they crumbled to dust. And now, is this not his voice heard calling on the American churches to gird themselves with this strength of faith and patience, and go forth in union with his mighty providences to relieve and educate and civilize and christianize the millions whom he has thrown upon their hands? What things of grace and glory are possible to the American nation, and, through it, to the kingdom of God, if the American churches rise to the height of this great argument and prove equal to this great hour! Unable to avoid seeing what elements God has laid up in store for us on this magnificent continent, or on what a vast pattern he is molding our national form and features, we are obliged to anticipate, we are compelled to hope for what other nations have not dared to dream. Cramped between no insular limits or powerful neighbors, we have received the imperial domain of an uninhabited, unappropriated continent, whose virgin soil crumbles into harvests before the plow, and its mountain ranges into gold at touch of the miner's pick. Lying midway of the oceans, the very centre of the human family, it divides and yet unites the world. The most vigorous races, the best blood of the earth are the components of our forming population. A government unequaled for freedom, justice, and security; a generous education spread abroad as the light of heaven; and religion unfettered and unweakened by the state, working powerfully on in all departments of life-these are the massive foundations of our national structure. May it not then be expected to grow and spread through ages to come? We are also happily strong in the deepest sympathies of mankind. The prayers of the world ascend daily for this land; the dearest hopes of the oppressed are bound up with our success. All nations have their representative sons and daughters here, whose happiness depends on ours. Their suffering millions have come to regard America as their only asylum, and the home of their children's children. If there has been a growing restraint upon this good-will of the world, or its utterance, in our system of slaveholding-that singular anomaly, that strange contradiction in the nation-let us this day thank God that the reproach is taken away. The people have spoken through our martyred President, what they were long hindered from saying, that a system so oppressive and cruel was revolting to humanity and impossible to be endured. What then remains? What, but that the lustre of this virtue be now suffered to shine forth so strong and bright as to whiten the black man in our eyes, up to the standard of equal and impartial rights in church and state? Our national happiness was deepened, our Christian life and power intensified, our influence for evangelizing the world immeasurably enlarged when we were striking off the fetters of his slavery. That humanity which beats high in our heart was met in its cravings, and the nation was glad. The nations were glad. Can we now curb our sympathies and refuse to make our work perfect? Or shall the long-oppressed be set free from our cruel prejudice and repressive treatment as he has been from the slavery that held him? Shall these worse invisible shackles be broken with the others? In our great struggle we regained the good-will and confidence of mankind just in proportion as we reëngaged ourselves to the principles and the practice of impartial and universal liberty. Let us not forfeit this rising confidence. Let us forever regain that strength which comes from standing within the hearts of nations. Are the American churches competent to the work of saving the American nation at this juncture for the kingdom of God? Are they now able to step in with these wonderful and revolutionary providences, and so interpret them as to bind the nation to a legitimate fulfillment of their high import? The grandeur of this hour and of this work was never exceeded. The consequences depending on ability and fidelity can not be measured. Shall we, can we so solve this religious and social and political question of the Freedmen, that God will stand with us, and that this mighty nation, at harmony and righteous within itself, will stand for him and go forth for him among the nations-its strength and its wealth, its intelligence and its commerce, its government and its people consecrated to his kingdom? The years will not wait. The American churches are summoned to answer this solemn question. Christians in other lands are deeply interested for us; Great Britain pours out its generous gifts; Protestant Germany rises up; Switzerland moves forward from her ancient seats and icy barriers; even France kindles with fresh enthusiasm, to share our burdens, our duty, and our glory in reaching that answer.

In the strength of God let us find it. Let us find it, in part at least, through so relieving, educating, civilizing, and christianizing these millions of Freedmen, that they shall stand with us in the unity of the nation, and in that aggressive work of THE KINGDOM to which we would consecrate the national might and life.

Behold that nation of the future, thus saved! Speaking one language-our noble English tongue; united and animated by a common glorious history; glowing with the grandest impulses of true liberty; trained by the discipline, and to the obedience of righteous laws; educated, enlightened, purified, exalted by the omnipresent working of Christian knowledge, Christian institutions, Christian love and worship; embracing in its equal sympathies the race of man, numbering from three to four hundred millions of such freemen, dwelling in families, and filling the land from ocean to ocean! behold this nation of the future, thus unexampled in all the high endowments of power and peace and national glory! Let it, so vast and eminent, be made a mountain of holiness, a dwelling place of righteousness, and what mind of man or angels can compute the depth or the breadth of those moral tides, those streams of salvation which shall flow down its broad-breasted bosom, and roll in tides of fertilizing mercy over all this blighted earth?

Christian brethren, our work lies among the despised, the ignorant, and the weak. In this land, and among tribes beyond the seas, our faithful missionaries and teachers are laying themselves upon the altar. Let us bear them up by richer sacrifices, and prayers of greater faith. Let the American churches nourish American and Foreign Missions from their abundant life. "For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth: so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations."

THE Twenty-First Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held in the First Congregational Church, Homer, N. Y., commencing Wednesday, October 16th, 1867, at 3 p.m.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Rev. E. N. Kirk, D.D., of Boston, who opened the exercises by reading the 72d Psalm, following with prayer.

Professor S. W. Clark, of Parma, N. Y., was appointed Recording Secretary pro tem., and Rev. L. Smith Hobart, of Syracuse, Assistant. The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read by Rev. J. R. Shipherd.

The Treasurer being absent, his Report was read by Rev. George Whipple, and referred to a Committee consisting of Hon. A. C. Barstow, J. M. Schermerhorn, Esq., and Julius Ives, Esq.

An abstract of the Annual Report of the Executive Committee was read by Rev. M. E. Strieby, and referred to the following Committee: Rev. J. S. Pattengill, Rev. H. Lyman, Rev. M. H. Wilder, and P. Burns, Esq.

On motion, the President appointed the following persons a Business Committee: Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D.D., Rev. L. Smith Hobart, Rev. T. F. White, Rev. S. R. Dimmock, Rev. M. E. Strieby.

Rev. Dr. Holbrook announced the arrangements and order of exercises for the Meeting.

An hour was then spent in Prayer and Conference. Remarks were made by Messrs. Jocelyn, Strieby, Clark, Smith, Webb, Barstow and Lyman.

A recess was then taken till 7 P.M.

The Association convened at 7 o'clock, evening, for public worship.

The introductory exercises were conducted by Rev. Lewis Grout, of Vermont. The Annual Sermon was preached by Rev. E. B. Webb, D.D., of Boston, from Matt. 28:18,19.

The Service was closed with Prayer and the Benediction.

Thursday morning, the Association met at 8 o'clock, and spent an hour in devotional exercises, under the direction of Rev. H. Lyman.

In the temporary absence of the President, Hon. A. C. Barstow was called to the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. Charles Jones.

The Business Committee reported the following resolutions, which were accepted:

1. Resolved, That this Association has great occasion for gratitude to God, at this, its twenty-first anniversary meeting, for the mercies of the many past years; and especially for the peculiar favors of the year just closed—in which but one of its many officers, missionaries and teachers has been removed by death,*—in which, amid the pecuniary embarrassments of the country, its receipts have exceeded those of any former year,—and throughout which its labors have been so prosperous.

2. Resolved, That the education of the Freedmen ought to be thoroughly religious; that the colored ministers among them are not qualified by the needed culture to meet their wants; that the North cannot furnish an adequate supply of educated ministers, that therefore Christian teachers must be the main dependence, especially during the present transition state of this people, and that hence, while this Association should increase its efforts to send among them ministers of the Gospel, female missionaries and Bible-readers, it should adhere, in its educational work, with strict fidelity to its rule to send none but evangelical teachers.

3. Resolved, That the unsectarian basis of the Association should commend it to the confidence of the churches, as being impartial in its proffers of cooperation to all evangelical bodies, and faithful to the particular arrangements madwith each, enabling it to carry physical relief and schools in the name of those churches which desire only such service as its hands, while yet it can, with an entire consistency, send clothing, schools, and also missionaries for other bodies selecting it for this larger work, and furnishing it with the means for its accomplishment.

4. Resolved, That the Freedmen have special claims upon the sympathy and assistance of the churches and people of this country, on account of their past oppressions; their present wants, dangers and eagerness for improvement; their services to the nation in suppressing the rebellion; their responsible position as citizens, wielding the elective franchise, and the influence they will have on the future welfare of the nation.

5. Resolved. That the widening field for the efforts of the Association at the South, the life grasp of the Freedmen upon knowledge, (strengthened by their possession of the ballot), the calls and encouragements for active temperance efforts, the faver of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of many souls to Christ, in connection with the labor of our missionaries and teachers, together with the future bearing of these efforts on the conversion of Africa, should quicken the faith, stimulate the zeal, and enlarge the benefactions of all in support of the vest work to which in the providence of Ged, we are called the future bearing of these efforts on the conversion of Africa, should quicken the faith, stimulate the zeal, and enlarge the benefactions of all in support of the vast work to which, in the providence of God, we are called.

6. Resolved, That, believing the feeling of prejudice, extensively existing in this country against the people of color, to be both wicked in itself and a great barrier in the way of their elevation, we renew the expression of the principle that has underlain the operations of this Association from the beginning, that no person who yields to that prejudice, or suffers himself to be influenced thereby, ought to be appointed or sustained among its officers, teachers or agents.

- The death of another, occurring during the year, was reported at the meeting.

The first and second of these resolutions, after full discussion by Messrs. Whipple, Clark, Shipherd, Smith, White, Dr. Tomkins of London, and Mr. Barstow, were adopted.

The consideration of the remaining resolutions was suspended, and the Association listened to an Address from the President, Rev. Dr. Kirk, on the subject of "EDUCATED LABOR."

The third of the reported resolutions was then considered and adopted.

A Committee on Nomination of Officers was appointed, consisting of Messrs. S. S. Jogelyn, C. Jones, and I. H. Cobb.

A recess was then taken till 2 P.M.

The Association convened at 2 o'clock, and united in the observance of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the ordinance being administered by Rev. T. F. White, of Ithaca, and Rev. A. K. Strong, of Syracuse.

Rev. H. Lyman, from the Committee on the Report of the Executive Committee, presented the following:

"The Committee to whom was referred the report of the Executive Committee, have had the same in their hands, and submit the following:

"A responsibility of great magnitude has devolved upon the Committee, in consequence of the enlarged demand indicated by the exigency of their work, and the consequent enlargement of their financial necessities.

and the consequent enlargement of their financial necessities.

"That they have been enabled, during a period of stringency in the money market, to realize the expectations of their constituents, begotten in an hour of some enthusiasm, calls for the devout recognition of a favoring Providence, and affords a basis of commendation of the zeal and wisdom of the Committee.

"It is recommended that the Report be approved by the Association, and published with the proceedings of this meeting."

The fourth and fifth resolutions of the series reported by the Committee were discussed at length by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, Major-General O. O. Howard, Rev. E. M. Cravath, and others, and adopted.

The sixth resolution was then read and adopted.

Professor Clark presented the following resolution, which was seconded and adopted:

Resolved, That devout thanks are due to God for his controlling providence in placing in military power some of his own servants, whose humane and Christian efforts have so largely contributed to the furtherance of the objects of this Association, and that we recognize in Major-General O. O. Howard, the head of the Freedmen's Bureau, and several others, efficient workers with us in the intellectual, social, moral and religious elevation of the colored race in the South.

The meeting then adjourned to 7 o'clock, P.M.

EVENING SESSION.—In the absence of the President, Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D.D., was called to the Chair.

"The Committee also recommend that, in view of the present and possibly continued absence abroad, of several members of the Executive Committee, and the undesirableness of making changes without conferring with them, power be conferred on the Executive Committee itself, to make such changes and additions as, after consultation, may seem to them necessary.

"And also, that the Executive Committee be authorized to add to the list of Vice-Presidents, to the extent of five additional names, if it shall seem best for the interests of the Association."

The Report of the Committee was adopted.

An Address was then delivered by Major-General Howard, Commissioner of the Bureau for Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, in which were given many facts of great interest, respecting the field in the South.

Rev. Dr. Holbrook, who presided at the services of the evening, suggested that the thanks of the Association be expressed to General Howard, for his interesting address, by a contribution to the Church at Washington, in which the General feels so deep an interest. This was cheerfully responded to.

The following resolutions were then passed, viz:

Resolved, That the hearty thanks of the Association are tendered to the trustees of the church in Homer for the use of their edifice; to the committee of arrangements, for its active and efficient exertions for our accommodation; to the citizens of this beautiful village, for their hospitable and cordial welcome, and to the Syracuse and Binghamton and the Oswego and Syracuse Railroad companies for reduced fare.

OF THE

EXEÇUTIVE COMMITTEE

THE American Missionary Association has attained its majority. We celebrate to-day its twenty-first anniversary; and this, its natal gathering, is cheered by unusual

TOKENS OF DIVINE FAVOR.

First among these is the remarkable fact that not a single officer of the Association, and but two of its 560 missionaries and teachers, has been removed by death during the year! We chronicle this mercy with special thanks to God. To this we add, as another favor, that, notwithstanding the last nine months have been marked by an unusual depression in the financial condition of the country, yet the receipts of the Association, from all sources, for the closing fiscal year, are larger than in any preceding year—thus evincing, as we interpret it, an increasing public appreciation of the work in which we are engaged, and a growing confidence in the fitness of the Association for it. And, finally, we would mention, as the crowning blessing of the year, that the labors of our largely increased number of missionaries and teachers have been attended with gratifying success. Amid the unsettled policy of the Government, and the consequent doubts and embarrassments at the South, the education and elevation of the Freedmen have gone steadily forward, thus working out effectively the problem of permanent reconstruction, and the higher problem of Christian regeneration.

We deem the present a suitable time for placing on record a brief sketch of the history of the Association, and a re-statement of its principles and aims, as well as an exhibit of its finances, and a survey of its work in the field.

HISTORY.

The American Missionary Association was formed Sept. 3, 1846. It was preceded by four recently established missionary organizations, which were subsequently merged into it. They were the result of a growing dissatisfaction with the comparative silence of the older missionary societies in regard to Slavery, and were a protest against it. The first of these organizations was

THE AMISTAD COMMITTEE,

Originating under the following circumstances. On the 26th of Aug., 1839, Lieut. Gedney, of the brig Washington, employed on the coast survey, boarded a mysterious schooner, off the east end of Long Island. He found a large number of Africans and two Spaniards, one of whom announced himself as the owner of the negroes, and claimed Lieut. Gedney's protection. The schooner was taken into the port of New-London, and the Africans, after a brief examination, in the U. S. District Court, were committed for trial for murder on the high seas. They were 42 in number, three being girls. They were all sent to jail in New-Haven.

When it was ascertained that the negroes were recently from Africa, and had been illegally bought at Havanna, to be taken to Principe to be enslaved, and that they had risen upon their enslavers and recovered their liberty, much interest was excited in the public mind. It was seen, at once, that somebody must act for these strangers, and accordingly the Amistad Committee was formed in New-York, who immediately made an appeal for funds, engaged professional council, and undertook to secure suitable instruction for these benighted pagans.

After passing through several Courts, the final trial of these Africans was held in the U. S. Supreme Court, in pursuance of a demand by the Minister of the Queen of Spain. John Quincy Adams and Roger S. Baldwin argued the case in their behalf, in March, 1841, and the "captives" were pronounced FREE! They were removed to Farmington, Ct., where they remained under instruction till the following November, when they sailed for their native land, accompanied by three Missionaries, sent by the Committee.

At this period, the Committee, occupied with their own pursuits, transferred the care of these Africans and the infant mission to

THE UNION MISSIONARY SOCIETY,

A body then recently organized in Hartford, Ct., with the same antislavery aim as that of the Amistad Committee, viz: "to discountenance slavery, and especially by refusing to receive the known fruits of unrequited labor." Under the auspices of the Union Society, the three Missionaries, accompanied by the captives, founded a mission-station at Kaw Mendi, West-Africa, where the Gospel was preached, a church organized, a school established, and a decided influence exerted against the slave trade. In 1845, a terrible war raged among the tribes around the Mission, when its power for good was most marked. It was the refuge for hundreds of both parties, who fled to it for protection. Its precincts were held to be sacred by both belligerents, and the Missionaries succeeded finally in restoring peace.

The following year the Union Missionary Society was merged into the American Missionary Association, then formed.

COMMITTEE FOR WEST INDIA MISSIONS.

In 1837, Rev. David S. Ingraham, a godly and self-denying student of Lane Seminary, and subsequently of Oberlin, determined to attempt a self-supporting mission among the recently freed inhabitants of Jamaica. He was accompanied and followed by other Missionaries, and much good was accomplished, but the plan of a self-supporting mission was found impracticable. A Committee was organized in this country, in 1844, to act in behalf of the Mission, but the Committee soon afterwards transferred it to the American Missionary Association.

THE WESTERN EVANGELICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Was formed in 1843, by the Western Reserve (Ohio) Association, its primary object being to prosecute Missionary operations among the Western Indians. A-number of Missionaries were sent into Minnesota, but in 1848, they were put under the care of the American Missionary Association, and the society ceased to exist. These Societies having transferred their missions and funds to the

it entered upon the work with increased vigor, strengthening the Missions already begun, and establishing or accepting the care of others—one missionary at the Sandwich Islands, two in Siam, and a number of Ministers and teachers laboring among the colored refugees in Canada, being taken under its care—so that in 1854 its laborers in the Foreign field numbered 79, and were located in West-Africa, Jamaica, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, Canada and Minnesota.

THE HOME DEPARTMENT

Of the Association was conducted with a special view to the preaching of the Gospel, free from all complicity with slavery and caste. Those of its Missionaries who were sent into the Southern States, while aiming to benefit all classes, whites and blacks, with schools and the preaching of the Gospel, yet bore an unequivocal "testimony" against Slavery. Their labors were frequently interrupted, their schools broken up, themselves assailed by mob violence, and at length they were driven from the South. The largest number of Home Missionaries employed by the Association was 110 in 1855, and these were located in the North-Western States, and in Kentucky and North Carolina.

WORK AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

At the opening of the slave-holders' rebellion, the Association found itself singularly prepared to devote its energies mainly to the colored race, here and elsewhere. It had gone through a fifteen years' struggle against the terrible power of Slavery, North and South, in Church and State, in social and business life, thus bringing it into close sympathy with the oppressed; while its labors in Africa, the West Indies, Canada, and the South, gave it a thorough acquaintance with the negro character, and had won for it the confidence of that people. Moreover, it had relinquished, for satisfactory reasons, nearly all its missions among the North-Western Indians, while its stations in Siam and the Sandwich Islands had become well-nigh self-supporting. Accordingly when the work of emancipation began, the Association was the first to meet the little bands of escaping slaves with clothing, schools, and the Gospel of Christ, and, by a noteworthy ordering of Providence, its first school was established at Fortress Monroe, Va., near the spot where the first slave ship landed its cargo on the continent—the slave ship and the colored school marking the two great eras in the history of the Southern States; the one inaugurating that system which has blighted the South with the curse of unrequited toil, and desolated the whole land with the miseries of civil war; the other opening the prospect of rewarded industry, universal liberty, general education, freedom of speech and an unfettered Gospel. From that humble beginning at Fortress Monroe, the Association has gone forward under the Divine favor, until its force of teachers and missionaries in the South numbers, according to the last Annual Report, 528, and the scholars in its various schools, day, night, Sunday and Normal, over 40,000!

The fitness of the Association for this special work was soon recognized by the churches of the North. The Wesleyans had from the outset given it their cordial support, and the Free-Will Baptists soon entered into co-operation with it. In 1865 the Council of the Congregational Churches assembled at Boston selected it from all other societies working for the Freedmen, endorsing it most fully for both the educational and religious work. In the following year, the Synod of the Reformed (Dutch) Church commended it as the instrumentality for schools among the Freedmen. Presbyteries and individual Presbyterian churches have accepted it for the same purpose, as have also the "Methodist" and the Reformed Presbyterian churches. It has also had warm endorsement and liberal contributions from the Congregationalists of England and Wales, and the Presbyterians of Scotland, as well as religious bodies and individuals on the Continent. As the result, its receipts which for the year preceding the rebellion were $43,000, reached last year $334,500 in cash, besides nearly $90,000 worth of clothing and supplies.

Its missions in Siam and the Sandwich Islands, in Jamaica and in Africa are continued, and as the Freedmen of this country are prepared, by a thorough Christian culture, and wish to go as missionaries, teachers and colonists to Africa to plant the Gospel and establish an enlightened civilization there, this Association will hold itself ready to aid and guide them in that glorious undertaking.

PRINCIPLES AND AIMS.

The principles of the Association, though frequently stated, are not fully understood. While it was founded in a sympathy with the oppressed, it was not a mere anti-slavery society, but a missionary organization, with all the breadth of plan which the Gospel enjoins and the experience of other missionary societies approves. Hence it preached the Gospel, founded schools and sent physical relief. To clothe the naked is not merely an act of Christian charity; a garment to an unclad heathen is a badge and means of moral advancement. Schools have been found to be useful auxiliaries in all modern missions; and, among an unlettered people, a necessity. Among the Freedmen there seem to be special reasons for combining all these means of influence. These people are naturally religious, and the gift of a garment is doubly valued, if given in the name of Christ; a school, where His name and precepts are taught, doubly welcomed. It is their moral natures that most require culture, and these need not mere education, but the sanction of religion. Ministers of the Gospel in sufficient numbers, and of adequate gifts, cannot be found to meet the immediate necessity-a large share of the work must be done by Christian schools. Hence the Association aims to preach the Gospel to them, not only by the lips of the preacher, but by the evangelical teacher in the school.

The unsectarian character of the Association is, from some cause, least understood. We are surprised at this—for our position is explicit, and, as it seems to us, intelligible;—we regret it, for we are persuaded that some evangelical Christians, now standing aloof, or co-operating with hesitation, would rejoice to act in hearty sympathy with us, if they but understood our position. For the sake of such we set forth once more the unsectarian attitude of the Association. Its proffers of co-operation are made with equal sincerity to all evangelical churches. It proposes to act with equal faithfulness to the different denominations which have accepted its proffers, according to the extent of the trusts committed to it. With the Free-Will Baptists, whose co-operation with us pertains mainly to Governmental facilities, our relations have been, and, we trust, will continue mutually satisfactory. For the Reformed Church and individual New School Presbyterian churches, and other religious bodies which have selected us to be merely the almoner of their schools and means of physical relief, we shall endeavor to take the teachers commended to us, and so to locate them, and aid them in their labors, as to make them in the highest degree beneficial to the colored people, and at the same time as helpful as possible to the Home Missions which those churches may have at the South. For the Congregationalists who have chosen us to send to the Freedmen not only schools and physical relief, but also ministers and missionaries, we shall heartily do all we can with the means entrusted to us by them, to relieve want, maintain Christian schools, and also to plant and nourish churches of the faith and order of the Puritan Fathers.

In all these efforts we shall endeavor to maintain our unsectarian character, to fulfill faithfully the stipulations made with different churches, to benefit in the highest degree in our power those for whom we have so long toiled, and in all things to meet the approval of the great Head of the Church.

FINANCES.

The last Annual Meeting voted that the effort be made this year to raise $400,000, and our receipts, for the first few months, justified the vote. While the Committee was encouraged, by these facts, to increase the corps of workers in the field, it yet graduated the expenses of the year at a less sum than that named by the annual meeting. Notwithstanding this precaution, the depression in the business of the country, threatened for a time serious embarrasment to our treasury; but in the good providence of our God, we are enabled to report cash receipts, from all sources, of $334,582 59, an increase of $81,536 61 over the previous year. The expenditures have been $342,702 50, being $71,115 72 more than the previous year. Of these sums, $86,537 96 has been specially contributed and invested, or appropriated, according to the direction of the donors.

The value of clothing, Bibles, &c. has been $89,443, being about $16,000 less than last year.

GENERAL SURVEY.

PHYSICAL RELIEF.

The calls for relief during the year have been pressing. The short crops of the prior harvest, and the unusual severity of the past winter, produced much distress, which was endured with patience by those who had been long accustomed to suffer, and was relieved with joy by the missionaries and teachers, so far as the means were furnished. Eighty-seven thousand dollars in valuation of clothing and supplies have been distributed by the missionaries and teachers, and they have also scattered 9,580 copies of the Scriptures, or parts of them, fift accompaniment of each other! How many tears were wiped aw and how many hearts and humble homes were gladdened, can nev be known till the donors learn it in heaven.

The past summer has been unusually productive in wide sections the South, and many of the Freedmen are placed above want, an enabled to do what they have never lacked the will, but only the means, to do—to aid in sustaining schools and the institutions o religion. But yet there have been extensive districts desolated by floods, or injured by the drought, the worm or frost; and the Savior words, "the poor ye have always with you," will still have emphatifulfilment. Hence the calls for the means of physical relief will continue to sound in the ears of those at the North who have pity on the poor, and the melancholy pleasure will still be afforded our teachers of relieving distress.

SCHOOLS.

Within the year, the Association has had under commission among the Freedmen, 528 missionaries and teachers, as follows: under the direction of the Central office, 244*; of the Western Department, 134*; of the Middle West Department, 58; of the Cleveland Branch, 11; of the W. F. A. & A. M. A., (Cin.) 81.

The schools have been continued, enlarged and multiplied, and still the importunate demand is only in small measure supplied. A million of pupils need twenty thousand instructors. From all sources but about 2000 teachers have been employed, and only about 111,000 pupils taught. But the great and gratifying fact can be announced, that 200,000, or nearly one-fifth of the school population, have learned to read in two years.

The zeal of the pupils and their readiness of acquisition, still cheer the hearts of the teachers, and vindicate the claim that the colored people are not an unintellectual race. It has been alleged against such claim, that their powers of acquisition are limited to the rudiments of learning, but the examinations at the close of the school year evinced, as indeed it had often been done before, that arithmetic. in its more complicated processes, is readily, and, in many instances, perfectly mastered.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL REPORT.

The Schools of the Association among the Freedmen are, in central localities, rapidly advancing to the rank of GRADED, TRAINING AND NORMAL SCHOOLS.

These higher schools are essential to the progress of the people; they are the models for the schools below, and will soon send forth their supplies of teachers, and of men prepared for the higher walks usefulness. They are moreover a permanent requisition. The uthern States will ultimately endow a system of common school lucation, and thus absorb the primary schools now supported by orthern societies, but these institutions of higher grade will not be apported by the states, and must remain for years as the educational ontribution of the North, and of friends abroad, to the South. This Association, recognizing the value of these higher schools, is giving its energies proportionally to them. The following are the points thus cupied:

AT NASHVILLE, TENN., the Fisk school has grown into the Fisk University, incorporated by the state. The grounds are eligibly located. The buildings formerly used as a military hospital, are quite extensive, and, when properly furnished, will accomodate 1,200 or 1,500 pupils. The rooms are large and well lighted and ventilated. The courts within the wards are handsomely sodded, and the whole appearance of the place is neat and attractive. The institution embraces three departments, Preparatory, Normal and Collegiate, and is supplied with an efficient corps of teachers. The property was purchased in 1866 by the A. M. A. and the W. F. A. C. at a cost of $16,000.

At HAMPTON, VA., near the spot where this Association established the first school among the "contrabands," it has in contemplation the founding of a College with a normal department soon to go into operation. The buildings are in process of erection, and will be situated on the beautiful and healthy shore of Hampton Roads, and the advantages will consist of convenient and ample school rooms; a farm garden of one hundred acres of land already purchased, giving employment to the young men for a few hours each day; a female department on the plan of Mt. Holyoke seminary, furnishing labor to the girls, thus giving the pupils a home, and instruction in labor, in learning and in the art of teaching, and in short, fitting them for true and useful life.

At CHARLESTON, S. C., the Association has purchased a Mission Home and a lot for a school house, on which the Bureau is erecting a first class brick building, the title to be given the Association, and the school to be called the Avery Institute.

At ATLANTA, GA., the Storrs' school has also developed into a Normal school. It stands upon a site overlooking the city. Permanent buildings suitable for a training school, with a boarding department, are being erected.

At Augusta, Macon and Savannah, Ga., Chattanooga and Memphis, Tenn., Beaufort and Raleigh, N. C., the Association has also provided for normal classes.

These valuable properties were purchased by the Association, not out of its current receipts, but with money furnished by the special contributions of liberal friends; by appropriations of the Freedmen's Bureau under the laws of Congress; and from the estate of the late Rev. Charles Avery of Pittsburgh, Pa., whose noble bequests have aided the Association so materially, in its work here and in Africa.

The contributions which have enabled the Association to purchase these properties, do not provide for the expenses of furnishing the rooms, nor the support of the teachers; and these expenses are necessarily greater than in the common schools. Hence, these buildings, while they vastly increase the facilities of the Association for usefulness, yet impose largely increased burdens upon its treasury-already taxed severely.

RELIGIOUS CULTURE.

The peculiarity of the negro character is its religious element, and in this lies its strength. His faith and hope, in the gloom of his bondage, and in his sufferings during the war, reached upward to touch the fingers of God, and the touch upheld him. It is by taking hold of his out-stretched faith and hope that we can lead him forward. Hence his religious culture, in its broadest sense, is his safety and our duty. But in the emotional traits of his character is concealed also his weakness, exposing him to the approach of intemperance, Romanism, and to the evils of mere excitement in religion. Thus his warm and excitable nature renders him quite susceptible to intemperance; and the greedy avarice that prepares for him the delusive and destructive beverage, marks the toilsome accumulations of his industry that it may swallow up all his living, and bring him under a bondage as fatal as that from which he has just escaped. As a direct means of averting this impending evil, the Association has published a "Lincoln Temperance Pledge" for general use, and one for families; also a "Lincoln Temperance Society" certificate, adapted to communities and schools. The original proposition for the family pledge came from Rev. J. T. Addoms, of West Plattsburg, New York, accompanied with his donation for its issue. These Temperance Pledges and Certificates are circulated in great numbers by our missionaries and teachers, and, through the favor of General O. O. Howard, Commissioner of the Bureau, by his Superintendents, throughout the South. They are welcomed by the colored people, and their use and influence is most happy and important.

The love of display, which is also incidental to the peculiar traits of the negro character, will attract him towards the shows and splendors of Romish worship; and the sagacity of the "man of sin" has already discovered and entered this promising field. We are confident that Protestants are not aware of the magnitude of the silent efforts which the Papacy is making among the Freedmen, nor do we imagine that any of us can realize the consequences of yielding the control of these people, politically and religiously, to that insiduous foe of human liberty, and of the souls of men. We propose no direct collision with the emissaries of Romanism at the South, but we will do what in us lies to anticipate their efforts, by preaching a full and pure Gospel in the pulpit, the school-house, and at the fire side. We shall also endeavor to sound the note of warning to the people of the North.

The emotional character of these people renders their religion impulsive, tending to mere excitement, while the terrible curse of slavery has well nigh divorced, in their minds, a practical morality from emotional piety. This great evil can only be remedied by connecting most closely in all, and particularly the earlier stages of their progress, their intellectual and their religious training. In their homes, in the schools as well as in the church, must this blended teaching be maintained. This obvious necessity has largely dictated the policy of the Association in its efforts for their advancement, involving less attention, for the time being, to the formation of churches, than might otherwise have been expedient. We are aware that there has been some disappointment expressed by Congregationalists at the small number of churches organized by this Association, among the Freedmen. We are not surprised at this. The enthusiasm aroused in the National Council at Boston, and prolonged by its generous devisings, prepared the churches to anticipate not only the most beneficial, but the most speedy results from religious efforts at the South. We freely admit that these anticipations have not been met, so far as church organization is concerned. Our last Annual Report made the explicit statement that the advancement of this people "will not be marked immediately by the frequent formation of churches and the ordination of ministers." This fact arises from no neglect on our part, and we invite distinct attention to the reasons for our action in the past, and to our plans for the future.

1. In the first place, and in vindication of our past procedure, we would revert to the fact above stated, that these people needed, as the initial work to be done among them, precisely that uniting of school and spiritual instruction which we have given them, and which the church without the school would not give. If this consideration is fully pondered, we are willing to abide the issue, for we are confident that none of our constitutents would justify us in neglecting the means of the real elevation of this people, for the sake of promoting any denominational end.

2. Secondly, this Association is not alone in the confession of inability to realize the anticipations cherished by many at the North. The American Home Missionary Society, whose great work lies in the West, and which devotes itself at the South, mainly, though not exclusively to the whites, expresses views on this point, remarkably coincident with those given in our own Report. It speaks of meeting "its share of the indifference of the South to Northern movements for the religious benefit of its people." It states that the Society "has encountered stronger opposition than has been offered to methods less radical and permanent," and concedes that its "progress may be slow." The churches should understand the real difficulties in the case, and should realize also the immense difference between the facilities for Home Missionary work at the West and South. The Home Missionary Society, for example, would scarcely be expected to attempt the founding of a church in any given locality in the West, unless it should find, as a basis of operation, a Puritan element of population, or at least a Puritan sentiment; nor to aid in such an effort unless the people of the place would contribute somewhat efficiently towards the current expenses of the church. But in the South, the Puritan element, and sentiment, are, as yet; rare among the whites, and hence the difficulties which have impeded the operations of that Society there. But how much greater these difficulties among the colored people! There are of course no Puritans among them. Their New England or Yankee sentiment is abundant, but it pertains to civil liberty, and not at all to ecclesiastical affairs; for, in these, they are traditionally and heartily devoted to other denominations. And if a few are found ready for a Congregational organization, they have no money or next to none, with which to aid in supporting such organizations. The difficulties therefore in the way of planting Congregational churches among the colored people, both as to material and means are, as yet, much greater than among the whites at the South, and immensely greater than at the West. The sentiment, and the ability are yet in a large measure to be created. Both are coming into being, and the growth will be sure and in the end great, but we must let it have its time.

What is thus said of Congregational churches is equally true in regard to the Reformed Dutch, and to some extent also of the New School Presbyterian Church.

3. Finally, this Association will go forward as fast as possible in the organization of churches. And the rapid movement of all things at the South, educational, political and industrial, gives promise of a more speedy opening than was anticipated at the date of our last annual report. A nation of voters has come into being, and the development of intellect has been unparalleled. The time has come for greater activity in church organization. Churches may be formed with our teachers in a given locality as the basis, together with such whites and blacks around them as may be like-minded. The means of growth will be, under God, the high order of intelligence, morality and piety they will embody. But our friends will readily see, from remarks already made, that these churches will for a time require more pecuniary support than mission churches at the West.

In addition to the formation of churches, it has been thought advisable that our Missionaries should, as far as their contiguity would render it practicable, organize themselves into local Associations. These would serve as a means of mutual improvement, counsel and help, and enable the missionaries to devise plans for the edification of the churches already formed, and to select the locations and promote the organization of new churches. It is believed that two or three such Associations may be formed next year. These Associations could also have a watchful eye to the selection of promising colored young men, who should be encouraged to study for, or enter the Christian ministry, and give them ordination if required.

EASTERN DEPARTMENT.

This department is under the direct management of the Central office, is the oldest portion of the field, and contains by far the largest number of schools and teachers.

WASHINGTON, D. C. MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. J. T. Marsh, Mrs. J. A. Marsh, Rev. James Brand, Rev. E. F. Williams, Rev. Isaac Cross, Mrs. R. M. Bigelow, Mrs. J. B. Johnson, Miss H. H. Russell, Miss E. A. Roberts, Miss L. W. Stebbins, Miss K. A. Harvey, Mrs. E. H. Disbrow, Miss S. F. Goodell, Miss Christina Yauger, Miss A. C. Park, Miss A. W. Lamson, Miss M. L. Boutelle. (Some of our schools at Washington have labored under a disadvantage from the want of suitable buildings. Their progress was.

notwithstanding, very satisfactory. By request of the trustees of Howard University, the Rev. E. F. Williams, our Superintendent at Washington, an accomplished teacher, opened the Normal and Preparatory departments of that Institution in May last, and continued as Principal through the school year. The growth of this Department was rapid.

The situation of the colored people at Washington has been peculiar. They have been taxed, equally with the whites, for the support of the public schools, and trustees for colored schools were duly appointed. They have, however, been studiously shut out from the schools of the City, and until within the past year no provision was made by the City Government for them. Within the last year a favorable-change commenced, and near its close the treasurer of the Colored Schools for the District said that seventy teachers would be needed during the coming year; of which the trustees would sustain thirty, and he hoped that the benevolent associations would support the remainder.

It was well understood, however, that with what had already accrued, $80,000 would soon be due the trustees of the Colored Schools from the City School Fund, a sum sufficient to sustain all the schools needed. It was supposed also that the present Congress was ready to vote all the appropriation that could be wisely used in the work of education there. Under these circumstances, the officers of the American Missionary Association think it best to withdraw from the support of teachers at Washington at the close of the year, and throw the responsibility upon those who are so fully able, and under so great obligations to sustain it.

Much of the labors of our Missionaries at Washington have been expended in carrying the consolation of the Gospel to the sick and suffering in the hospitals and at their homes. Great good has thus been done. There have been some hopeful conversions, but no general revival.

DELAWARE.

Teacher-Miss M. A. Harvey.

Rev. C. A. Harvey, a Home Missionary Pastor of a church in Delaware, became interested in the colored people around him, and encouraged them in their effort to build a school house, on condition that the Association would furnish a teacher. Brother Harvey's daughter was commissioned by this Association as a teacher; but it seems the white citizens, while willing the colored people should have schools taught by colored teachers, are not yet prepared to see a white lady giving herself to Christ in labor for His poor. Mr. Harvey writes:

[&]quot;When, a few weeks since, I addressed gatherings of colored people, mutterings of distant thunder were occasionally heard, but when my daughter actually became a teacher-'a white lady teaching niggers'-the storm came on apace. As my daughter passes through the street, boys and middle-aged men call out 'Snow-ball!' Nigger Teacher; and in passing our house, they jeer and ridicule. Yesterday something was hinted to me about mobbing abolitionists. The spirit of rebellion is as bitter here as in South Carolina, and we are without protection from Government.

"The Freedmen are proving their appreciation of efforts in their behalf. They beg me to stay, and cling to me as if I were their Moses. A field for telling labor opens here, such as I never saw before, unless I except my labor in the army. Could I see any means of support, I should feel that I could not leave without being guilty of taking ship for Tarshish."

Mr. Harvey himself soon resigned his pastorate and withdrew from the State, and has been cordially welcomed as pastor of a flourishing. church in Brooklyn. His daughter continued the school for a time, when it was abandoned.

Miss Eva Quaiffe, Mrs. E. G. Jackson, Miss M. E. Watson.

The last Annual Report stated that our schools in Baltimore had been given up to a local organization, and that the few schools we still maintained in other parts of the State were in part sustained by the colored people. The following statement by Miss Watson will indicate the progress of the scholars at Darlington, and the effect of the school on Southern predjudice:

" DARLINGTON, July 1st, 1867.

My work this month has been very encouraging. The scholars improve rapidly and are much interested in their lessons. On the 20th we had an examination; the proceeds were for the benefit of the school. It passed off very creditably. A number of white Marylanders deigned their presence. who, in spite of past and present prejudices, expressed their surprise and satisfaction with the system on which our school was conducted, and the promptness of recitations, especially in arithmetic, which they thought they had never seen excelled by such small children. I was gratified to think they spoke particularly of this branch of study, for by their manner I was assured they were among those who believe in the oft repeated assertion of the incapacity of the negro to acquire a knowledge of arithmetic. So these little ones in their humble sphere made some converts, besides causing their parents to thank God and take courage, that they had lived to see the dawn of better

Much physical suffering has again been experienced in portions of Virginia.

Miss Guild, writing from Hampton, says:

"There is a great deal of destitution. I see more of it this year than last. I have really seen one woman starved to death. The last thing I did for her was to get her a chicken; but she was too far gone to have it do her any good. Two weeks ago I took a long walk in the country to see how those were living, who had moved there, in order to raise corn. They had plenty to eat, but no clothing. There are very many children out of school, because they have nothing to wear. They say if they try to sell what they have raised they cannot; there is nobody to buy.

"How I wish you could see some of their happy-looking faces after they are dressed in a new suit; they will cling to you as if they had found a true friend."

Rev. W. D. Harris speaks of Richmond:

" For the last two weeks the suffering and destitution have been appalling. Ever since the first of January I have devoted much time in visiting and relieving the sufferings of the people by recommending them to the Bureau, and otherwise, for wood, clothing, and rations. I have been enabled to relieve a great many immediately from a fund received from kind friends at the North. This fund enables me to have a little commissary department of my own, which consists of meal and wood. Applicants for relief come to my study and say they have not a dust of meal, or any fire, and their children are crying for bread. I give them a stick of wood, a quart or gallon of meal, until I can investigate their case by going or sending some reliable person to visit them; if their statements are true, and I find very few exceptions, I recommend them to the Bureau. I witnessed a great deal of destitution during the war and soon after. But this winter surpasses anything I ever saw or expected to see. The people were compelled to pay all they could for house rent. When this extremely cold weather came on about 4,000, besides boat hands, were thrown out of the factories and other places where they were employed up to the extreme cold weather. I find many heart-rending cases. Some have their things or furniture taken, locked up in their rented rooms, and are turned out without them because they cannot pay their rent. Others have been compelled to burn their bedsteads, chairs and such things, to prevent their children from freezing. I have over 100 applicants for relief per day and I am unable of course to investigate so many. The responsibility is onerous, perplexing and very wearing, mentally and physically."

From Newport News we have the following:

"A few miles from here, three men own a cart and mule and a few pigs. They are called rich, and pass for great men. Those around us who have a little meal and pork left, and are obliged to eat sparingly, are reckoned very well off. It is not for these we beg, but for those who have absolutely nothing. The church is exceedingly poor also. The pastor's salary is very small, but the people cannot pay him even that. One of the trustees is in very poor health, and all winter has gone barefooted, or with some rags tied on his feet. A collection was taken up for shoes, amounting to sixty cents. He was obliged to take it for food, and go still longer with bare feet. We have offered to pay half the price of a pair of shoes, if the young men will pay the other half.

"Last Monday a rough boy came into school about two o'clock, and called out to his sister, 'Here is some breakfast for you.' It was a kettle of soup. They had nothing to eat in the house until they could pick up a little something to make soup. The father mother and seven children were suffering from hunger. Miss D. asked a boy why he did not write on his slate. He dropped his head. The boy who sat next him said, 'He gave his pencil for a piece of bread.' His father has been sick all winter."

Of the progress of the school at HAMPTON, we are happy to give the favorable testimony of a witness so competent and unbiassed as General Armstrong; writing from Fort Monroe, July 10th, he says:

"I cannot refrain from expressing to you my satisfaction and surprise at the proficiency of the pupils in the Hampton Schools as manifested in the examination of the 28th ult. I refer especially to the most advanced school. Miss Brownson's, when I state that the exercises in geography and reading passed off finely, admirably, while in arithmetic a striking readiness and progress were apparent.

From having watched your schools here somewhat closely for over a year I can bear witness to a steady growth in knowledge, and interest; the more advanced pupils seem to have a healthy ambition; in all the grades there have been a very encouraging degree of punctuality, and scholarly spirit,

It is clear that freed children do not get tired of going to school; the more they know the more they wish to know.

Let me call your attention to one fine success very generally achieved; the accurate pronunciation of the English language. None of the vulgarisms which prevail among Freedmen, nor even the fashionable and peculiar accept of the late aristocracy were perceivable during the examination or exhibition. In the former however I noticed frequent failures to speak in a loud clear tone; in the latter, the tone of voice was generally excellent, the articulation and modulation admirable.

A gentleman of extended experience in teaching and in the management of schools, gives this farther evidence of the satisfactoriness of that examination:

Having attended an examination of two of the schools, I take great pleasure in bearing testimony to their progress. That of the most advanced school, under the charge of Miss Brownson, was specially gratifying.

The particular studies under review while I was present, were reading, writing on the black-board, geography and arithmetic. All the exercises were highly creditable to both teachers and scholars.

The sentences written on the black-board were dictated by teachers and visitors indiscriminately, as exercises in writing, spelling, punctuation and in the use of capitals. That there should be mistakes was to be expected, but they were few, and in general corrected by the pupils without assistance, as soon as pointed out. Questions in geography, asked by both teachers and visitors, were with few exceptions, answered promptly and accurately; but the examination in arithemetic, and especially in fractions, was the most interesting. It surprised me, and I think I never heard a class of the same age who gave so clearly and understandingly the rules and reasons for them, by which fractions are changed in adding, subtracting, multiplying and reducing them. For the most part this examination was simply perfect.

It is at this point (Hampton,) so famous in the early establishment of slavery as well as in the early labors of the Association among the Freedmen, that a farm of one hundred acres of land has been purchased, including buildings, and the effort will be made to open a school of high grade, with facilities for manual labor for male and female pupils. The buildings are pushed forward rapidly and the farm will be ready for tillage next spring.

At FRANKLIN, a school was established by Rev. A. B. Corliss. We abridge a graphic sketch which he gives of the joy of the colored people, the contemptible opposition of the whites, and his final success:

" Nov. 22d. We arrived in Franklin on the 20th inst. It is a station on the Seaboard and Roanoke railroad, and the head of navigation on the Blackwater. The colored people here are very anxious that we should open a school, and think we could get eighty pupils. There was a school in this vicinty for a few months last year, but the whites threatened to burn the building, and it was

The colored people were much pleased when we told them that we intended to open a Sabbath school, and a day and evening school, as soon as their new church was finished. There is much opposition to our school here, and we learn that some white people are determined that we shall not establish one. Some endure our presence and say nothing; others get up demonstrations to annov us. On Thursday and Saturday evenings they gave us a tin horn serenade, accompanied with fireworks, groans and cheers. We have talked with the leading men in town, and they do not approve of such things, but say the young people are accustomed to do them.

P. S. Monday Eve. We opened school to-day in the grove where the colored people worship, and where they intend to build a church. The man who gave . the land, however, says he gave it as a spot on which to build a church, and if they have a school there, he cannot allow them to have it. The opposition

Nov. 28th. Providence has opened a way for me at last. We can buy an acre of land, and put up a house in two weeks; but the opposition grows more violent.

Dec. 8th. When I came to Franklin I did not dream of opposition, but it has been great. The young men organized a club, sent to Noriolk, and purchased nineteen large tin fish horns, and came around my house six nights to blow me out of the place; but the people of the village were annoyed as much as we were, and did not bear it as well. Last Thursday, Lieut. D- was in the place, and the horns have not been blown since. Now they fire several guns during the evening, thinking to frighten me, or the colored people; but we

[To secure a church and school lot, Mr. C. was obliged to purchase a tract of land containing seventy-five acres, at $1 per acre. This will be sold at cost, reserving the needed lot, or given to the colored people.]

Mr. C. writes at a later date, that he has "overcome;" since it was known that he is a land owner, his treatment by the whites has been much more res pectrul, and he anticipates no more trouble at Franklin.

THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY is occupied by our Free-Will Baptist brethern, in co-operation with the Association. The racy correspondent of the Independent, Mrs. Mary Clemer Ames, thus vividly portrays the arrival of a company of their teachers at Harper's Ferry:

"HARPER'S FERRY, West Va., December, 1866.

"Yesterday, looking from my window, I caught a glimpse of 'animated nature," which quickened with new life the repose caught from the blending here of ruins, rocks and rivers. What was it? It was a small procession of Yankee girls, just from the cars, coming into Harper's Ferry, to scatter through the Valley of Virginia, as teachers of the freed-people. That was a sight you would have to come all the way to the old slave-lands to appreciate! There they were—"the teachers!" The teachers! for whom Virginians had the most chivalric contempt, and the few Northern hearts here the warmest

"A troop of maidens, who, in some undefinable way, suggest Tennyson's sweet girl graduates with their golden hair,' although I am very sure that their tresses are not all of the bue of the sun. I see jaunty hats and natty jackets, gay scarts and graceful robes. I see elegance, beauty and youth; all come to brighten the lot of the lowly, to deliver from ignorance and vice that victim race which our brothers with their blood delivered from chains.

Opposite my window they encounter a Virginia belle, arrayed in the splendor of a purple dress, a scarlet shawl, a green hat, and a blue veil. Her scornful eyes behold the object which of all others she despises most-a 'nigger teacher.' What is worse, she beholds more than a dozen 'nigger teachers' all together. It is a dreadful, an unbearable sight, is it not, my dear? I suppose I ought to be very sorry for you; but I am not sorry a bit. It is an affliction of great magnitude, to be sure, that your whilem servants should be taught by better and prettier teachers than you ever had in your life; but it is a humiliation which you will have to bear, and the only way that you can lessen it is to improve yourself.

"This old house, once occupied by the superintendent of the armories is now used as the temporary abode of the superintendent of the freed-people's schools in the Valley of the Shenandoah, the Rev. Mr. Brackett, of Maine. In a grand old room, defaced by war, yet brightened with pictures and books from home, overlooking the prospect which I just inadequately sketched, I saw yesterday a scene not to be forgotten. That lovely Sabbath afternoon no church-doors opened to the teachers! With their books in their hands, they surrounded this wide room, holding a simple service of their own. A room full of youthful women, far from home and all its loves, sang the Lord's song in a strange land. Those old walls, which within the last five years had resounded so often to the oath and jest of dissolute men, now sent back the echoes of sweet womanly voices, through which loving hearts trembled as they sang,

Nearer, my God, to Thee, Nearer to Thee.'

Here was the red-lipped school-girl, just from school; here the young widow. holding in tearful love the memory of buried husband and child; here were women in the prime of matured power, with their rare beauty of sumptuous womanhood-women, whose elegance and grace and fine mentality would have lent lustre to the highest sphere. Such were the teachers of the freed slaves, who sat and knelt together; whose soft eyes dimmed with tears as they sang the hymns of home, and prayed for the blessing of God upon their work. After making due allowance for all superficial enthusiasm and the romance which may be inseparable from the womanly nature and missionary labor, who can measure the significance of the fact that hundreds of young, gifted and cultivated women from the North are now scattered through the South as teachers of its former slaves; and though much against their will, and almost contrary to their knowledge, teachers as well of the old-time masters?

"All unconsciously to themselves, in their mere presence, these women are educators. Their very appearance on the street has won the respect of people who at first despised and hated them."

Revivals and conversions are reported at and near Fortress Monroe. Miss Clark writes:

"With my report I write a line to speak of the revival here. Four weeks since we had our first meeting. That week there were from twenty-five to thirty conversions. For three or four days there were eight or ten a day. The whole church, minister and people, seemed awake, but the work has been quiet. We have had excellent meetings. For two weeks they were held daily, and since then, three evenings a week. The work has reached all classes. Backsliders have been returned, and the vilest sinners are penitent. A great many old men and women are seeking the Savior. One woman who was converted recently must be over eighty years of age. I wish you could see how happy she is. For nearly two weeks we could scarcely teach our school, the children were under such deep feeling. We have the utmost con fidence that from fifteen to twenty are truly changed. More than that number have professed to be converted, but do not give the evidence we would like to see. Last Sabbath 94 were baptized, a large proportion of them men. The work seems to be very thorough as far as we can judge."

Another teacher adds:

"One week ago last Sabbath evening, an invitation was extended to all who wished for prayers to come forward. About forty arose and complied with the request. Meetings are held every night. On Friday, one hundred and thirty were at the mourner's bench. About fifty were hopefully converted during the week, but still many rise for prayers every night; some of our day and S. S. scholars are among the number. We have a school prayer meeting every evening after school, one object of which is to instruct those who are anxious, yet scarcely know what they 'must do to be saved.' It is touching to hear young converts pray for their schoolmates, and witness the anxiety of those whose hearts are troubled on account of sin.

" Pray for us, dear friends,-that the Spirit may not be grieved, through any act of ours."

The competency of some of the colored people to wield the ballot is indicated by the following statement in regard to the opening of political meetings by prayer. Northern caucusses might take lessons. A teacher writes from CARSVILLE:

"The Freedmen are holding numerous political meetings. They always open them with prayer, and the whole assembly get upon their knees, and bow humbly before God, and thank him for the great privilege they have."

These people are shrewd as well as pious politicians. An agent in Va. writes:

"A Southern politician, anxious to ascertain how a certain pious colored man would vote at the coming election, approached him, and the following dialogue ensued :

Politician. Well, Tom, I suppose you know you can vote now ?

Tom. Yes, Massa, I've hearn talk about it. P. Well, who do you think you will vote for?
T. I don't know, Massa.

Who do you think has been your best friend?

T. Massa Jesus always has been my best friend, and I feel that he is now' and always will be.

This answer closed the conversation."

"Another politician conversed with Uncle Jack in the following manner. Don't you think, Uncle, that you ought to vote with the people and country that show you most favors?' 'Yes, Massa.' 'Don't you see that the Yankees have greatly deceived you, and promised what they do not give?' 'Yes, Massa, they have deceived us powerfully. They promised to make us free, and I did not think they would, but they 'ceived us, and they did. Wese all free now.'

Again the cry of physical distress comes, and with it the active relief of the teacher, and the devout thanks of the sufferers.

Brother Beals writes from Beaufort:

"My expenditures for the poor this month have been larger than ever before. The winter has been unusually severe, and an untold amount of suffering has resulted from this unusual inclemency. Some of the families have been shut in their homes for days together by fierce winds, and compelled from necessity to burn their uncouth bedsteads and stools to keep from freezing. And even portions of their houses at the farthest extremity from fire, have been demolished to keep up the last spark, till the storm ceased. Sometimes a shivering child has come to the mission house barefoot, late in the winter night, for a handful of wood, to keep mammy and the baby from freezing. The claims of hunger have been pressing indeed. I have distributed in the month one barrel of flour, bestowing from two to five pounds to a family. I have expended thirty dollars for food, mostly for sick people. These cannot go for rations, and are out of sight of the Bureau officers. Late one Saturday evening we found five families, two of them white, without a morsel of food for the Sabbath, some of them having eaten little or nothing during that day. A great many families have nothing to eat in the shape of bread from week to week. In fact, a great part of all the sickness results from the from week to week. In fact, a great part of all the sickness results from the refuse of fish and oysters. The only medicine which many of these people, who sicken and die need, is wholesome food. There is a young woman in school now, perfectly healthy, whom we raised, last year, from the borders of the grave, with nothing but little daily allowances from our table. We lately tried to raise another, sinking daily with no disease but want of vital energy. She was last year a member of Miss Dodd's school; one of her most hopeful scholars. But I am atraid our help came too late for her. Last night I spent almost the entire night with the poor, dying sufferer. How my heart bled for the afflicted family. Day after day has the father toiled, walking two miles into the country, and grubbing ground all day to secure a crop next year for his family, while his little boy has stayed out of school to pick up oysters and clams, often with bare and bleeding feet, to keep the family from starving. Now, just as returning spring inspired them with new hope and courage, death creeps slowly into their dwelling—and it is really death from starvation. It is not for the want of enough so much as the want of proper food. This is no uncommon instance.

"Last week I started from home with half a bushel of meal for Uncle John. I knew he had nothing in his house: but when I arrived at his cheerless hut. I had dealt it all out by the way, till there was not a quart left. Around his humble cot last year he had a little garden. But the fence had all disappeared to keep him from freezing. Said he, in trembling voice, "Brother Beals, if you had not sent me that load of wood, during the snow storm, lathink there would be no need to bring me meal now." Clasping his toil-hardened hand, I said to him, "But you are happy in your sufferings?" "Oh, yes, but when I draw dem rations from heaven, I want a leetle from earth." These people have the golden metal, refined amid tears and anguish. But it requires a stouter heart than mine to see them suffer without the power to relieve."

The value of the Brewer Orphan Asylum is manifest, not only in giving shelter to homeless children, but in warding off sickness, and teaching habits of cleanliness. Brother Clark, writing from the Asylum at Wilmington, says:

"We have had a warm, sickly August, with very heavy rains and much unpleasant weather; notwithstanding, I think a good deal has been accomplished at the Asylum.

"During working hours the boys and girls are kept much of the time cleaning. With soap and sand and lime and water, we have contrived to keep the interior and exterior of the rooms and buildings in a cleanly and presentable condition. And by taking constant care that nothing offensive is left about the premises, we have thus far, I think, and in a great measure on account of this, had but very little sickness. The boys bathe every day, and change their clothes once a week. As yet, we have not the facilities that are needed for the girls in respect to bathing. A bath-house, I think, is as much needed as a school-room.

But better even than orphan asylums is the spirit of self-help so readily evoked among this people whenever work and wages can be found. From Beaufort we have this:

"My school through the past month has had a very regular attendance, but has somewhat decreased in numbers. Every available hand is at work hoeing in the cotton fields; whole families leaving school at a time for that purpose. Little children, hardly big enough to 'pick up chips,' are flinging the heavy grubbing hoe with a will, all through the long, hot days. 'Me and de chillun does right smart o' work,' said a countryman to me the other day. One large field of cotton, about a mile out of town, was picked by the children alone. Their mother told me of it, and seemed very proud of her 'young uns,' as indeed she well may be, for they are smart in school, as well as out."

But urgent as are the calls for food, the desire for schools is still greater, as the subjoined extracts will show:

Brother Beals says:

"To day we need a thousand added to our corps of teachers. Applications came in from every quarter for books and teachers. All around us the Freedmen are struggling hard against poverty, some against actual starvation, yet they beg harder for a school than for food or clothing. No philosophy can account for this intense thirst for education, only to say that God is here; that God can rouse a nation to wants unknown before, to thirst for waters never yet tasted. Oh! that those who love the Master might comprehend the extent of the work. A million of sable children thirsting for mental life!"

Brother Ashley appeals thus:

"Applications are constantly made to me for teachers, under such circumstances that I am at loss what reply to make. When the Association is expected to assume the entire support of teachers, I can answer at once. But there are cases where the Freedmen have erected or procured accommodations for schools and made preparations for the quarters and subsistence of teachers, at their own expense, asking of the Association only to pay the teacher's salary. Such a place is Halifax on the Weldon Railroad. I understand that a qualified teacher is already on the ground. She went there with the expectation of opening a private school, or of being paid by subscription. But the Freedmen having turnished school house, quarters are subsistence for teacher, have exhausted their means. The pay of teacher must come from some other quarter.

"In Edgecombe County, on the same railroad, there is like provision made for a teacher. She can be boarded in a pleasant Northern family, her salary only remaining to be provided for, if a person willing to teach can be found.

"In Tawboro', on the Wilmington and Charlotte Railroad, about fifty miles from this city, the Freedmen, with the aid of their employers, are erecting a school house. I am daily expecting an application for a teacher. Should be a colored person, what shall I do? Cannot some way be devised whereby these Freedmen and planters who are helping themselves so extensively, can be supplied with teachers?"

The different attitudes of the whites towards the schools, sometimes hostile and sometimes favorable, is stated by Brother Ashley:

"In some places the whites are becoming more friendly, in others more hostile. In a reighborhood called "Long Creek," distant from the city about twenty miles, a school for freedmen, which had been in existence about seven months, and taught by a Northern man, was a few days since broken up. The teacher was taken from his house at night, by a gang of armed, mounted men, robbed, conveyed to the woods, and threatened with death, if he did not leave the place at once.

"It seems that they dared not shoot him but attempted to main him by beating him about the head. Darkness, and his skill as a fencer, (he had been a soldier,) enabled him to ward off every blow. Not far from this same place, I have been officially notified that a white woman of unquestioned character, who was conducting a school for colored children, has been forbidden by certain white persons to teach such a school. On the contrary, in the large places, as for example, Goldsboro, Lumberton and Fayetteville, the influential white men are becoming avowedly friendly, not only to the educating of the Freedmen, but to Northern efforts to that end.

"I mention the following as a significant fact, viz: Colonel Hall, Senator from New-Hanover County, in the State Legislature, and Chairman of the Committee on Education, statel to me a few days since, that he was preparing a report on the subject of free schools, and that he desired from me a statement of our work, and number of schools, pupils, buildings, and cost of supporting teachers, as he wished to frame an argument on the practicability of establishing a free school system in this city, for the white population."

A teacher writing from Smithfield gives an interesting fact on this point:

"Onr work is looked upon, by the leading white citizens, more favorably than in most places in the South, as will be seen by the following facts. We had a Sabbath school concert in March, and a few white ladies and one gentleman were present. Their report of it was so favorable that several other ladies asked us to let them know when we were to have another. When the hour arrived for our April concert, the school house was packed with people. Nearly all the leading citizens of the place, together with the Sabbath school connected with the M. E. church, which had just been organized, were present. The exercises were recitations from the Bible, singly and in concert, interspersed with appropriate Sabbath school songs. The children performed their part so well as to surprise all present. The former owners of many of our scholars were present, and listened with special interest. At the close several of the gentlemen made remarks and acknowledged their surprise. They frankly confessed that their own children were falling behind. They have since taken hold of their Sabbath school with new zeal. They have adopted the singing book which we use and are learning the tunes we sing; in short, they are following in our wake. Some who are not able to pay the tuition at the white school, seeing the colored children progressing so fast, begin to talk of sending their children to our school. Three men applied to me to admit their children. I told them that our rule is to exclude no person on account of color, and accordingly one of them has sent five and the other two; but the third has concluded that it will disgrace his boy, who'runs the street in rags and dirt. The seven that do come are cleanly dressed and bright children and will learn well. They appear to love their teacher as well as the colored children do."

The Temperance cause is not neglected by our teachers. From Raleigh we have this statement:

Besides speaking to our scholars on the subject of temperance, I have tried to fortify them by securing their signatures to the pledge. It requires real self denial on the part of some, for they have already learned to love the taste of liquor. Its use by the colored people is on the increase and there is no general effort or movement among them to discourage it. We are glad of the circular of the Special Committee of the A. M. A. on the importance of efforts to rescue them from intemperance."

The same success is met with in the school at Fayetteville:

"All our scholars, with two or three exceptions, have signed the temperance pledge, and we have reason to believe it will be faithfully kept. We explained it to them thoroughly, and after gaining the consent of their parents, allowed them to sign their names. An exciting interest was manifested, amounting almost to enthusiasm. With a single exception, every scholar in the Sumner school signed the pledge, most of them in their own handwriting, having learned since school began."

Summers, Miss J. A. Benedict, Mrs. Ellen Seymour, Miss A. R. Wilkins, Miss Hannah Fitts.

In the last Annual Report, Mr. Cadozo mentions a visit to his school, and warm approval by some of the leading citizens of Charleston. We are happy to present, in the following correspondence, the more explicit commendation of the Charleston schools:

" CHARLESTON, S. C., Oct. 15, 1866.

There are 20,000 colored people in Charleston; about 4,000 are of an age to attend school; most of these will acquire only the elementary branches, but a number are desirous, and are able to prosecute their studies, so as to prepare themselves to become teachers of their own race. For the attainment of this end, there is need of a permanent graded school in Charleston. Many prominent colored men of the city feel the deepest interest in an enterprise that affects their welfare so largely, and are willing to do their utmost in raising the necessary funds. We are promised aid by friends abroad, on the condition that our enterprise meets the approval of the prominent white citizens of the city and State. I would therefore respectfully ask an expression of opinion respecting this enterprise, from those friends to whom this object may be presented.

F. L. Cardonzo.

Principal of one of the Charleston Col. Schools."

"I take pleasure in stating that I entertain a favorable opinion of Mr. Cardozo, from all that I have witnessed of his conduct and deportment in this community. I have visited his school, and derived entire satisfaction from my observations. With these opinions, I have no hesitation in expressing my cordial approval of the enterprise proposed in the preceding prospectus.

Charleston, S. C., October 16, 1866.

" I concur in the above.

THEODORE D. WAGNER."

"Mr. Cardozo was for some time a communing member of my church, and left us, with a letter of recommendation from me, to study for the ministry in Great Britain. I can, therefore, both cordially recommend Mr. Cardozo as in every way capable, and his enterprise, which I believe to be the best plan for securing the educational advancement of the Freedmen.

THOMAS SMYTHE,
Pastor 2d Presbyterian Church, Charleston, S. C.

"I cordially approve of Mr. Cardozo's effort and enterprise to educate the colored people of the city, and, from what I have heard, entertain a very favorable opinion of his personal fitness for the work.

W. D. Porter, Lieut.-Gov. of S. C."
"I fully approve of the object of Mr. Cardozo, and believe it can effect much good.

"I willingly express my approbation of this, and every similar effort, to improve the moral and intellectual condition of our colored population.

C. C. PINGKEY, Rector of Grace Church,"

"I concur in the above.

HENRY BUIST, State Senator.
THOS. T. SIMONS, Editor Charleston Courier."

P. C. GAILLARD, Mayor of Charleston."

"The enterprise of Mr. Cardozo has my entire approval and commands my warmest sympathies and wishes for its success, and success is not possible in the impoverished condition of our whole people, irrespective of class or color, without foreign assistance. Any aid from abroad would be most welcome, as it will be necessary to the success of the undertaking. As a gratified witness of the zealous, laborious, and successful labors of Mr. Cardozo in the instruction of our colored population. I take great pleasure in stating my conviction of his eminent fitness for his contemplated work. His merits as a teacher being united with a good character, and both commending him to the respect of the country, and the confidence of the class he desires to benefit.

GEORGE T. BRYAN, U. S. Judge of the District Court of S. C."

"I heartily approve of the scheme of Mr. Cardozo, to educate thoroughly the colored children of Charleston, and commend him and his plans to the favorable consideration of the liberal abroad. I am satisfied he will devote himself to the work earnestly and faithfully, and merits, and should receive, the confidence of the public is his laudable undertaking.

JAMES L. ORR, Governor of South-Carolina.

Executive Office, Columbia, 20th October, 1866."

Mr. Cardozo makes the following report of his school:

 Whole numbers of pupils enrolled during the term
 1,000

 Whole number of pupils at the close of the term 800

 Largest number of members at any one time
 848

 Smallest number of members at any one time 800

About one-half of the pupils are pure African. One-half are free-born. I find no difference in the capacity of freemen and freedmen; indeed the difference between them would not be known if it were not for the more advanced condition of the former, on account of previous advantages.

Reuben Tomlinson, Esq., Superintendent of Education in South Carolina, speaks thus in his Report:

"Mr. Cardozo's school is supported by the American Missionary Association, and numbers among its pupils children of the most intelligent and cultivated colored parents in this State. It has been kept during the past term under very great disadvantages, the building in which it was held being entirely unsuited to the purpose. Notwithstanding this, the school has been an excellent one, reflecting great credit upon all parties connected with it."

The "very great disadvantage," of which Mr. Tomlinson speaks, is in the process of rapid and effectual removal.

The executors of the estate of Rev. Charles Avery, deceased, have appropriated $10,000 to be invested by the American Missionary Association as a perpetual fund, for the education and elevation of the colored people of South Carolina. With a part of this, an eligible site has been purchased in Charleston, on which a substantial and commodious building is being erected by the Freedman's Bureau, for a Normal or High School. An act of incorporation has been applied for in the State, and the prospect for a school of high character, with all needful accommodations, to be opened early in the coming schoolyear, is very encouraging. It will be called the Avery Institute.

We add a few interesting items from Mr. Tomlinson's excellent Report:

"There have been a large number of schools supported by the Freedmen themselves, which, though not very efficient, serve as an indication of desire for education among the people, and also tend to keep alive and strengthen that interest. I estimate that there has been from month to month an attendance in this class of schools of 6,000 pupils. I also estimate that there has been an attendance in unreported Sunday schools of 7,000 pupils. There are twentythree school-houses in the State which have been built by the colored people, with the aid of Northern societies and this Bureau. * * * * *

In 1865 I found but one white man of social position in South Carolina who admitted either the possibility or desirability of educating the colored children. To-day I question whether a man can be found in the State, who, whatever his private convictions may be, is not publicly in favor of educating them. *

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL REPORT.

I suppose there are 25,000 colored men and women in South Carolina to-day, who can read a newspaper with a fair understanding of its contents, who, two years ally interested, and I would, therefore, speak guardedly as to the influence on society of the educational work done under the patronage of this Bureau. But I know of no language too strong to use in expressing the extent and power for the influence of good which flows from these schools."

A teacher writing from DAWFUSKIE ISLAND, Says:

"Twice per week we have an industrial school for the girls. They are quite interested in making garments which are to be their own when finished. Four nights each week, we have an interesting night school-often have forty present-but the average is less. All come after toiling all day in the cotton field. One woman is always present with her babe in her arms, except when sick; six young men walk two and a half miles, and several others three miles. How few of these who call the Freedmen 'lazy niggers' would walk five and six miles, after working hard all day, for the sake of learning to read! Sabbath morning, I have a school of forty-eight children who are intensely interested. Some of 'dem chilen' who are 'mindin birds,' or 'de chile,' through the week, come in on that day, and I trust a seed or two falls into their young

"We hold two meetings on the Sabbath for the people, which are very well attended. A chapter from the Bible is read and explained; and a tract adapted to their understanding is read, several hymns sung, and two or three prayers offered. One day the leader of the church, after hearing a passage of Scripture, exclaimed : 'We don't know nothin 'boot de Bible; we've had it read to us all our days, but it 'pears like we are just beginning to git de sense of it.' I showed pictures of heathen torturing themselves, to an intelligent Christian young man. Turning to a friend, he said: 'See there! We are just finding things out. Why, in old times the white people showed them same pictures to me, and said that was the way God wanted us punished when we did bad.' The beauties of 'the divine institution' are coming to light."

From this State we have some very touching facts in regard to physical destitution, and some exceedingly interesting illustrations of the changes which schools and religion have introduced into the habitations of cruelty at the South. Miss Ayer, writing from Macon, describes the suffering, the starvation, she is called to witness:

"In visiting among the destitute, I frequently take notes. I make a few * * * * A Freed-woman, Sally Franklin-she is starving-the day is cold, but she lies without covering, in an open building, without windows-a baby is wailing at her side, and the mother's bosom is bare, as though her last conscious act had been an effort to nurse her childit is Tuesday, and I learn, after she has tasted a little gruel, that since Saturday she has had but a morsel of bread. Lot, the sick husband, had several hours before tottered weakly forth to beg for food-he does not return, night is coming on—it is cold, and Sally fears he will perish by the way—I wait for a time, hoping he will come, but he does not, and I leave the mother and her child alone. * * * I rap at the door of a rude shelter—a feeble voice bids me 'come in.' I find a Freedman, Henry Morton, sitting alone by a fireless hearth-he has chills every day-has never recovered from small pox-has done no work for five weeks-he has had no breakfast-had but one meal the day before—the rent is behind, the agent is calling for the money every day-threatens to turn them into the street-the wife is away seeking something to do—a sick child is sleeping in one corner upon some filthy, rag-ged bedding; she has had a potato for her breakfast—there is nothing for her dinner; the father is an earnest working man, and has money due him which he cannot collect. Hope, the offspring of freedom, has died out in his soul, and the wreck of every expectation is visible in his face. I can copy pages of misery like this-indeed exceeding this, for more than one grave has already been dug of want; and winter is but just begun. I cannot visit these people, and leave them with hunger unappeased, and be guiltless. What may I do

The gratitude for relief is thus referred to by Miss Ayer, under a later date:

"Two consumptives and several rheumatic invalids are gratefully enjoying some heavy, warm, knit wrappers given by some unknown person, who, I am sure would experience a thrill of pleasure could a glimpse be vouchsafed him, of the mingled surprise and delight which flashed over their suffering faces, when they realized that a gift of so much comfort was really theirs. Friends at a distance can never know how much of comfort and relief, encouragement and hope, they are casting into the lives of those, ignorant of kindness, and without expectation. The blessings which these gifts called forth, could they but reach the givers, in the simplicity and earnestness with which they are attended, would prove a rich reward."

The horrors of ANDERSONVILLE prison have so thrilled the American heart, and the transformation wrought by our schools is so striking, that we present a full detail of our operations there:

Miss Battey thus describes the opening of our school there:

"ANDERSONVILLE, Dec. 1866.

This is the Andersonville of dreadful memory-s place made sacred by the dust of sixteen thousand martyred heroes-a place at whose mention patriotic hearts throb with new impulse; for here was wrought out most visibly the spirit of the system which has so cursed our land with its presence. Here our brave men were distressed, persecuted, murdered, and here we institute our plan of revenge.

Our school began-in spite of threatenings from the whites, and the consequent fears of the blacks—with twenty-seven pupils, four only of whom could read, even the simplest words. At the end of six weeks, we have enrolled eightyfive names, with but fifteen unable to read. In seven years' teaching at the North, I have not seen a parallel to their appetite for learning, and their active progress. Whether this zeal will abate with time is yet a question. I have a little fear that it may. Meanwhile it is well to 'work while the day lasts.' Their spirit now may be estimated somewhat, when I tell you that three walk a distance of four miles, each morning, to return after the five hours session. Several come three miles, and quite a number from two-and-a-half miles.

"The night school, taught by Miss Root, numbers about forty, mostly men, earnest, determined, ambitious. One of them walks six miles, and returns after the close of the school, which is often as late as ten o'clock. One woman walks three miles, as do a number of the men.

"On Sabbath mornings, at half past nine, we open our Sabbath school, which is attended by about fifty men, women and children, who give earnest attention to our instruction. The younger ones are given to the charge of 'Uncle Charlie, a good old negro who wants to do something to help. Miss Root takes the women, and leaves the men to my care. As they are unable to read, we take a text or passage of Scripture, enlarge upon and apply it as well as we are able, answering their questions, correcting erroneous opinions, extending their thoughts, and endeavoring to bring their souls from nature's darkness to the marvelous light of God's truth. Their views of the sacredness of life, its object, or of true living, are extremely limited; they need instruction absolutely in everything."

An intelligent lady, visiting Andersonville, after our school had been in operation for some time, thus describes the change and the heroic self-denial of the teachers:

" Did they ever imagine, those rebel officers, who used our poor boys to erect those buildings-buildings put up to enable them to hold 30,000 prisoners in unheard of tortures-did they ever imagine, to what use those buildings were to be applied, and so soon? Did they dream that the wail of the captive would scarcely be hushed, and the last victim laid to sleep his last sleep in those awful witness-bearing trenches, before two angels of mercy should take their abode there, transforming that hell upon earth into a little earthly heaven? Yes, Andersonville has been cleansed and sanctified, and, thank God, by the purity, the presence, the labor and the love of woman. Where the rebel soldier's jeer and oath used to be heard, now daily ascends the sweet sound of prayer and praise. For the howl of the hungry hound, eager to chase the perishing Union fugitive, you may now hear the sweet voices of the children blending in song.

"Ye who dwell in luxurious houses, who rest on cushioned chairs and elastic mattresses, think of your sisters at Andersonville. Through the severest part of the winter, which has been severe enough even in Georgia, they have lived within rough boards, whose cracks let in the cold in every direction, and without a single pane of glass in the window frames, so that to exclude the cold, the light must be excluded also. In addition to this, they were threatened by enemies from without, and actually sat up one entire night expecting their dwelling to be burned. Neither privation nor loneliness nor threats could drive them from their post, and He who walked with the three children in the fiery furnace has been with them; they sat down under His shadow with great delight, and His banner over them was Love.

Miss Battey thus describes the school at the close of the term:

"I write to inform you of the close of the season at Andersonville. The numbers in the schools were well sustained, while the desire for learning was not a whit less the last week than the very first.

"In the night school great interest and diligence have been manifest. By the fire-light, and often till eleven o'clock, those determined ones toiled through the season, to find the reward of their perseverance in being able to read for themselves 'de bressed Word.'

"Our Sabbath school has increased in numbers and interest. Every seat. every window, and sometimes the door-steps have been crowded. All seemed quiet, eager, earnest. Although we have no great visible work of grace to report, still we speak what we do know when we say that the Spirit has been in Andersonville, working silently but surely in the hearts of those most constant at Sunday school and prayer meeting. One young man, whose course we have watched from the first, told us in our last meeting, 'I feels like I love Jesus' I not only feels like it: I do love him!' and certainly no one who knows him will doubt it. Another bore witness to the strivings of the still small voice; and yet another said : 'I hasn't yet foun' de Lord, but hope he'll soon find me.' Many others have their hearts open to good influences. May the work be a sure work, laid on the sure foundation-Jesus Christ!

"We have said good-bye to Andersonville, but more than any other, will that place be remembered, for there have we felt more than elsewhere that God is our refuge and strength."

Before taking leave of Andersonville, we quote from one of Miss Battey's letters this touching incident, which occurred some time before the close of the school:

"A few weeks since, I read from the 'Child at Home,' an article entitled 'No more Slaves in America,' which closes with Whittier's 'Laus Deo.' As I announced the title, every eye was fixed on me with a look of eager interest, and as the reading continued, tears began to flow -tears of joy and gladnessand from several directions we heard, 'Thank God! Thank God!'

"As I concluded the poem, poor, old, sick 'Uncle Charlie' slid from his seat to his knees, and with clasped hands and streaming eyes, looking toward heaven, cried, 'Oh! glory, glory to God for what he has done for us wretched people! Praise to God!' And so our school closed.

"Thinking that the tribute to the spirit of the poem might do good to the heart of the author, I wrote at once the simple story to John G. Whittier, and after a few days received an autograph letter from him, thanking me for the facts, and saying. 'Uncle Charlie's prayer is worth more to me than the praise of all the oppressors of his race,' and enclosing a sum of money for Uncle Charley 'if he needs it."

The eagerness of the people, in the rural localities, for the return of their teachers, and their glad welcome, is thus touchingly described by Miss Douglass:

"WILD THORN, (near Savannah). * * I had anticipated a most cordial welcome, but was not prepared for the demonstrations of joy which I witnessed. The people were expecting us, because they had been praying for our return. The first expression from almost every one was thanksgiving to God for answering their prayers. Old Aunt Rhina, whose head is frosted by age, and her feet so swollen that you would not think she could walk on them, came almost running from her cabin. I went to meet her. Her first words were: 'O! bress de Lord, you's come. My eyes is so proud to see you once more. Ise prayed for you ebery day.' Others exclaimed, 'Bressed Jesus, you heard my prayer, and I have saw my teachers once more.' One old man said, 'I seen you, I seen you. I know'd you was coming. De Lord showed you to me all ready to come.'

"They brought gifts of such things as they had. Rice, sweet potatoes, ground nuts and eggs. Strong men were so overcome by their joy as to tremble like a leaf."

Miss Sherman gives a graphic sketch of a class of ministers which she and another lady taught in what must be regarded as elementary theology:

"But now picture, if you can, a minister's spelling class! Imagine my feelings as I called upon the Rev. Mr. - to spell w-o-r-l-d, and the Rev. Mr. to spell be-a-s-t-s; a difficult word, by the way, both to spell and pro-nounce, and over which every one tripped and fell! I took occasion to enliven the spelling with various little dissertations on the nature and peculiarities of the English language, the derivation of words, &c., with which they seemed highly delighted. When every one had read and spelt, it was proposed by the Rev. Mr. - that they should read the first chapter of Revelation, and I readily consented, advising that one should read in a distinct, audible voice, stopping at the end of each verse for the rest to criticise. My advice was followed, and proved very acceptable in its results. The pastor of the church ascended the steps of the pulpit, opened the ponderons Bible, put on his 'specs', and proceeded slowly, but firmly, to read, pausing, according to agreement, for the criticisms of his brethren, and-alas for the dignity of man-of his sister, too. Yes, there was no way to escape the responsibility, for once it was clearly my duty to correct the preacher, standing, too, in his own pulpit. There was no hesitation on the part of his brethren! criticisms showered down freely, and I was appealed to as umpire. 'You said sanctified instead of signified', cried one, alluding to the first verse; 'you said 'the things,' instead of 'those things,' cried another, referring to the third. The worthy pastor stood rebuked, and submitted himself with a lowliness well worthy of imitation. We wound up our exercises by repeating, simultaneously, all the hard words in the chapter-Alpha, Omega, Ephesus, Smyrna, Thyatira, &c.

"This recitation was particularly acceptable to all the students, for one of the primer licentiates had previously whispered to Miss B., 'Miss, won't you please give me a bible lesson, for they call on me to preach sometimes, and I'm mighty tight up on the words !'

"All the theological students seemed satisfied with their teachers, and passed a vote of thanks, with a request that they would continue their services."

In regard to the general educational work, at the opening of this school-year, a writer in the New York Tribune quotes the Report of the Bureau Superintendent, and adds:

"The greater portion of the work in this State is controlled and sustained by the American Missionary Association. That Association will erect during the year several fine school-houses, with the aid of the Bureau, which will be in all their appointments equal to most school-houses in the North."

We are happy to say that the statement of this writer, "that the Association will erect during the year several free school-houses" has been carried out. At Atlanta, the Storrs' school-house, with chapel, has been completed and dedicated; the Washburn memorial orphan asylum has been built, furnishing a home for 200 orphan children, and a second school-house, of brick, is nearly ready for use. At Savannah a building to cost $10,000, to be called the Beach Institute, will be completed before Jan. 1; and other buildings are in progress in other parts of the state.

FLORIDA.

Rev. Gorham Greely, Mrs. H. B. Greely.

Mr. Greely speaks thus of a colony which he took from St. Augustine:

"STRAWBERRY MILLS MISSION, JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Oct. 9, 1866.

You ask for an outline of the history of the colony, and what good results are likely to flow from it.

"I arrived here the 18th day of last January with sixty persons from St. Augustine. They found shelter in the quarters of the ex-slaves, and immediately commenced preparing ground to receive seed. They were very poor some of them having raised half enough on the poor land in Augustine to carry them through the year; and some were almost entirely destitute, both of food and clothing. I therefore supplied them with food to some extent, taking the liberty to charge the cost, in part, with my bill of expenses. I also procured, through Miss J. and Miss E., a few garments for the most necessitous.

"This property very soon passed out of the hands of Chaplain Moore, into those of three other officers of the army. They very kindly gave the people permission to cultivate all the land they could, and occupy the houses this year, free of rent. The result is, they have raised corn and sweet potatoes enough to last them a year; and some of them considerably more. Most of them have also raised considerable cotton at the halves; also swine and poutry. Their condition therefore, compared with what it was at St. Augustine, is greatly improved. There they had to pay high rents for poor houses, high prices for fuel, food, and clothing, and could raise but small crops on the poor land. We have had an addition of fourteen families since we came.

"It has very recently been ascertained that good government land lies contiguous to this estate; and the most of these people have selected and are about entering lots of eighty acres for each family, intending to begin improvements immediately, and move by the first of January next; and they think that so many of their friends from other places will join them as to make up one hundred families. At some future time probably a school will be needed among them. As they will be but from two to four miles from this place, I expect to extend my missionary labors to them. The places of those who leave, will be filled by laborers and their families, so that the population on the estate will not be diminished, but still increased by purchases of land."

An unexpected difficulty, which these settlers on Government lands had to meet, is thus stated by Mrs. Greely:

You are aware that the colored people are leaving this immediate vicinity, and settling themselves on Government land We have had our share of interest in the changes and anxieties about the people, knowing how many difficulties they had to contend with. But one, of some magnitude, arose which we did not contemplate. About a dozen families (some members of whom were quite in years,) who had carried their lumber on their backs to their building spots, and had got for themselves good and comfortable houses to live in, with improvements, have found that the surveyor of the land has located them wrong, and they must go farther back, and build over again. I rode out to see them a few days ago, and they were feeling very sad. One of them, worn down with toil, and suffering from rheumatism, said: 'We seem to be born to a hard fate, and if we lose heaven, we lose all.' Yet these good people who walk in darkness and have no light' (temporally), do 'trust in the Lord, and stay themselves upon their God,' and He 'gives them songs in the night.'"

Mr. C. Thurston Chase, a Bureau officer, gives this interesting statement respecting an application for a school among the whites:

"JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Aug. 15, 1867.
To-day, I have an application from a loyal white man, a returned refugee, for aid in establishing a school in his neighborhood, 12 miles from here, on the Black Creek road.

"There are 25 children in the settlement, from six to thirteen years of age, Nine can read and write. Seven have no father, seven others neither father nor mother, only two men in the settlement can read and write. They cannot raise $5 apiece for any purpose from any available means.

"Only one man was in the rebel army. He ran away from them in Virginia, only one man was in the reber army. He can away from them in wirginia, and, avoiding the public roads and bridges, swam most of the streams, till he made his way back to his home. He and the most of the men 'laid out in the woods' till the Yankees made their appearance at the St. John's bar, then went down and joined them. A true citizen there says he knew the settlement, and knows they were loyal all through the war.

"They will build a log house themselves, and can board a teacher, but they will want books, and a teacher whose salary can be provided for from abroad. There are a few colored children within two or three miles of them. 'Would you admit these colored children to your school if they wanted to come?' I inquired of plain John Ellison. 'Admit them! of course we would, I've got three children, I'd have no objections, and I'm sure the rest wouldn't if they could only get the school.' 'Why,' he continued, 'should I keep a child away from his dinner when he's hungry and there's enough for him and us too? I would send my children any where to get an education. I want my wife to go too." Can not your Association help them? They are all temperate, and church members, following the small light they have seen."

MIDDLE-WEST DEPARTMENT.

OFFICE, TRACT BUILDING, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

In the Middle-West Department there have been during the year two important changes in organization which require especial notice. In October the Western Freedmen's Aid Commission, the original Aid Commission in the West, became co-operative with the American Missionary Association, so that the educational work has been conducted under one administration. As the two organizations were operating in the same field, and conducting their schools on the same evangelical basis, this co-operation secured greater efficiency, unity, and economy both in collecting and expending funds. The following officers were elected and put in charge of the common work :

> Secretary, Rev. E. M. CRAVATH. Treasurer. THOMAS KENNEDY. General Agent, LEVY COFFIN. Advisory Board,

Hon. WM. PENN NIXON, Rev. H. M. STORRS, D. D., Rev. G. M. MAXWELL, D. D., EDWARD HARWOOD, Esq., Dr. J. TAFT.

On the first of March, the "Cleveland Freedman's Aid Commission" also became co-operative with the American Missionary Association, and continued so up to June, when the Commission transferred its work entirely to the Association.

The following paper was adopted, and published by the officers of the Commission, giving the reasons for the change:

"CLEVELAND FREEDMAN'S COMMISSION.

"The Cleveland Freedman's Commission, with a view to a more permanent and enlarged labor on their field, and from the fact that their labors are cooperative with those of the American Missionary Association, have decided that the economy, efficiency, and simplicity of the work would be better secured by a more complete union with that Association. They have, therefore, after careful consideration, made a transfer of their work to the American Missionary Association.

"In doing this, the officers of the Cleveland Freedman's Commission take pleasure in stating that they give their hearty sympathy and co-operation to the American Missionary Association, and cordially recommend it to their friends, and the friends of the cause of the Freedmen.

JOSEPH PERKINS. President. Rev. T. H. HAWKS, V. P., H. K. REYNOLDS, Treasurer, Rev. Edward Anderson, Sec."

These changes have secured complete unity and co-operation in the educational work in the Middle-West, except so far as it is purely denominational.

The number of ministers and teachers under commission for the Department during the year has been 145. Of these all the ministers and 40 of the teachers have been supported from the treasury at New York; 12 by the Cleveland Commission, and 82 have received support from the common treasury at Cincinnati.

The force employed in collecting funds has been increased, and the actual receipts from the home collecting field of this Department for the past year are greater by about $6,000 than the sum collected the previous fiscal year. There was received by the Western Freedman's Aid Commission from Great Britain and Ireland, $6,755 46, which generous contribution is gratefully acknowledged.

Of the schools and missions we shall speak by states.

KENTUCKY. MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, Rev. J. G. Fee, Rev. A. Scofield, Miss Scofield, Rev. Gabriel Burdett, Miss Kate Gilbert, Miss Helen Jones, Miss S. A. G. Stevens, Miss Hannah Hughs, Mrs. L. Butler, Mrs. L. Cooper, Mrs. Alice C. Sherman, Mr. Geo. Collins, Mrs. George Collins, Mr. S. C. Hale, Miss S. D. Todd, Miss Nancy D. Brooks, Miss Elmira Hendry, Miss Emma E. Cross, Miss Celia Bradley, Miss Barber, Miss A. V. Wolf, Miss H. F. Wolf, Miss Martha Taylor, Miss Melinda S. Warfel, Miss T. R. Brower, Miss Bell Mitchell, Mr. Hugh Newsome, Miss Mortimer, Mr. A. D. Jones, Mrs. A. D. Jones, Miss Alice D. Taylor.

Slavery only ceased to exist legally in Kentucky by the adoption of the amendment to the Federal Constitution. This was too late for very much to be done toward establishing schools before the summer vacation of 1866, so that, at the last annual meeting, but 9 teachers were reported as having been in service during the year. During the past year 26 have been under commission, a gain of 15.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL REPORT.

Berea College, established by missionaries of the Association, before the rebellion, but entirely broken up by it, has been re-organized and has achieved great growth during the year, as will be seen by the following extract from a letter written by Rev. John G. Fee:

" BEREA, MADISON Co., Ky., Sept. 3, 1867.

This is the first day of the term. There were present this morning nearly two hundred pupils. Less than two years since, at the introduction of colored pupils, we found the school suddenly reduced to thirteen. Many of those who suddenly left came back. During the last term, the school was about equally divided-colored and white.

"Though there is yet in the State much prejudice against impartial education, yet in many instances this is giving way. This morning, quite a number of parents came to introduce their sons and daughters. Among these were two Methodist ministers, one white, the other colored. The latter, a native of Maryland, had resided many years in Ohio, and is new pastor of a church in Lexington, Ky. He is a man of ability and rare excellence. His address to the school was one of vigorous thought and practical utility. The address of the white preacher was also practical and excellent. In it he narrated something of his persecutions in sending his sons to Berea. The young men are promising. The precedent will do good.

"The work here we regard as of great importance. The colored preacher, in his address this morning, alluding to the lear of Gov. Cox, that there might be a war of races, said, 'let there be Bereas planted throughout the nation, institutions in which the youth of the land, white and colored, shall study together, play together, sing together, worship together, and there will be no war of races.' If Berea shall be a success there will be a demonstration of practical utility to the South.

" Gen. Howard has endorsed our work by turning over seven thousand dollars. This will aid us in putting up some cheap buildings. We do not wish to expend it thus. We wish to erect more substantial buildings."

At Lexington, schools were established in October, and have been under the superintendence of Mr. S. C. Hale. The enrollment for the year was over 700.

For these schools some $500 were secured of the State fund for the education of colored children; our schools having been adopted and approved by the civil authorities. This is a great point gained, and we trust that the example set in this case will lead to similar appropriations at other points in the State for the coming year.

In Louisville the accommodations were entirely insufficient, and not suited to school purposes, yet a great work was accomplished. Seven hundred children were brought under instruction. The want of suitable school-rooms is about to be remedied. A fine site on Broadway has been purchased, large enough for a school building, a Mission Home, and Church, when one is needed. A brick edifice is now being erected, mostly by Government funds, that will furnish ample accommodations for 500 pupils. The house is to be ready for occupation by the 1st of January, 1868.

Schools were established at Danville, Richmond, Greensburg, Winchester and Bowling Green, and were re-opened at Covington and Columbus.

At Camp Nelson, in December, the school was broken up by the "Regulators," and Brother Scofield and family were compelled to flee for safety. Rev. Gabriel Burdett (colored) has however continued his labors there, and, in a wonderful manner, God has blessed his

A great religious interest has pervaded the community during this summer, and sixty-three have been added to the Church.

Kentucky is now a very inviting field of labor. We are asked to establish many more schools at important points in the state.

The colored people are eager for schools and are ready to assist in their support. Chaplain F. K. Noble, Superintendent of Education for the State, says of the year's work:

"One year ago the whole number of schools in the state for colored children was but 17, the aggregate attendence in their schools, at that time was 781. Now there are reported for the present month, 96 schools, 122 teachers and 5,921 pupils. There has also been marked improvement in the management of these schools. Incompetent or unfaithful teachers have been removed and their places filled by teachers trained to their work. Prompt and regular attendance has been specially insisted upon. The result has been most gratifying. For the month of May, the average attendance in all the schools was about 90 per cent. It is nearly as high for the present month. No better testimony could be given to the fidelity of the teachers and the interest of the parents in the instruction of their children.

The establishment of the "Fisk School" at Nashville was chronicled in the last Annual Report, as the great event of the year, in our operations in Tennessee. An extract from the Report of Professor John Ogden, the Superintendent, will show what has been accomplished during the second year of this school:

ATTENDANCE.

"The first term of eighteen weeks, of the second year, opened September 3d, 1866, with an attendance of about 350 papils and seven teachers, which numbers soon increased to 600 pupils and nine teachers, and still later to 800 pupils and ten teachers, not including the Superintendent.

"These figures show the actual attendance, and not the number enrolled. This latter item is often taken in order to make a "big show," but it seldom fails to give a wrong impression of a school. It is safe to say that not less than 1,200 different pupils have been members of this school for not less than one month during the past six months; and that 500—the same individual pupils—have been members of the school all the time, and that 750 or 800 have been our constant enrollment from month to month.

"Our system of marking is most rigid, excluding all from actual membership that have been absent two weeks without excuse, and all that have been absent tour weeks under any circumstances.

"In addition to this, most of the teachers keep a regular record of the number of perfect recitations per day, reported by each pupil each evening. These are shown in the daily registers. This system of exactness has done much, both to regulate the schools and to impress upon the minds of the pupils a just idea of a school, and of the responsibility of individual labor.

PROMOTIONS

"From one grade to another, are made monthly, or, in some cases, as rapidly as the pupils are prepared for a higher grade. For the last six months the books show the following: From the four primaries to the intermediates, 131; from the two intermediates to the secondaries, 61; from the two secondaries to the grammar school, 35; from the grammar school to the high school, 25; the other pupils have been received from abroad."

NORMAL SCHOOL.

"The necessity for a model training school for colored teachers in the South, has been made very apparent by the loud call for such teachers. Its claims have been urged heretofore. This school has been established with a view to meet this necessity as far as possible. To this end, the class drills in all the higher departments are managed so as to awaken the teaching talent of the pupil as much as possible. In addition to this, nearly all the advanced pupils in the High School, to the number of some thirty, have been organized into a class for special instruction and practice in the art of teaching.

"These pupils are arranged into four divisions, and these again into sections of two and three each. Each of these sections has one-half hour per day allowed it for visiting, in regular order, the other departments of the school, to observe the mode of teaching and managing the school of the various grades. After thus spending the time allotted, for a few weeks, these pupil-teachers are required to take a brief charge of classes, in the presence and under the direction of the principal of the room, and thus as early as possible, to acquire skill and experience in teaching and governing schools.

"Some of these teachers have already acquired sufficient skill to manage small schools, and it is the intention of the Superintendent to recommend some of them for positions as teachers the ensuing year.

"The prospect for the establishment of a permanent Normal School here is therefore very flattering. In this way, a large number of native teachers could be sent out annually to all parts of the State, and thus prevent much spurious and injurious teaching that even now abounds in all parts of the South. Since the passage of the recent school law, and the prospect of the establishment of colored schools, under legal sanction, this course becomes still more important and desirable.

THE MISSIONARY

"Feature of the institution is best understood by reading the published letters of Mrs. Crosby, our missionary teacher. Her labors among the poor, the sick, the suffering, and even the most vicious, have not only contributed much to the physical and moral comfort of these wretched ones, but they have extended the blessing of the school, and rendered it popular among all classes."

During the summer, the city authorities of Nashville decided upon establishing free schools for colored children. The following circular was accordingly issued, announcing a change in the organization of the "Fisk School:"

THE FISK SCHOOL.

"In January, 1866, the Fisk School was established by the American Missionary Association and the Western Freedmen's Aid Commission, for the education of the colored children of Nashville and vicinity, and during the various sessions thus far there has been an average monthly attendance of about eight hundred. During this time the city authorities had no schools established for colored children, and the Fisk School was conducted as one of the great public schools of Nashville. As such it has been remarkably successful.

public schools of Nashville. As such it has been remarkably successful.

"We have learned with pleasure, through the published reports, of the action of the School Board of the city, that two large free schools for colored children are to be opened in September, and that experienced Superintendents have already been appointed. We gladly welcome this action, and cheerfully modify the organization of our work to suit the new order of things.

"The Fisk School will accordingly be opened in September as an Academy and Normal School

"A systematic and thorough course of study will be established, and the organization and discipline will be modeled after the best institutions of a similar character in the North,

"Professor John Ogden will continue in charge as Principal, and will be assisted by a corps of accomplished teachers.

"Possessing extensive buildings, well furnished school rooms, and beautiful grounds, and having secured the services of the same teachers that have made it thus far such a wonderful success, we confidently expect to make this institution meet fully the wants of all who are seeking higher and better advantages than public schools can give. The academic department will be so arranged as to be preparatory for the normal or training school department, and thus especial attention will be given to the work of preparation for teaching.

"We offer the advantages of this school to those from all parts of the State, as well as those in Nashville, who are seeking the advantages of a thorough education

"The School year will be divided into three terms, and the tuition will be three dollars a term, or one dollar per month, payable in advance.

Those who wish to enter the school next September can give in their names at the office in the school buildings.

"We expect to furnish the best facilities for those who attend, and shall limit the number of pupils received if necessary.

In behalf of the Societies,

E. M. CRAVATH, Sec'y."

In August the Institute was incorporated under the title of the "Fisk University," with the following named persons as trustees: George Whipple, E. M. Cravath, Charles Crosby, John Ogden, Joseph H. Barnum, W. W. Mallory, John Lawrence, John Ruhm, J. J. Carey.

A circular was issued giving notice of the change and setting forth the purposes and organization of the Institution, from which we make the following extracts:

FISK UNIVERSITY.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.

"As will be seen by articles of incorporation recently published, the Fisk School has passed into what will be known hereafter as the Fisk University.

"The reasons for this change may be gathered from the following statements: "I. Believing in, and laboring for, the great Common School interest in the South, we wish to place ourselves in harmony with Free Schools and Universal Education for every Child of the Republic, irrespective of race, condition or color, as indicated in the school law of this State. Believing, also, that the efficiency and excellence of any school system depend more upon the character of the teacher than upon the system itself, this institution will devote its best energies to the preparation of a better class of teachers for the Common Schools.

"II. There being a large class of adult pupils supprovided for in the City Schools, and many more from the country, all of whom are anxious to fit themselves for the transaction of business, in their new relations as citizens, this institution will endeavor to meet this demand by the organization of a business department for the accommodation of all such as may desire to avail themselves of its advantages.

"III. Persons desiring to prepare for the Ministry, for the practice of Law or Medicine, will find this institution prepared to give such preliminary instruc-tion and training as shall best fit them for entering upon the study and prac-tice of these professions."

"I. THE ACADEMIC DEPARTMENT will embrace the Primary, Secondary, Grammar, and High Schools, in which special attention will be given to a thorough business education, in connection with the literary training for other professions. These departments will admit pupils of any age between five and thirty years, and classify them according to age and advancement.

"II. The Normal Department will be for the especial accommodation of those who may wish to prepare themselves for teaching. It will admit pupils of good moral character over fifteen years of age, provided they give evidence of ability and aptness to teach. The training will consist—"1st. Of thorough drills in the several branches of common school education; and

"2d. In teaching exercises in the Model School, under the direction of an experienced teacher, for the purpose of acquiring skill in the management of schools of the various grades.

"III. A COLLIGIATE DEPARTMENT, embracing the Ancient and Modern Languages and Higher Mathematics, will be added as soon as there is a sufficient demand for it. Classes in the Collegiate studies will be accommodated, for the present, in the High School.

PROF. JOHN OGDEN, Principal. CHARLES CROSBY, Steward.

Approved in behalf of American Missionary Association and Western Freedmen's Aid Commission. E. M. CRAVATH, Secretary. CINCINNATI, Sept. 2, 1867.

The Fall term opened on the 16th of September, and about 200 pupils are in attendance, and the number is increasing. General O. O. Howard, Commissioner, has made an appropriation of $7,000 towards the Normal department. The prospects of this enterprise are very flattering.

Rev. W. W. Mallory has been laboring in connection with the school as minister, and in the city as missionary. Good results have followed his labors, especially his personal visitations among the people. No church has as yet been organized. Brother Mallory is to be succeeded the coming year by Rev. Henry Bennett, who leaves a pleasant church at Wakeman, Ohio, for this promising field of ministerial labor.

MEMPHIS.

No more efficient and successful work has been done in Tennessee than that accomplished at Memphis, under the superintendence of Jos. H. Barnum, who entered the service of the Association last December. The Phœnix and the Lincoln school buildings-both erected since the riots-furnished much better school facilities than had ever been pessessed, and made a graded and organized school possible for the first time in Memphis. 1,826 children were enrolled during the year. The schools have been reduced to order and system.

Negotiations are now in progress, by which it is expected that the schools, with the present corps of teachers, will be adopted by the City authorities, and the State fund for the education of colored children appropriated towards their support. By this means the efficiency of the schools will be maintained and a large portion of the burden of support lifted from the Association.

At Chattanooga, Rev. E. O. Tade has been laboring as Superintendent and minister. The schools have been very successful. There were 635 pupils enrolled in the day, 190 in the night, and 650 in the Sabbath school.

A Church was organized June 9th of 15 members, "all of good promise as substantial members." The following extracts from Bro. Tade's letters show what is being accomplished by the "Band of Hope" and the little church:

"Our little 'Band of Hope' nearly 200 strong, has made a good deal of a stir

"The truth is working; it presents all the phenomona of being genuine yeast.

"Thus far our church members have all behaved well. As a class I regard them as very hopeful, and by and by, with the blessing of God, the Church must be a great power for good, not only among the young people who are fast rallying to our standard, but to the old people themselves, and especially to the other Churches.

"I am more than ever satisfied that the way to do the greatest and most permanent good, not only to the colored people, but to all the South, is to send teachers and missionaries to gather and start new organizations. Thus the better elements will be brought together in a a way to be of service. We ask no one to unite with us only in a general way—personal, none. We say here is a chance for all who love the Savior and love His cause to live and labor.

"All seem to labor cheerfully and a good spirit prevails in all and toward all.
Our inquiry meetings are still well attended. Some eight or ten persons are now ready to cast in their lot with us. We mustered in some six or eight of our best Sabbath School pupils, as teachers, last Sabbath, and they seemed to like it much better than they expected. We have teacher's meeting Saturday evening. Pray for the prosperity of Zion." In a letter of later date, Mr. Tade says:

"We have just given a concert and entertainment, which has enabled us to put 31 good comfortable pews, 8‡ feet long, in our chapel, and a neat pulpit-platform and pulpit. There is left us $11 toward getting a Sabbath School library. We begin to be felt and acknowledged as a power. What is the prospect of our having a lot secured for us? Things are looking quite promising."

Still later:

"The 'Band of Hope' is doing a great and good work,—it has made us some enemies, because both the children and grown people will talk against rum and tobacco. Our gain is steady. The prayer meetings are very well sustained, quite a number of good solid men will unite with us at our communion next Sabbath. The schools at Chattanooga with the corps of teachers have been adopted by the City authorities, and the fund for the education of the colored children of the City will be applied toward their support."

The smaller schools in Tennessee were undisturbed by violence and were prosecuted successfully. For the want of funds, we were compelled to refuse to establish schools at many points which were entirely accessible and inviting.

Rev. D. Burt, Superintendent of Education on the staff of the Assistant Commission, makes the following clear statement respecting what has been and what ought still to be done in Tennessee:

"The colored people of Tennessee are in a crisis—a rapid transition to a condition in which their educational rights will be secured to them by state and local legislation. This fact is the result of the schools established for them by their friends in the North. We have demonstrated to the old slaveholder that the negro can be educated; that he can make progress. We have incited Tennesseans to undertake to educate their ex-slaves. But we cannot retire from the field at present. Should we leave it now it is not certain that these incipient efforts of the State, and some of the cities, would be continued. Our schools must give both impetus and character to their efforts. The State is too poor to provide schools, to any great extent, for some time to come. The progress of the ten thousand beginning to learn must not be arrested; others of the ninety thousand of school-age must be gathered in, or they can never enjoy the rich blessings of Freedom. We implore the Christian public to continue its contributions until this crisis is past. Give us a good corps of teachers for this State the present year, and while we educate by our own schools, we will earnestly urge the civil authorities to fake the work off our hands, and gladly surrender it to them as fast as they undertake it, in accordance with the conditions of success."

Of these 39 teachers, 20 have been supported by the Assistant Commission of the Bureau, from a special fund available for the support of schools. Twelve were supported by the Cleveland Freedman's Aid Commission, and were located at Montgomery, Talladega and Gainsville.

Respecting the Montgomery schools, we quote from the Report of the Superintendent, Rev. W. T. Richardson:

"Our great want was more room for schools. Gen. Swayne promptly turned over to your Superintendent a large two story brick building, located on one of the principal streets of the city, and formerly used as a place for the safe keeping and sale of slaves and varied merchandise.

"To transform this place of sorrow, grief and woe into school rooms for the diffusion of light and knowledge was indeed a pleasant task, and one that sent joy and gladness to many hearts. We were permitted to enlarge our work, until 500 scholars were gathered into the day schools under this roof, and more than 200 adults have here attended our night schools, some of whom were once sold as slaves in this very 'Trade House,' where we have been engaged in teaching them to read and write.

"This colored school is in the very heart of the city, and I am happy to state for the credit of Montgomery and the business men in the vicinity, that no complaint has come to my ears from any of them.

"The general deportment, average attendance, and progress of the pupils attending our school the past season, have been better than in any school with which I have been connected, in more than four years experience in the work of education among the Freedmen.

"One advanced class in geography have been through Mouteith 3d part, in a very thorough manner; other classes have made like progress.

"The advanced class in 'Robinson's Practical Arithmetic' have been through fractions. Other classes in Intellectual and Primary arithmetic have also made good improvement.

"One class in the advanced school during the last term have been studying Grammar with good success.

"Singing has been taught in most of our schools and we have been much gratified with the deep interest of our pupils in this branch, and the rapid improvement made.

"We have endeavored also, as we have found opportunity, to inculcate moral and religious instruction; hoping thereby to elevate the minds and reach the hearts of our pupils. Most of our teachers have been interested in the Sabbath school work, and have rendered valuable aid in this Christian enterprise.

Over 1000 pupils have been connected with our day-school during the past nine months. The average attendance since the first of January has been fivesixths of the whole number enrolled each month. It will be seen that more than two-thirds of the pupils reported have been brought under school instruction within the past eight months.

"Had a sufficient number of teachers and rooms been furnished, more than 200 additional scholars would have joined our schools. It is to be hoped that another season, all the colored children of the city may enjoy the advantage of school instruction."

We trust that Brother Richardson's successor, Mr. N. H. Adams, will be able, in January 1868, to transfer his schools to better quarters in the large new building which is being provided.

The school established at Athens by Miss M. F. Wells, soon after Lee's surrender, has been very prosperous during the year, and has won the highest praise from all who have visited it, as truly a model school. Negotiations are now in progress with a view to the transfer of this school to Decatur, and its establishment as the Female Seminary for Northern Alabama.

Much has been done by Rev. C. W. Buckley, State Superintendent of Education, in Alabama, by the establishment of schools at important places.

Alabama has, however, received less assistance from the American Missionary Association than its importance deserves. It is hoped that for the coming year the Association will have the funds to enlarge greatly the work in Alabama.

A fine College property, consisting of twenty-three acres of ground and a large three story brick building, has been purchased, and a Normal School is to be opened during the fall at Talladega.

Rev. Henry E. Brown has been secured for the place, and will soon be on the ground. The intention is to make this the leading enterprise of the State.

Atlanta and Marietta are the only places that are under the care of this Department. The teacher at Marietta was supported by the Union Freedmen's Educational Society, P. S. Green, President.

The growth of the work of the Association at Atlanta has been rapid and surprising, as has been the rebuilding of the city itself.

Two years ago this month, when the agent of the Association first visited the city to prospect for the establishment of schools, he found this city just beginning to be rebuilt from the ruins to which war had reduced it. The only building available for school purposes was a rudely-built church that had been hastily constructed out of the ruins of a former one. Rev. Frederic Ayer, for many years a missionary of the Association among the Indians of the North-West, was sent, with his wife and two female teachers, to begin the work, and the first school was opened in that "dreary" building.

During the past year, the "Storrs" school-house has been completed and dedicated, giving ample accommodations for 400 pupils, and furnishing a chapel for religious worship capable of seating 400 persons. A second large school-house, of brick, has been erected in another quarter of the city, which gives fine accommodations for 250 children.

Work has already been commenced on a brick church, 40 ⋈ 60, in still another part of the city, which will be used for a school as well as a place of worship.

The Washburn Memorial Orphan Asylum has also been built, and has furnished a comfortable home temporarily for more than 200 wandering orphans. We quote from the "Atlanta Opinion" respecting this Institution:

"Washburn Memorial Asylum.—This Institution, located within the corporate limits of the city, near the Stone property, north of Houston street, is among the interesting features of our surprising little city. The building—a large two story edifice with basement—was erected by the American Missionary Association, and under the supervision of the Rev. Mr. Ayer. Annexed to this building is a Chapel, where the wards are regularly assembled for Divine worship, and in one apartment of which, is an elementary school, under the supervision of Miss R. M. Craighead, a lady of fine practical sense and culture.

"Miss Craighead is also in charge of the Asylum, and by her energy and discipline has reduced the Institution to perfect system. Everything is done in order, and the most scrupulous neatness prevails throughout the premises."

"There is a large number of orphan children (colored) now at the Asylum.

"There is a large number of orphan children (colored) now at the Asylum, ranging from two to ten years of age. These all eat in a common dining room, furnished with tables and stools, where perfect decorum prevails. Their sleeping apartments are neat, cleanly and comfortable; and the children all evidence the care, attention and skill of the managers.

"Such an institution is a necessity growing out of the new relations between blacks and whites in this country; and the manner in which it is conducted is creditable, in the highest degree, to the head and heart of the intelligent lady who has it in charge."

The schools have been under the superintendence of Rev. E. A. Ware, and are spoken of by Gen. R. Saxton as the "surprise and delight" of every friend of humanity who visits them.

The enrollment for the year was 1900 day scholars, 225 night, and 1200 children in Sabbath Schools.

A Church was organized in June, which gives great promise of usefulness and growth. The chapel services are well attended by the young, and the influence among them for good cannot be estimated. We hope during the coming year to organize the second church in the building being erected. Rev. Charles Francis has just gone to Atlanta to labor especially as a preacher to these churches.

Our Superintendent, E. A. Ware, has received the Government appointment as State Superintendent of Education, but as head quarters are at Atlanta, he still has connection with our work.

The stakes are stuck to mark the spot on which a building, for the accommodation of pupils who wish to attend a Normal school, is to be erected. A petition has been filed for the incorporation of the Atlanta University. Ten thousand dollars have been promised by Gen. Howard to the Normal department of the University, and during the year the needed additional building will be erected.

KANSAS.

MINISTERS.

Rev. Robert Brown, Rev. L. H. Platt, Rev. J. W. Fox, Rev. J. H. Paine.—Teacher, Mrs. L. H. Platt.

Scholars enrolled, 200.

Our work in Kansas has been evangelical rather than educational; all our representatives, save one, being pastors of churches. A large number of colored people are found in the State, refugees from oppression in the recently slave states. They come from Missouri, Arkansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, and even Texas. Although Kansas is politically a free State, there are thousands of influential citizens of slaveocratic antecedents still unreconciled to the results of the War, and our missionaries find social ostracism a common penalty.

At Lawrence, Brother Paine has done a good work with courage and persistance, and has been efficiently seconded by his church. Under date of Feb. 5th, 1867, he wrote: "The population of this city is estimated at about 8,000, one-fourth this number are colored people. They came from Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas; widows are numerous, and many of the children have no parents. The city authorities provide free day-schools for the children. My wife and I give four nights in the week to a night school for those who are excluded by age or pre-occupation from the day schools. We have our hands full with about twenty pupils, but their eager industry and profound gratitude render the work of instruction relatively easy and wholly delightful."

At Leavenworth, Brother Brown has been abundant in useful and telling labors. Braving all hindrances, not a few of them formidable, he has organized a truly Christian Church in which the white and the black, the rich and the poor, the highly cultured and the very ignorant have met as Christians upon a common platform, and clasped hands, without patronage on the one side, or servility on the other. For this peculiar work, Brother Brown seemed to have special tact and grace. In addition to pastoral labors, he has addressed himself to Sabbath School work and to regular missionary visitation throughout all neglected districts of the city, including the State Penitentiary, where a large number of hopeful conversions have resulted from his labor.

Brother Fox has labored effectively and with encouraging success at Ridgeway, Wyandotte, Rochester, Burlingame and Olathe. Under date of May 19, 1867, he writes:

"I hope to visit Wyandotte soon. Brother Parker writes me that they very much need a teacher for Freedmen there, (if he could preach for them, all the better.) a man whose catholic spirit would enable him to go into their meetings, and labor to lift them up. The black preachers cannot elevate their people.

Brother Fox was usefully employed in protracted meetings at Wyandotte and elsewhere during the year. A number of hopeful conversions were reported.

At Topeka, Brother Platt has labored with diligence, and has been usefully assisted by Mrs. Platt, in a night school for adults, and in general missionary labor. A church is organized, and, with the aid of the Congregational Union, a comfortable house of worship has been built and paid for.

citizens of Quincy have expended $20,000 upon needy colored refugees since the war began, and are not yet weary in this line of well doing. Special mention should be made of the liberality of Mr. J. K. Van Doorn. At Cairo, one school has been sustained from the general treasury of the Association. The others at Cairo, Mound City, and Carbondale have been under the immediate care of the Freedmen's Committee of the Free Will Baptist Church, and have prospered.

At Chicago a useful and flourishing night-school, chiefly self-supporting, is still continued. This enterprise was begun early in the war, and has fitted for business life, hundreds of colored men and women now comfortably established. The fidelity and enthusiasm of the teacher, Miss Cherrie, have been the constant inspiration of new pupils.

The new Constitution of Missouri secures, so far as an organic statute can secure, educational opportunities to blacks as well as whites. But the minority of citizens whose opinions are partially represented in this instrument, are practically unable to give it general effect. In no other State in the Mississippi Valley have outlandish attempts to discourage, and even personally to injure, our teachers been more frequent. As there was no agent of the Bureau in the State, except a disbursing officer at St. Louis, our missionaries have been compelled in some instances to flee from town to town to escape personal injury, while in others only a rare heroism has held them to their posts.

The voluntary and almost unrequited agency of Mr. Isaac T. Gibson, a member of the Iowa Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, has been of very great value alike to the American Missionary Association and to the colored people at large. He applied himself to a thorough exploration of the State, with a view to the collection of all important social and educational statistics, and the immediate establishment of schools at the more inviting points. A number of schools were sustained by the Iowa Yearly Meetings, but the burden of the work was assumed by the American Missionary Association. In a number of instances, Mr. Gibson was able to secure the cooperation of local school directors to some extent, and at St. Louis he was able at length, after patient and persistent effort, to secure an order from the Board of School Education for the establishment of three first class graded schools for colored pupils.

The teachers of the Association with a single exception, were transferred to the employ of the Board, and continue their work under favorable auspicies. The teacher not transferred was reserved for a responsible position in a neighboring State.

Mr. and Mrs. Copeland, at Kansas City, have wrought an excellent work, with much self-denial and patience. A branch enterprise is to be inaugurated at Westport in a few weeks, where preparatory work has been done.

At Warrensburgh, a comfortable school building, worth, with the lot and furniture, $1000, has been erected, and is owned by the Association. Rev. M. H. Smith was a voluntary agent in the premises, and will be employed by the local school board as teacher.

At Fulton and at Troy, as also at Westport, lots have been secured and school buildings will soon be erected, to be owned by the Association. At Kansas City, a commodious building, erected as the result of special efforts made by Mr. and Mrs. Copeland, serves as both church and school house.

Our corps of missionaries and teachers in Missouri, taken as a whole, have accomplished a most satisfactory work during the year.

ARKANSAS, MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. E. K. Miller, Mr. Geo. M. Haskell, Mr. James O. Lyman, Mr. James B. Webb, Mr. Wm. A. Hubbard, D. C. Casey, Mr. C. G. Wright, Mr. Geo. C. Hare, Mr. Wm. Hazeldine, Mr. K. M. Neff, Mr. D. Howard, Mr. Augustus C. Stickle, Mrs. Mary A. Stickle, Miss E. F. Carhart, Miss Maggie Farrar, Mrs. A. C. Pierce, Mrs. M.B. Hitchcock, Miss C. B. Tenney. Scholars enrolled, 574.

The relative inaccessibility of the interior of Arkansas, not less than its situation one side of the through routes of travel, has left it somewhat in the rear in educational matters. It has no commercially important centre, and although there are scores of thousands of adult and juvenile pupils scattered through the State, they have hitherto been relatively neglected. The share of the Congressional appropriation for school buildings, allotted to the State, was some $30,000. Nearly the whole of this would have been at the command of the Association, if a few thousand dollars for the purchase of school sites had also been at the command of the Executive Committee. After considerable delay, an eligible site was purchased at Pine Bluff, where the Association will own a property worth $5,000. Citizens and Freedmen own sites at Washington, Batesville and Helena, on which good buildings are going up; and at Little Rock, where the Society of Friends have expended considerable sums for several years past, a building worth $6000, was erected upon a site purchased by the Executive Committee.

The Agent of the Association for the State, has been instructed to negotiate for sites at Fort Smith, Van Buren, and elsewhere, and in the next twelve months a large work may be done. This agent, Rev. Mr. Miller, has accomplished a work of great value, and has been wisely and generously seconded by Mr. Wm. M. Colby, the State Superintendent of schools under the care of the Bureau, to whom he has sustained the relation of Assistant.

A number of teachers have been assigned to plantation schools, a division of the educational and evangelical work especially inviting in Arkansas.

These teachers have, in every instance, been sought for by the planters themselves, some of them but recently slave-holders; a home in the planter's family, without cost to the Association, being the regular accompaniment of the situation. At least twenty applications of this character were necessarily declined for lack of a few hundreds of dollars to pay the nominal salaries.

A teacher thus located, wrote under date of Davis Lake, July 9, 1867.

"The Arkansas River has been rising for a considerable time, but the levees sustained it in its bed till June 2d, when it broke out at Silver Lake, and two days later at Pendleton—places not far dietant. The country was soon overspread with water, and the only mode of communication from neighbor to neighbor, till June 24th, was by boat, among driftwood, and sometimes over the tops of trees. The cotton crop was nearly all drowned out, and the loss to the people from the destruction of this staple, in a circuit of 15 miles, is over $1,000,000. During the overflow, myself and wife kept the school going on the plantation, but those at Lennox Lake had to be abandoned for a time, but were resumed June 24th, which was as soon as I could get there on horseback. Many plantations had to be abandoned, but we were providentially located where only a temporary derangement took place either with regard to industry or our schools.

"Upward of one hundred of our pupils mastered the alphabet in the month of May, and our schools are increasing in numbers and interest. I never saw people learn so fast. It generally took me three months to teach white children what these will learn in ten or fifteen days. But I am satisfied the difference is caused by more intense application. How far in the higher branches this will continue to be the case, experience must determine.

As it regards those here professing to be religious, I have to doubt their sincerity in almost every instance. If they can get alone by themselves they will make incoherent speeches and prayers, singing ludicrous lymns, accompanied by frantic screams, dancing and gestures, till one by one they become exhausted, and lie around under the benches. The conduct of the succeeding day is usually altogether at variance with these night professions. Some of the young give promise of godly lives, and if they can be kept from the religious excesses of their seniors, there is much reason for hope. I could fill many sheets with their anusing speeches, but you can listen to such in the prattle of your own children, where the only difference would be in the color and size.

Fraternally yours,

AUGUSTUS C. STICKLE."

We have occupied but a single point in Louisiana—a plantation near New Carthage. The liberally endowed school system, established by General Banks, soon after the surrender of New Orleans to the Federal forces, has substantially secured the education of a majority of the children in the city, and has been extended to some portions of the interior of the State. A great work remains undone, however, a work not only educational, but evangelical. The masses of the people, white and black, are papists, and entrance among them is the more necessary, as it is more difficult. At present some twenty teachers could be advantageously located upon plantations, if the Executive Committee had funds at command to guarantee their support, and it is probable that fifty more would be asked for during the year.

Our State Agent, Mr J. P. Bardwell, has been employed constantly in the care of schools established, and in the exploration of new territory. He has rendered valuable service to the Assistant Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, performing, for the most part, the duties of State Superintendent until late in the year, when the Superintendent was appointed.

The schools, as a whole, have been prosperous and useful. At Natchez, the most attractive city on the river, a sort of reaction appeared early in the year. This was one of the first points in the Valley occcupied by benevolent agencies, and several societies competed for a foothold. A surplus of teachers at times led to so close a competition for pupils, that not a few of the colored people came to think it a condescension on their part to patronize any school. This sentiment reached a crisis and wrought its own cure. Every society save the American Missionary Association, withdrew its teachers, and the schools are now prosperous and useful.

At Natchez, the Association owns a school building, worth perhaps $1,000, standing upon leased ground. It has no real estate in Mississippi. It should own first class buildings and grounds at Vicksburg and Natchez, and at least, common buildings at several other points. A number of teachers have been advantageously employed upon plantations, detailed always upon the voluntary and earnest request of the planter. One of these, a Christian gentleman from Wisconsin, has taken a most lively interest in the education and christianization of his "people," as may be gathered from a private letter dated, Davis Bend, May 22, 1867.

"I cannot tell you how much we are all pleased with the Bishop you have been so good as to send us. I am, however, beginning to get alarmed for his health. It will be impossible for him to keep up his present labors through the summer. As matters are now, he is the hardest working man on our place. To form some ideas of his duties, you must know that he has a day school of twenty-seven scholars. For them he has two sessions, commencing at 9 A. M., and lasting until 4 P. M., with nooning of two hours. Evening school begins at 71-2 P. M., lets out about 11. At this school there is almost regular attendance of 60 scholars. Now, when it is considered that some are learning their letters, others a b, ab, some spelling readily, reciting geography, arithmetic, etc., it is a hard task for one. And then, added to all this is the constant demand for letters to be written, sick to be visited, and others to be counseled. Had we the necessary living accommodations, I should ask for an assistant for him.

"The avidity with which these people study, and the exertion they make to learn, surpass all my previous expectations. The A-B-C class learned their letters in less than ten days. I asked one of our leading colored men the other day, what he thought of our school, and his reply was. 'I cannot tell you how proud I am to have this school for myself and children.' One of the most advanced scholars is 64 years old. She comes three miles to school.

"On Sunday, Mr. Bishop holds Sunday school, and there they have, or are beginning to have, the old Sunday school hymns sung, such as you sing in the Chicago schools, and it does my heart good to hear them. They are all very much taken with the new tunes. All this week I have heard the children humming and singing their songs. It is as if they were bubbling up all over the place. We have also a school at Chalula, in La., about five miles from New Carthage. At the end of this year we shall move from here into that neighborhood. Mr. Chidister is teaching there. He has an attendance, including evening school, of something over 50 scholars. This school will soon increase to 75. We have now 100 people on the place. I have taken this plantation for five years, and am very anxious to erect a permanent school building on the place. There is none that I know of this side of Vicksburg. I have made an application for this through your agent, Mr. Bardwell. I calculate our contributions for this school will be nearly, or quite, $400; and we want to get, either in material or in money, $800 more. I trust when the application comes to hand you will consider it favorably. The school established there will have an attendance of nearly, if not more than 100 scholars. Mr. Chidester and Mr. Bishop are, in my opinion, well calculated by their energy, intelligence and enthusiasm to succeed in almost any sphere of life. I do hope such carnest workers may long be kept in this noble field of missionary labor. No one knows as well as the Southern man, the amount of natural intelligence and smartness there is in the colored race; the mass are as yet ignorant, and many will undoubtedly remain so; but a large number will readily acquire an education, and make their way in the world as well as any white man. We have an example in this neighborhood, Mr. Ben. Montgomery, black as the ace of spades. He owns the whole of the Davis property, (4000 acres.) His son resides in Ex-President Davis's house, and he in Joe Davis's. This Mr. Montgomery is very intelligent-very few are the white men I have met who are his superiors for extent and accuracy of information. Pardon me for so long a letter. Mr. Bishop will write at the end of a month. Yours respectfully,

C. P. Huntington."

Our work at Mobile has been seriously embarrassed by a lack of school-room accommodations. While the Medical College was occupied, some seven hundred children were in attendance. A liberal appropriation has been made by General Howard, upon the request of Gen. Swayne, and a first class school building, for graded and high schools, will go up the present year.

Despite all embarrassments, a very great work has been accomplished, and upon the foundations laid, a satisfactory superstructure may easily be builded.

At White's Landing, across the bay, two schools were opened only eight mouths since, by Misses Mahony and Allen, where nothing of the kind had been known before. The deepest interest was immediately manifested by both parents and children, and the progress of all classes has been unusual, even among colored pupils. On the Fourth of July a public exhibition was given in connection with a general celebration of the day; the first celebration of the National anniversary ever witnessed by citizens present, whites or blacks. The exhibition was largely attended by visitors of all classes from adjacent townships, and the proficiency of the pupils astonished all observers. A graduate of a leading New England college who happened to be present, pronounced it, without exception, the most remarkable and significant occasion of its kind he had known. The location proved so healthful and the work so engaging, that both the ladies sought and gained permission to omit the usual summer vacation, and have continued at their posts without interruption.

At Riverside, five miles north of Mobile, an excellent work has been done by Misses Wiswall and Etheridge, a work educational, sanitary, industrial, and evangelical. They have been largely assisted by Dr. A. J. Gray, Surgeon in charge of the hospital.

The educational work in Texas was begun in earnest only a year since. The State is densely populated with freed people, many of whom were sent thither from great distances, during the war, to prevent emancipation. These were uniformily the favorite slaves of their masters—the especially intelligent, capable and useful. They are now the most promising of pupils. There were no battles in Texas during the rebellion-it was never conquered by the National forces. There is, in consequence, a measure of unsubdued bitterness which constantly breaks out in appalling atrocities. It may suffice to quote from a single narrative, brought to the attention of an officer of the Freedmen's Bureau.

Thomas Anderson, (colored) being duly sworn says: "I had a contract with the defendant to work for him for 5 months, at $8 per month.

"In the evening of one day I went from the field to the house for some water. and he, said defendant, was there, and came up to me and said: 'where have you been?' I replied that I had been knocking about. He said, 'what are you doing here?' I said that I had come for a pail of water and was going back to the field to hoeing again. He told me to go down to the crib. I started down and walked a few steps, when he came up behind me, drew his six shooter, and struck me on the side of the head, which cut a hole in my head, and the blood ran down over my clothes. He then told me to step down against the crib, which I did; he kept telling me he was going to take me to the "Bureau." He then sent Luke to the house for a rope, put it over my head and around my wrists and jerked me down; he then commenced beating me with a board on my side, head, face and mouth, and cut a hole through my lip. He then left me and went to the house, and his wife and son came to me. His wife said, 'If I will let you loose, will you go to the house with me?' I said I would, and she loosed me and took me to the cabin. He then came into the cabin, took the fire poker and beat me again over the head, arms, legs and side. He then sent Luke for the log chain and hobbles. He put the chain around my neck and locked it on, then put the hobbles on me and told me to get up and go around to the gallery of the house. I got up and walked as well as I could for the hobbles and chain. After I got into the yard he took a board and kept beating me until I got around to the porch. I laid down on the floor of the stoop and he got a pail of water for me to wash the blood and dirt out of my eyes. After laying there awile I began to groan with pain. They let me lie there until after dinner. Then the son came and took the chain off. Then the defendant took me down to the creek, tied me to a limb, and, removing the clothes, commenced whipping me with a twisted rawhide whip on the naked body. He then eftly me, and his son came and let me down. I laid on the ground some twenty minutes groaning with pain, when the defendant came back, put the rope around my heels, and drew me up with my head downwards, and called upon Luke to hold one of my hands, while he stood on the other with his foot, and whipped me again with the rawhido until the blood ran down my back. He then let me down, put the rope around my neck and his son took it and pulled me up the hill, the defendant coming after, and occasionally giving me a kick as I was pulled up to the house."

An inoffensive colored man was shot dead by drunken ruffians in front of our Teacher's Home in Galveston. Similar outrages occurred every week in the year in one part of the State or another.

Miss Dunlavy wrote from Hallettsville, April 29, 1867.

" News of my arrival spread rapidly through the community, among whites and blacks, and as the latter had been in anxious expectation of that event for several days, they were now perfectly delighted that the teacher had really come, and very soon manifested their appreciation by calling at my room, sending up boquets, etc. This is the first Freedmen's school ever organized in the county, and the people were very bitterly opposed to it, making numerous, terrible threats as to what would be done if an attempt was made to open a school; but on Monday, April 15th, the school commenced and has continued through the month without molestation; however, I attribute my peace and safety, not so much to the kind consideration of citizens, as to their want of power.

"Our school-house consists of an old shell of a building with no ceiling overhead, and had no lining whatever, until the agent, fitting it up for a schoolroom, had the walls lined with canvas. The seats are benches such as the colored people have hewn out in the woods, consequently quite rough. For windows we have close blinds, which must be opened in order to have sufficient light, though considerable is admitted through the numerous openings in the walls. I have now, in school, forty-five pupils, and expect an increase in number next month. Many of the scholars come in from the country, from distances varying from two to eight miles, though those living farthest from town generally stay in the village from Monday until Friday. But one comes from a distance of five, and quite a number from three miles, walking each morning, and returning after a five hours' session. Many of them manifest great eagerness to learn, and are earnest in effort. When school commenced there were only four that could read, even the simplest words. Now, at the end of two weeks. I enrolled more than half the school ABLE TO READ.

"The colored people here, in town, have no houses of their own, but are still the servants in white families, which renders my visiting among them impracticable, to say the least. I think the people in this section of the country, particularly, have suffered much from the hatred of their late masters, and are still suffering, though their condition is gradually improving. Quite a number have been murdered. One old 'Aunty' told me that her husband was shot while asleep, soon after they were freed-shot for being free.

"I have organized a Sabbath school, which is attended by men, women and children, all seeming interested and attentive.

"Although the work among the Freedmen in Texas was commenced but about one year ago, much has been accomplished in that time. There are schools in all the more important places, and in many of the smaller towns, and I have been told that there are now as many pupils attending school in the city of Houston, as there were in the whole state of Texas last December.

"While in Galveston, I visited the schools there, all of which are very interesting. I think there are students in their most advanced department, that will be well qualified to teach good schools by the close of the coming year. I have always been taught to abhor slavery, but never, until I came among its victims, did I know anything of the blasting effects of that system; and the more I became acquainted with these people, the more do I realize the great work that is to be accomplished before their souls are brought from natural darkness into the marvelous light of God's truth. Their ideas of life, its sacredness or true purpose, are exceedingly limited. They need instruction in everything."

About the same time, Miss Foster wrote from Houston:

"Last Friday Miss D. and myself left our schools in charge of our assistants. and took a trip to Galveston, returning on Monday; and I must tell you what wonders reconstruction is working.

"On the Sabbath we were quite surprised by citizens coming into the colored Sabbath school, conducted by our teachers there, and asking the privilege of making some remarks. One of them complimented the noble efforts of the teachers; said they equalled those of Judson or Harriet Newell, and then told the scholars that they (the citizens) wanted to do something for the Freedmen too, and they would start a Sabbath school the next Sabbath afternoon, to be conducted entirely by the citizens, several ladies having volunteered to assist. This gentleman walked with the teachers from the church, and one of them asked him the origin of the movement. He replied, 'We think it sight.' Whereupon she asked, 'Is there not some other reason that influences you?' The reply was, 'W-e-ll, y-e-s, I suppose it might be traced down to the suffrage cuestion.'

"Last week, one of the prominent rebel ladies, who, when we first came here, explained that we were poor whites come down here to teach for a living, sent us word that Judge —— and lady (the latter herself) would call upon the ladies soon!"

Our State Agent, Mr. D. S. Allen, has explored almost the entire State, and if the embarrassements, which have existed heretofore, continue to give way, a very satisfactory work may be done next year.

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

No survey of the work among the Freedmen for the year would be complete that did not distinctly refer to this Bureau. It has protected, encouraged and aided the Freedmen in their march through the wilderness. It has expended, liberally and wisely, the large sums at its disposal, in relieving suffering, fostering industry, and facilitating education. It has shielded and assisted the laborers sent forth by Northern benevolent societies; and this Association acknowledges with gratitude its manifold obligations to the Commissioner, General O. O. Howard, for hearty sympathy, Christian courtesy and executive efficiency. Our acknowledgements are also tendered to his numerous assistants throughout the South.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

We take pleasure in chronicling the ready liberality of this noble Society, in granting the Bibles and Testaments needed for distribution by our teachers and missionaries among the Freedmen. It has enabled us constantly to dispense the Manna and the Water of life to these hungry multitudes. No boon has been more highly prized by them, none has been given more gladly by the teachers, none has tended more to the comfort of the Freedmen in discouragement, none has more gladdened their homes and hearts, and none has been more efficient in their elevation. Nine thousand, five hundred and eighty copies of the Scriptures or parts of them have thus been donated by the Bible Society.

The Foreign Missionary operations of the Association have been diminished rather than increased during the last few years. The Committee believe, however, that as very marked providences led to their commencement, so they still indicate the duty of continuing them. They fully realize the pre-eminent importance of the new work to which they have been clearly called among the Freedmen; but in the dispensations of Providence they seem to hear the Master's voice, saying, This "ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone," thus calling for an enlargement of zeal, and of sacrifice for His cause, and forbidding the abandonment of the ground occupied among the heathen.

The Foreign Missions are five, having 32 missionaries and assistant missionaries, of whom twelve are ordained ministers.

OJIBUE AND OTTOWA MISSION.

NORTHPORT, MICHIGAN.

Missionaries.-Rev. G. N. Smith, Mrs. Smith.

The field occupied by this mission and church embraces portions of the Ojibue and Ottawa tribes of Indians, and a small frontier white population. The condition of the church has been encouraging; it has received an accession of four native members during the year.

Mr. Smith says:

"Our members, generally, exhibit a decided growth in grace. I never had so much confidence that they will be enabled to combat successfully the temptations, and soares and trials that assail them, as I have at this present time. The crisis seems, in a measure, to be passed. I am growing confident that the Lord has wrought a lasting work among them. Our meetings have been well sustained—they are at all times serious and interesting.

"Our meetings at Northport and at the 'Head of the Harbor' continue about the same as formerly; nothing particulary marked, yet always such as to furnish good encouragement.

"Some of the Indian Bands, at a distance from Northport, are being moved by the influences going out from the Mission."

Rev. Charles C. Starbuck, whose re-appointment to the Jamaica Mission was reported last year, has taken charge of the church and station at Eliot. The reports from the six churches and stations of the missions indicate a very encouraging degree of prosperity, though the pastors lament the necessity there has been of cutting off a few of their members, and the failure of the people to contribute as they have sometimes done, to the support of their religious institutions.

Rev. Mr. Thompson reports of the Brainerd Church:

"Notwithstanding the loss of 18 members, our ranks have been thickened up a little; for this we are thankful; thankful for every soul brought to Jesus. But the net increase of eleven falls far short of what it ought to be, and bears but a small proportion to the increase of population.

"Our prayer meetings are well attended, and we enjoy the presence of God with us. The business of the church is attended to without the least difficulty, and often with harmony and love."

At another time he wrote:

"So far as I can judge there has been a feeling of joy and gladness through the Church. We can truly say, 'The Lord has done great things for us, where-of we are glad.'"

From Brandon Hill, Mr. Wilson reports:

"There has been manifested considerable religious interest in the church and community during the year. I think there has been more real interest manifested in religious things than there has been during any other year I have been here; not even the year of the great revival excepted. We have had a large inquiry class, numbering over 20 members, the greater part of which, I presume, we would have been safe in receiving into the church before this. Still we deem it best to be cautious in receiving members into the church. We have however, added eleven members to the church, nine on the profession of their faith, and restored two. On the other hand we have had to cut off but two. This is very good for Jamaica.

"The Sabbath school is well attended, and there is considerable religious interest among the children in it. Some of the young people that we received "The contributions of the church, considering the fact that their taxes for the government have been considerably increased, and that they have had pretty hard times, have been fulf good. * * * I know that several members of the church have made as great sacrifices as they knew how to make, for the chapel and toward the support of their minister.

"On the whole it has been a pleasant year with us at Brandon Hill: we can truly say that God has blessed and prospered us."

AT CHESTERFIELD, there have been 13 additions to the church on profession of faith, and, Mr. Venning wrote, with much satisfaction, of encouragement in the work. The Sabbath School was increasing, the church exerting a good influence, and the members more than ever before concerned to bring up their families in a godly way. The shocking degradation of character in the people generally, and the want of intelligence and depth in the religion of the members of the church still give the mission sore uneasiness and sometimes distress.

Rev. Mr. Starbuck, at Eliot, is greatly encouraged by the marked superiority of the second generation of those born free; to the first.

"The young people show a steadiness, an attention to religion, a desire for self-improvement, such as was not shown by those of their age ten years ago. They exhibit, also, manliness, without insolence, and respectfulness, without servility, a combination I had almost despaired of seeing in any large measure. Bro. Thompson's long labors here, certainly justify themselves by so gratifying a result, long after he is gone. Yet (he says) even the young people are far from showing the activity we wish. They lean heavily on their missionaries

To the little church at PROVIDENCE the year has been a trying one; only four members have been added to the church, and five cut off. Mr. Wilson, however, speaks very highly of the steadfast Christian character of some of the members, as hardly surpassed in Jamaica.

AT RICHMOND, a new church was organized January 9th, by a council convened for that purpose. Besides the churches of our mission, a Presbyterian church and a Wesleyan society were represented. The church was constituted with five members, but has since doubled the number. The expediency of this movement is already manifest by its results on the surrounding population.

Mr. Wolcott reports the Industrial School at Richmond, as having had 30 names on the roll last term, with an average attendance of 25. The following extract, relative to this school, is taken from a pamphlet entitled "England and her subject Races." It will show the importance of the enterprise, as estimated by others:

"What is wanted is an education that would make intelligent laborers and useful citizens, and no system seems so likely to accomplish this object as industrial schools where learning and labor should be taught together. Such a system of education would not only have the advantage of economy of expense, system of education would not only have the advantage of economy of expense, by contributing considerably towards its own support, but it would tend to remove the idea of disgrace which, in Jamaica, is attached to the field labor, and make it respectable in the eyes of the people. It would also accustom them to the use of better implements of agriculture, as well as improved and more scientific methods of cultivation, which could not but exert a beneficial influence on the prosperity of the island. There is at present one institution of this description, established in the parish of Metcalfe by the Agent of the American Missionary Society (Association) in which not only agriculture is carried on to a considerable extent, but other useful trades. This valuable institution * * * is, to a considerable extent, self-supporting; * * * its influences are seen for miles round, in the superior intelligence of the people, their improved methods of cultivation, and general good conduct."

On the whole, there is a brightening aspect of affairs in relation to the emancipation in Jamaica. Enough that is dark and degraded still remains, but there are indications of greater good, and it is thought that the mass of the people, in all the religious bodies, are manifesting increasing confidence and good-will towards those in authority, and those who are over them in the Lord, and that on the part of the upper classes, there is a more wide-spread feeling that the Island must be governed for the good of all. These things, with an improved religious feeling, are promises of good.

AFRICA.-MENDI MISSION. STATIONS AND OUT-STATIONS.

Good Hope, (Sherbro,) Avery, Bonthe, Läwäna, (Boom River.)

MISSIONARIES-

Rev. G. P. Claffin, Mr. D. W. Burton, Mrs. Claffin, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Mair.

NATIVE ASSISTANTS: Rev. G. N. Jewett, Daniel During.

MONROVIA MISSIONARY: Rev. G. W. Gibson.

The Mendi Mission is suffering greatly for want of additional help. Two ordained missionaries and their wives, should be sent out without delay. Pleas from the mission for help have been published recently in the "American Missionary," but the desired responses have not yet been received.

When Mr. Burton was last in this country, he presented to a few friends the idea of the erection of a saw-mill at one of the mission stations, as a benefit to the mission, and, having received special contributions for this purpose, he carried out the necessary machinery with him. In July he wrote that the mill was in operation, near Avery, and likely to be of great advantage.

At Läwäna Mr. Claffin has been engaged in printing the Gospel by Matthew, in the Mendi language. As he has had no assistance except of a young man taught at the mission, the progress has been slow. In June, however, he wrote that a few chapters only remained to be printed, and that the first class in the Mendi school at Läwäna were beginning to read in it. The school was a small one, but it afforded a nucleus about which many persons gathered. The leading chief had endeavored, by authority, to break up the school, but failed.

In January last, Mr. and Mrs. Claffin were afflicted by the death of their only child with them, aged about 3 years and 7 months.

The latest letters from the Mission still plead for more help. July 12th, Mr. Burton wrote:

many of her best sons and daughters to teach the pure Word of life. * * * There are here millions of people for whom Christ died, who are going down to death, without any knowledge of such a Saviour; and the work of making known to them the great salvation has been given to the Church. It is not the duty of all Christians to go to the heathen; but it is the duty of all to be engaged, in some way, in helping forward the work. I feel sure there is no other way so certain to bring down a blessing upon the church at home, as to eugage heartily in sending the Gospel to the heathen. We need help immediately, but where are the laborers? * * * There are in Sherbro about thirty white men engaged in trade, and when others are needed, there is no difficulty in finding them. * * * Will Christians refuse to come for a much nobler work and better pay, because the climate is sickly and the sacrifice great! If Jesus had reasoned thus, the price of our redemption would never have been paid."

A few days later, Mr. Claffin reiterated this appeal:

"I had hoped that ere this our number of laborers would have been increased. * * * The country is as open as it will be likely to be for years to come, and a missionary would be welcomed at almost every point, not for the truth's sake, but from motives which would secure him access to the people with the truth."

During the year, the Executive Committee have undertaken the partial support of an Episcopal Missionary, Rev. G. W. Gibson, in Monrovia, The means for doing so are derived from the Avery Fund. The first quarterly report of Mr. Gibson says:

"My field of operation is Monrovia, a town of about 2000 Americo-Liberians and about 500 Congoes, or recaptured Africans. Within a few miles are several small native villages and settlements of Congoes. Since I have been at this station my labors have been chiefly confined to Monrovia, with occasional services at some of the villages during the week. I have now arranged for stated services at two of the villages.

"The congregation of Trinity church has increased considerably during the past few months, and ten communicants have been added during that time. The Sabbath school, numbering seventy-five scholars, is well attended, and has ten teachers. The day school, in which are forty pupils, has been kept in regular operation. Reading, writing, geography, arithmetic, grammar, history, composition are the branches taught, with the study of the Scriptures."

In July, he wrote:

"I have opened regular Sabbath services in a Kroo-town near Monrovia, which is well attended. * * It is gratifying to observe that no little interest is manifested on the part of several, and an earnest desire to learn to read and write expressed. * * * Would that some benevolent heart would be opened to furnish a salary of two hundred and fifty dollars annually, to sustain a day school in that native village."

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

From the annual statement made by Rev. J, S. Green, May 7th, 1867, we extract the following:

Makawao Proper—One station, with several out-places for occasional meetings, one church, Congregational, stone meeting house.

Rev. J. S. Green, Pastor, Mrs. A. C. S. Green, Rev. J. P. Green, Mrs. Hattie Green, Miss M. E. Green, Assistants.

Deacons. Kekua and Maliike. P. Nui, S. Sc. Supt. Nativehelpers, Kalawe, Kekahuna, Nakahawai and Kaili.

[&]quot;I think America owes a debt to Africa, that must be paid by sending here

"In 1857, I reported 1022 individuals from Huelo to Keokea, whose names I had recorded as admitted to the church. It is difficult to determine the standing, or residence of many of these. * In 1860, I reported 300 as the number admitted to the church at Makawao up to that time. Fifty have been added since, making a total of 350, whom I can truly say I admitted to that church with care, and an earnest desire to present them to the Masta, at the final day, as those whom He had given me. To the once Union church of Hamakus, Makawao and Kula, I have admitted more than 1,100 members, but I cannot, with the aid of my most intelligent native brethren, account for all these professed disciples, even at Makawao."

Mr. Green presents the following as the statistics of the church at Makawao.

| | Whole number admitted from its organization in 1843 | .350 | |
|---|---|------|--|
| ١ | Whole number deceased | | |
| | Removed to other places 50 | | |
| | Excommunicated and suspended 75 | | |
| | | 275 | |
| | Number left in good standing | 75 | |

None have been received into the church this year, though two stood propounded, and several others had made applications.

Among his trials, Mr. Green reports the continued decrease of the Hawaiian race. He says:

"The census shows a decrease on the group, from 1860 to 1866 (six years.) of 8,901, leaving 62.939, as the inhabitants remaining, of whom less than 59,000 are Hawaiians. I fear the present number thus indicated is too large. I am quite sure that the decrease in my field is much greater than the census shows. Kookea and vicinity are greatly reduced, as the people there are allowed neither to purchase land nor to cut wood for selling. In traveling through Keokea and Kamaole, the solitude is painful.

In his own field, he says, the births have been few, and the deaths many. Among the latter was one of his native assistants, a man remarkable for simple-hearted piety, a peace-maker, and of extraordinary tact in influencing men.

The pecuniary and physical condition of the Islanders is represented as very discouraging. "Native food," he says, "is very scarce," and there is as near a universal famine at the Islands as he had ever seen.

Our expenditure for this mission has been only $302,62.

SIAM MISSION.

MISSIONARIES.

Rev. D. B. Bradley, Mrs. Bradley, Mr. George Graham, Assistant.

An appropriation of $500 has been made to this mission by the American Bible Society, but not yet expended. It is to be used in printing translations of the Sacred Scriptures in Siam, made by Dr. Bradley, and approved by the missions there.

No additions have been reported to the church at our mission. Dr. Bradley, says at one time:

"Some of our native church members appear to be a good deal revived, and are holding daily prayer meetings every evening by themselves, without any lead or direction from us. One young man among our Siamese compositors is quite serious, and thinks he loves Jesus. Our brethren of the Prest. Mission have received to their church some five or six persons since the year came in, who were connected with their school, and their native church is still in a revived state. The prospects of positive success in our missionary work among the Siamese is manifestly brightening."

The cost of sustaining this mission the past year has been $3,075,30, of which only $294 have been taken from our treasury, the rest coming from the earnings of the mission.

CONCLUSION.

The Committee would draw to a close its extended Report. The year under review has been marked by some anxieties, many labors and abundant blessings. The benefits of the year's toil have been immediate and far-reaching. The Association, by its many faithful laborers, has wiped away many tears, brought relief to many humble homes, and saved many human beings from perishing with cold and hunger; it has opened the day-school to multitudes of eager and receptive young minds, and the night-school to the patient application of adults: it has instructed many citizens in the high responsibility and right use of the suddenly-acquired elective franchise, and it has forewarned and forearmed them against the insidious approach of Intemperance; it has carried the Bible into the houses, and read its pages to the ignorant but gladdened inmates, applying its consolations to the hearts and its precepts to the conscience, and to the daily duties of life; in the Sunday and night schools it has taught many to read that Book for themselves, who have sought this boon with ardent prayers, and repaid it with tearful thanksgiving. It has sent to the people of God the enlightened minister of the Gospel, who has instructed them in the way of the Lord more perfectly, and it has preached the truth to the sinner, and beheld his joy as he has been pointed "to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

Thus blessed have been the immediate results of its labors. But the remote effects, less obvious now, are really more important. These effects pertain to our country and to Africa.

The Freedmen hold in their hands, measurably, the fate of our country. Ten States will soon return to the Union, and two-thirds of their voters, white and colored, cannot read the ballots they will cast! The elective franchise works neither by magic nor machinery. The voter must be intelligent and conscientious. Intelligent suffrage is not sufficient. The worst of men are sometimes educated. The Freedmen must have cultivated moral natures to guide them in the right use of the ballot, and to save them from becoming the dupes of demagogues.

The condition of the colored man has determined, and will de-successive and application of the company of the co

Rus villages to program of the recommendation and publication

termine the condition of the poor whites. While the one was a slave, labor was the badge of degradation, and the white man would not work. If the colored man becomes an intelligent, prosperous and respected citizen, the poor white will follow him into the field and workshop, into the school and church. To educate intellectually and religiously the black, is to educate also the white, and the education and elevation of both is the demand of the hour, the duty of the nation and the requirement of Ged.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL REPORT.

The influence of the Freedmen on Africa is remote, but certain. It requires no great stretch of imagination to realize that ships will re-cross the Atlantic, bearing back the descendents of Africa to the home of their ancestors—that the waves that once heard the wail from the slave-ship, will yet re-echo the song, the psalm and the prayer of those descendents, cultured and Christianized, who will return to transform the jungle into the productive field, and replace the rude hut with the pleasant dwelling, the heathen temple with the school-honse and the church, and barbarism with empire and Christian civilization!

With such a field of labor in America, from which we have already gathered such clusters of Eschol, and with the prospect of such abundant harvests yet to be gained by future toil here and in Africa, and with the added sheaves which our self-denying and useful missionaries are reaping in Siam, Africa, the West Indies, the Sandwich Islands, and among the aborigines of this land, shall we not toil on with increasing ardor and hope, looking to the Lord of the harvest to crown our labors with his rich blessings?

APPENDIX.

WILL OF REV. CHARLES AVERY.

The will of Rev. Charles Avery, deceased, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, dated September 14th, 1857, provided, that "the residue of his estate," after the payment of certain specific bequests, should be divided into two equal portions, one of which should "be set apart and devoted as a perpetual fund for disseminating the light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and the blessings of Christian civilization amongst the benighted black and colored races of people inhabiting the continent of Africa." to be managed and applied under the direction of the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association.

During the nine years, since Mr. Avery's decease, and prior to our present fiscal year, advances in anticipation of settlement, amounting to $38,000, were made to the Association. The first actual division of the remainder has been ordered this year, and cash and bonds and mortgages to the amount of $85,842.60 have been made over to the Association. An unascertained balance is yet to be received. It will be seen that, by the terms of the legacy, only the income or increase thereof can be used, the principal is not to be exhausted.

The Trustees of the other moiety of the residuary portion of the estate, which is also to be a permanent fund, and the income applied to the education and elevation of the colored people of the United States and Canada, have appropriated $28,000 for the purchase of lands and buildings for permanent schools among the Freedmen, under the care of this Association. These are designed mainly for normal or training schools.

From all sources, the Treasurer of the Association reports the receipt and investment of $55,468 for permanent sites and buildings in the South for Freedmen's schools, and the balance of this sum ($27, 468) was in like manner, as the Avery fund, given specifically for this purpose, from both private and public sources, and has not diminished in the least the funds received for general purposes. It belongs to the educational work for the Freedmen, to be managed and used for this purpose under the direction of the American Missionary Association.

ANNUAL DISCOURSE,

By Rev, E. B. Webb, D.D., of Boston, Mass,

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore and teach all nations."—MATTHEW 28: part of the 18th and 19th verses.

On the border of Esdraelon—or the great battle-plain often wet with the blood, and strown with the bodies of contending armies,—southward from the Mount of Beatitudes, and six miles east from Nazareth, rises Mount Tabor.

Tabor is a beautiful mountain, covered with a forest or groves of oak, and abounding in grasses and flowers. Climbing to the summit by an easy path from the North, North West, one stands, it is said upon a level oblong plain. The prospect is "very extensive and beautiful, and glorious." To the North one looks off toward Lebanon, whose lofty peaks are covered with perpetual snow. From the North West, and round the South West, (Volume 3, Robinson, 215,) snatches of the Great Sea are seen. To the South the whole land is before you, and one looks down the deep valley of the Jordan, even so far as the waters of the Dead Sea, some think; while to the East is the beautiful Lake of Gennesaret, with its fertile surroundings, and beyond, the sandy plateau and arid desert. Upon this mountain, it is generally believed, Jesus met his disciples, according to appointment, after his resurrection. "Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into the mountain where Jesus had appointed them."

Nor these alone, but probably five hundred beside were there to pay him their homage and receive his commission. Paul says, that "he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once."

When he came into the world his own nation rejected him: what Herod conceived, the Jews accomplished. But, risen from the dead, 'all power is mine," he said: "Go, therefore," go through the land. of promise, go to the bounds of the far distant horizon—go ye therefore, and teach, disciple, Christianize all the nations; and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

As the tried and loyal citizens of a vast and victorious government, we possess great power—political, commercial, moral power—and the rights of the victor, for which we are responsible.

First.—Let us mark, Christian brethren, for it is worthy of our best attention—in opening our text, let us mark, first of all, that we have here the true and sublime use of power. Here are two things—first, the greatness of the benevolence; SECOND, and the grandeur of the conception. First, the greatness of the benevolence. Men may be gentle and conciliatory while poor and powerless. The heir is teachable in spirit and courteous in manner while in his minority. But wealth makes him arrogant and selfish. The soldier is thoughtful and sympathizing while he serves in the ranks. But the sceptre falling into his hands, suddenly he is transformed; his enemies must go to the dungeon or the scaffold, and all people must endorse and praise his arbitrary acts. "All power is given unto me"—the world may well pause, and every man hold his breath till the sequence of that promise is announced.

Where are the friends of Jesus? Now is the hour of their triumph! Where are the enemies of Jesus—the priest that excited the mob to crucify him—the mob that controlled the Jewish court, and forced the judges to utter sentence against him innocent—the nation that despised and rejected him when he came as a servant—where are his enemies? Now He will hurl sudden vengeance upon their guilty heads and sweep them away in his wrath, as fire licks up the stubble in the field.

"All power is in his hands;"—unlimited, omnipotent, he will remember the vile indignities which were heaped upon him; he will repay the malignant hatred which hunted him from the manger to the cross, satisfied with nothing except his blood! No. The angels sang over the plains of Bethlehem, "good-will toward men," and that strain is to be prolonged. From the top of the mountain away towards the open grave floats the clear rich note. "Go, teach the nations."

How sublime is the benevolence of this commission! To see Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration was a sight of overwhelming splendor! To see the stone rolled from the door of his tomb, and the door opened by an unseen hand, and the cold form begin to stir with a Divine light—that was a sight that might fill the stoutest heart with amazement. But to see Jesus standing upon the mountain, suggesting the hight to which his throne is to be exalted—and five hundred disciples bowing down before him, a band of captives prophesying victories, assured and unnumbered; to see Jesus, clothed now with the prerogatives of Almighty power, forgetting the ingratitude of his kindred, and forgiving the murderous cruelty of which he still bore the marks in his hands and his feet, organizing his followers and inspiring them for the work of reaching and quickening and redeeming the nations,—this is as sublime as his transfiguration or his resurrection from the dead. This is a magnanimity of benevolence which cannot but kindle the admiration of every reflecting mind.

Second .- Nor, in the second place, is the conception of such a work much less grand. Here they are upon a mountain in Galilee-a disciple-band without power; without wealth; without visible means of support:-unarmed to go forth among enemies; ignorant to go. forth among the learned; and the nations of the earth are to be visited, and gathered together, and schooled and lifted up. There are no boundaries at which the weary foot may stop-no barriers of darkness, or ignorance, or prejudice or sin from which the disciple acquitted may turn back. And there is to be but one theme-one lesson-one gospel-the same for Jew and Greek; for king and subject: for black and white. And what if they will not hear-what if they mock and oppose? What if Herod with a tyrant threat and a hand of power enjoins silence in this cause? There is nothing new provided-no varying of the instrument-no varying of the method. The commission is still the same; "Go, teach!" And what if the priests of a corrupt and established religion rise up and imprison the teacher? "Go, teach!" And what if the people cut to the heart by the truth, take counsel how they may slay the teacher? "Go, teach!" Jesus Christ makes no provision for retreat, nor for change of method, nor for change of orders. The world is to be revolutionized by the power of Christian truth. Empires are to be subverted by the might of the gospel, as the sun subverts the power of frost in our northern latitudes; intelligence and virtue are to appear as foliage and flowers and fruits that rise up to meet the Spring at her coming, and the reign of darkness is gradually to give place, through lengthening days, to a Sun that shall never set. These disciples, few and feeble, are teachers: the nations, learned and strong and wilful, are scholars: the world, confirmed in evil, must be taught and turned from enemies to friends; from sin and self to truth and Christ. And that commission, "Go, teach," aims at nothing less-aims at nothing less than the overturning and restoration of the whole round earth, though the teachers be so weak, and the truth so unvaried and uncompromising. Never was there a conception so grand, and never anything so arresting and inspiring, except the benevolence which originated the design and guarantees its success. To fulfill this commission is the aim of this society. With some humble appreciation of the benevolence and the grandeur of the commission, this is the work to which it is committed—"Teaching the nations," committed by the unexpected course and events of Providence, especially, and immediately to the teaching of the black and the white races dwelling together in our country. Let us emphasize it, repeating the very words of the Lord, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you;" and it is well for us occasionally to stir up our hearts and inflame our zeal by a reconsideration of this matter. We are not likely to overestimate the vast and vital interests which are involved in this particular missionary work.

I. Because it involves, in the first place, the thorough instruction, the practical elevation, and the slow but successful Christianizing of the individuals. It is the evil of Slavery that it blights and blasts the soul. It imposes unrequited toil. It saps the life of those who are free from its bonds. It brings down the whole community towards the low level of its degradation. But the primary curse is upon the mind. The very conditions of its existence are ignorance, mental darkness and degradation. No wonder, therefore, that the freedmen are low, and immoral and brutish. But, now, ransomed outwardly by the hand of a victorious government, they are to be instructed. elevated and saved by the holy endeavors of an obedient church. They are to be raised up from their wallowing to a state of intellectual and virtuous manhood: their brutish and broken gibberish is to be exchanged for the language in which Milton wrote of States and a Christian Commonwealth-in which John Robinson praved on the shores of Old England-in which the Pilgrims sang on the shores of New England,

"And the stars heard, and the sea."

Their miscellaneous herding together must give place to a correct knowledge, and a consecrated enjoyment of the Christian family, their fear of the lash to a just appreciation of the rights and responsibilities of citizens. And, in their religious assemblies their grotesque exhibitions of animal emotions must give place to a perception and a piety which worships God in spirit and in truth. "For the Father seeketh such to worship him." And how shall this radical change, this physical, mental, moral and spiritual transformation be wrought? The answer is, by a three-fold application of the doctrines and precepts of the gospel to the intellect, the affections, and the will of the individual man.

I. And, first, the intellect or understanding must be instructed This is a simple statement and is sometimes interpreted very narrowly. But it comprehends something more than teaching faith in the atonement, precious and vital as that truth is. It implies something more than asking pardon of God in prayer, and offering praise in hymns. Men, are indeed, to trust in Christ and pray and sing. But the gospel is a broad, deep, pervasive, comprehensive system of truth and duty:-deep and subtile, (if I may use the word in a good sense,)deep and subtile as the purposes and motives of the human mind :penetrating with a divine warrant all the secret chambers of thought and desire, and claiming to control them; -comprehending all man's relations to God, as Creator, Lawgiver, Sovereign, Judge, and all his relations to his fellow men-to the family-to society-to civil government and the church; we say, the gospel is an all pervasive, and all-comprehensive system of truth and duty. And, withal, it is a system so articulated and symmetrical, that to teach a part and omit a part, is not only to mar its divine beauty, but to mangle its form and life. A slave may be a Christian-that is, exercise true faith in Christ-it is possible as some have assumed, and yet steal, and lie and commit adultery. He has no just appreciation of the relations which necessitate truth and purity; he has never been taught; his intellectual perceptions are blind. When we speak, therefore, of instructing the Freedmen in the gospel, we do not mean to stop with the appeals and exhortations of one ignorant man. We do not mean to give them a religion which looks only to the Sabbath and the sanctuary. We do not mean to instruct merely in the things of faith and love When God undertook to rescue and redeem the bondmen of Egypt there was nothing narrow, or cheap or fragmentary in his teaching. The great fundamental principles of the system were put at the bottom. The great saving truths were put first. But the inferences and details were almost numberless. And the Divine seal and signature set to the gospel is found in its marvellous adaptation and adequacy to the condition of all men, high and low, civilized and savage. It suits and satisfies the mental capacity of those who stand upon the highest points of a proud civilization. It soothes the griefs andawakens the hopes, and arouses the thoughts of the degraded and down-trodden also. For, besides this adaptation, there is a peculiar affinity between the divine teachings and the constitutional instincts of the soul. Men grope after them in darkness, and instinctively build their altars "to the unknown God." And when these truths are revealed, men are arrested by them, and compelled to struggle with them even when they disown their authority. The African is no exception to the general rule. Degraded through generations of servitude, he still feels the power of the mystery-God manifest in the flesh. Covered with filth and trodden down into the very mire of the earth, there is something in him, which, when the Cross is presented, responds to its drawing power. The truths of nature are ennobling, but the truths of the gospel far more ennobling even to the intellect.

The sun is bright, but Christ, the light to lighten the Gentiles, fills a horizon as much beyond the material heavens, as the dome of the firmament is above the dome of St. Peter's. And this mysterious affinity between these divine truths and the human soul, secures, as nothing else can secure, the interest and action of the intellect. And action secures elevation, discipline and development. These truths coming from beyond the farthest stars, and appealing to the deepest instincts of the soul, stimulate and task the power of thought. And these doctrines of God and immortality, guilt and mercy being once fairly lodged in the mind, diligent and systematic teaching cannot fail to show and secure the passive and practical application of them to every relation in life. The thought of accountability for all one's outward conduct and for all one's inward motives, is scarcely less arresting and profoundly quickening than the thought of God's eternity and omnipotence. Nothing stirs all the powers of reason—nothing quickens, expands and impresses the intellect like the word and truth of God.

II. But man is not reason and understanding alone. He is a creature of affection also. To reach and perfect his affections is a work of prime necessity. A man sustains a true relation to his fellow man. A man enters the kingdom of heaven only when his heart is right in the sight of God. How, the question is, how shall his heart be reached, and his wild, gross affections be reclaimed and purified? By instructing him in the gospel of Christ. To awaken love, men must be approached with love, as to awaken the emotion of pity the object of pity must be presented. And, just here, the gospel which is to be preached, transcends everything else. Nature, in her mysterious workings and beneficent results, may excite in us admiration and interest, not love. And surely false religious fail utterly at this point. Jupiter excites no love, but rather disgust and loathing. Bacchus is a brute and awakens in us only that which is brutish. But in the gospel, God is presented to our hearts. He is clothed with a garment whose immeasured folds are dazzling brightness, or clouds and darkness are his pavilion; he fills and overwhelms us with a sense of awe and majesty, but at the same time the Father, loving and gentle, shines through all. Nothing can excel the tenderness and compassion with which he seeks to win and assure the confidence of his creatures. And so, by every full exhibition of his attributes, our affections are touched, and our love called forth. And certainly there is nothing in all the universe-nothing ever conceived or conceivable by the human imagination-so perfectly adapted to arouse and call forth all the heart's energy and strength of love, as the person and sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Here is love self-moved, spontaneous and beyond degree; love working for our spiritual endowment through eternal years. And, as we respond to the love of God, and the mercy of God in Christ, the tendency is to become assimilated to the Divine character, and to become partakers of the divine purposes. And not only is there this provision for infinite progress upward, but for almost unlimited expansion abroad. Not only our relations to God and Christ and the Holy Ghost are brought into view, but all our earthly relations are at the same time embraced, and the love and authority of God made the motive for fulfilling the obligations growing out of them. We are to be perfect because our Father in Heaven is perfect. We are to hold the family sacred because this same God has established it. We are to obey the government because the same God has ordained it. We are to do as we would be done by because Jesus commands it. We are to love one another because God loves us, and to forgive one another as we hope to be forgiven. And thus, while the gospel provides that the heart be changed from glory to glory into the very image and likeness of the Lord, every relation in life is covered and warmed as in the light of the sun, and every duty performed out of regard to Him that loved us and gave himself for us. The heart is just in a condition to receive and obey all things whatsoever the Lord has commanded when it is subdued and animated by the love of God towards us. And for this reclaiming and ennobling of the affection, nothing can equal the gospel.

III. And then, further, the will must be reached, restrained and governed. And how is this to be done except as the understanding is quickened and the affections enlisted? Here again the wisdom of that great commission is manifest. Already we have two long steps towards this end. If the whole aim of the gospel had been to control the "will" alone, nothing could have been more perfectly devised. The "will" being instructed and enlightened through the intellect must be reached and constrained by motives, thoughts, and affections, and the greater the motive the surer the control. But what motive can compare with the doctrines, commands, and rewards of the gospel? God present, witnessing my acts, reading my thoughts. judging my motives; a just and holy law thrown over my life to which I am amenable for every moral act, and idle word; a book of record, in which all the deeds of daily life are written; a final judgment with its amazing, its infinite and eternal sanctions!-how is it possible to teach these truths, and to teach them in all their wide application to human life, and human avocations, and human society and not control every impulse and emotion of man's inmost being? How is it possible to ply man with these truths and teachings, and not succeed in giving them thorough instruction and practical elevation, and a heavenward life? The Freedman is to be quickened intellectually, is to be regenerated morally, is to be restrained from evil habits, and hereditary degradation, is to be lifted to a higher plain, is to be controlled in his self-determinations, is to possess and enjoy and exhibit a true Christian manhood. The sinner is to be saved; the gospel of Christ is the power teaching its doctrines and precepts, the method of applying it is the mission of God. Here is the power of God unto salvation, temporal and eternal. Let us welcome all material helps and helpers; let us welcome all social reforms and reformers, and all philanthropists and philanthropic workers; but let us do the work which Christ bids us do: "Go, teach the nations." The benevolence of the gospel is divine; the end to be accomplished by it great and glorious; the wisdom and success of its methods beyond question or improvement.

II. Again, in the second place, to pass from the individual to his social and civil relations, we are not likely to over-estimate the importance of this commission, as carried out in this particular missionary work because it involves the foundations of our great American Republic. The world has seen monarchies and despotisms hoary with age. Our Republic is still young. Shall it live? That is the question. Other republics in ancient and modern times have had an ephemeral life, and disappeared. What is our hope of a better record? Greece looked up into a sky, to say the least, as fair as ours. Rome wielded a government as strong. France elected her President to rule over a country far more compact and homogeneous. There is nothing in the influence of the sky and stars above us upon which we can hang a hope of life better than theirs. There is nothing in our wide extent of territory to insure a prolonged existence. There is nothing in the majestic sweep of our rivers; nothing in the sublime trend of our mountains; nothing in the marvelous fertility of the prairies; nothing in the strange mixture of heterogeneous races; nothing in the earth beneath-us; nothing in the heavens above us, to warrant our expectation of permanance and perpetuity. True, we have freed the slaves, but it was by an act of violence, and not the result of happy growth, as when the child at school quits the Christian home, that he may reproduce and establish a Christian home of his own. Liberty, of itself, is no assurance of national life. The winds are free, but no man can count on their stability. The wild beasts are free, but peaceable society is not the result. And wild men are free, but a well-ordered government is not therefore to be expected. . Civilized peoples have burst into the unlimited conditions of civil freedom; and what frantic excesses have been perpetrated in the name of liberty! What anarchy and bloodshed stand charged to the account of liberty! Liberty of itself cannot secure national life.

Nor will our railroads, though they run east and west across the great rivers, and over the Rocky Mountains as thickly as they run north and south, covering the continent with a net work of iron, bind us to the enjoyment of a prolonged and prosperous life. A coat of mail cannot prevent the body from breaking out with boils, nor from burning with fever. No more can these swathing meshes of rail prevent natural decay or national dissolution.

Nor can we rely upon our system of free schools for the permanence and prosperity of the Republic. We are fast drifting away from the common school as it was established by the founders of the country. They not only established the college for the glory of Christ and the good of his church, but the common schools were organized for a religious end. Religion was the road to knowledge. Our Fathers said, "It being one chief project of Satah to keep men from the knowledge of the Scriptures, now therefore, to the end that learning may not be buried in the graves of our forefathers, in church and commonwealth, the Lord assisting our endeavors," we will ordain and establish schools in every township and plantation. And this they did, making the religious element primary, and prominent above all others. But now the Bible holds its place by sufferance in our common schools, and only waits a majority vote to be totally excluded, and thus they become a means of intellectual culture and quickening alone. They are of great worth still, but the Scriptures excluded ,the moral powers unschooled, the conscience dormant, or perverted, the understanding, or intellect alone disciplined and developed, no man can say whether the scholars will come forth to bless or curse the nation. Each one has a shining, sharpened axe put into his hand; shall he lift it up against an incoming error, and enemy, or against the foundation of the Government? Shall he strike for truth and right, or lead the hosts of darkness and crime against the mother that nursed him? Education severed from religion is a battery charged with grape and canister, and no assurance on whom it shall be turned! Education severed from religion is a magazine, into which a spark being thrown, the heavens may be darkened with the whirling fragments of commercial gains, and civil institutions. Education severed from religion constitutes no certain foundation upon which to rear the pillars of national permanence.

On what then shall we rely to save us, from the fate of so many other nations? What is there suited in character and subject, in strength with which to replenish and repair the sources of national life? The answer is found in the great commission—"Go, teach all nations." The doctrines and precepts of the Gospel, understood and received in their height, and breadth, and depth, and fulness, are our true and only hope.

It is the Christian religion incorporated into the elementary social and civil life of/this nation, that distinguishes it from the other nations of the earth. From this Divine source, the roots of our strength have been nourished. By its Holy light our progress has been guided, and here we must abide. Departure is death. The perspective of our future terminates suddenly, and in darkness, except as seen through the knowledge and practice of "whatsoever the Lord Jesus Christ has commanded." For, as the prophet says, "the nation and the kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."

It is conceded, on all hands, that national existence must rest upon national morality. Philosophy teaches this, and experience teaches this. But there is no national morality apart from religious principle.

Such is the testimony of history. A voice from the graves of nations in every land-a voice coming up from the half-buried mounds of our own country-a voice wafted from the east by the winds that sweep across the sea, proclaims no national morality apart from religious truth and teaching. Washington says, in the weighty words of his farewell address, "Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education, on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle." And President Hopkins in his Lowell Lectures says, "from the nature of the case, therefore. we might expect—what all experience shows has happened—that any attempt to separate this morality from this religion, and yet give it power, will be like the attempt to separate the branch from the parent stock, and yet cause it to live. We might expect, if we were ever to see a perfect morality coming up from the wilderness, of this world, that we would come, not walking alone, but leaning upon her Beloved." Love for country, therefore, as well as love for Christ, must impel us to give the pure, broad, divine religion of the New Testament to everybody who is to become a citizen in this land. Our fathers understood this, and hence their efforts, first of all, to provide for the religious instruction of the people. Religion is not the vine, but the vital strength of the vine, and morality the purple clusters that hang from the branches. Religion is the power behind the throne-religion is the imperial life of the brain, and morality the obedient action of the hands and feet. Our fathers saw it so, and founded the commonwealth upon the doctrines and precepts of religion accordingly. They saw, what all, who take time to think, must see, that our rights and duties, in social and civil life, spring primarily from our relation to God, and must be performed primarily out of regard to God. Children of the same family must meet their obligations to one another, out of regard to the common parent. The duties which we owe to one another, God has perscribed, and hence obedience to the government is obedience to God. And just because God is infinite and unchangeable, and the rewards which he bestows high as Heaven, and deep as hell, no motives to moral conduct, or right action, can be so great as those which are revealed to us in the gospel.

Greater than these, language cannot speak—greater than these, man cannot conceive. Everything else is inferior and insignificant in comparison—everything else has failed. Deprived of these teachings, the nations have grown weak and blind. Ignorant of these motives, the nations have become corrupt, and gone down to the dead. Instructed in the teachings and truths of the gospel, we have a foundation of hope. Saved as a nation, (if saved at all), we must be by this religion incorporated into the vital functions of our system, and made in the body politic, as the instinct of brain and heart. This is the foundation of the moral life and conduct, on which our national existence depends, and the foundation of our liberties is not different.

Our Fathers drew their liberty from the same source with their morality; from the principles and precepts of the gospel. The essential worth of man, as man, is a doctrine of Christianity; so, also, is his absolute freedom of conscience before God; so, also, is the doctrine of perfect equality in His sight. The king and his subject, the master and the slave, priest and layman, stand exactly alike before God-stand exactly alike before the cross-stand exactly alike in the church of Christ; all are brethren-sons of God, heirs with Christ. Concede these teachings, and equality, liberty and fraternity follow. It is not possible to recognize these higher relations and rights, without sooner or later recognizing all inferior ones. You may as well make a breach in the dam to draw off the top water only-once open the way, and every drop that goes through deepens and widens the channel for those that are to come after. All true and lasting freedom springs directly from the principles and precepts of the gospel. One of the first fruits of Pentecost was "to have all things in common," The revival of religion, through Luther's exertions, or the Great Reformation, shook the civil, as well as the ecclesiastical thrones of the world. Justification by faith, called the poor and the oppressed to stand side by side with the rich and the powerful.

The great rebellion, which has just been quelled in this country, was quelled not by the wisdom of statesmen, nor the skill of warriors, but by the strength of religious principle in the people. Wherever that command had been obeyed, "go, teach whatsoever I have commanded you," there was an unquenchable love of liberty, and a willingness to sacrifice all for the salvation of the nation. And, now, can any man doubt, marking how essentially and inseparably connected morality and liberty are with the principles and precepts of the Christian religion—can any man doubt the vast and vital interest which we have, as a people, in a large and liberal fulfillment of that commission, "Go, teach?" Our future lies involved in our obedience to this command. Do but consider for a moment how absolutely everything in this government depends upon the popular will. This may deepen and quicken our sense of the necessity of carrying the divine teachings through all parts of this land, into every house and heart. In other countries kings rule; in this country the people rule. In other lands, hereditary rights, or family interests, or established usage, may prop up a crumbling throne. Here, everything is as the majority will it. Now what is to govern, restrain, and guide the popular will? Not public opinion, for the popular will makes public opinion. Not law, for the popular will makes laws. Not armies, for the popular will makes political parties—in this country, the popular will is supreme.

And do but consider what is staked on the popular will. Our whole government, from top to bottom-our system of free-schoolsour system of national currency—the keeping faith with bond-holders, and stock-holders, at home and abroad, all this at the will of the majority. And the sacred endowments of colleges and churches, and benevolent institutions, the enjoyment of our Sabbaths and sanctuaries-the independence of the judiciary-the purity of the courts and the peace of the family-the perpetuity of just laws, and the abrogation of bad laws,-what is there that may not be changed, subverted, overthrown by the popular will! And what is to control this will? Nothing: absolutely nothing, expect the claims of Almighty God, and a sense of accountability to Him. Here we are, and all we hold dear in life, at the mercy of a majority vote! What is to control that vote and keep that popular will right, and true, and firm? Where is the standard even till we find it in theteachings of Christianity? We repeat, where is the motive strong enough—the motive towering above all selfishness, and the love of pleasure, and the greed of ambition,-to restrain, correct, and control this wayward, capricious and impulsive popular will? Unless the principles and truths of the Christian religion can be implanted in every mind; unless the eternal and unchanging claims of God's holy law can be impressed on every conscience; unless the rewards and retributions of eternity can be brought home to the hopes and fears of the immortal soul-have we any security for the present-have we any assurance for the future? Consider, also, for a moment, the influence which these ten states, where most of the Freedmen are to be found, are to have upon the destiny of the nation. These Freedmen, as a general thing, do not know the meaning of a ballot; much less have they any notion of accountability to God for its use : and the same is true of a majority of the white population also. Now, let these states, in the enjoyment of popular civil liberty, and controlled by such a population, be restored to a full share in the administration of all departments of the general government, and what security have we for right action; what assurance of just laws—what guarantee of fidelity to covenants? One only—the popular mind in all these states must be instructed in the broad truths and teachings of the gospel; the popular will must be taught to bow reverently and lovingly to the will of God; that is the alone foundation on which the pillars of our national permanence can stand. And the one motive, which shall be urged now in conclusion, for putting our hearts and our energies into this missionary work, is the prospective greatness of this nation, and its influence upon the other nations of the earth.

To study our past history, and then turn to estimate our future, from the data which it affords, is not only inspiring-it is almost appalling. England holds a high place among the actions. The records of her achievements fill a large alcove in every man's library. But we have several states and territories, any one of which is by some thousands of square miles larger than England; and we have within our borders all the resources, varied and exhaustless, needful for material prosperity and national greatness. All our interests, though incredible in value even now, are still in their infancy-agriculture, mining, commerce. England can be repeated twenty times in the great basin of the Mississippi, or twenty Englands packed away between the Atlantic coast and the Rocky Mountains. And not only is this great basin filling up with amazing rapidity, but already the slopes of the Rocky Mountains, and the great mineral plateau beyond, and the fertile coast of the far distant Pacific, are receiving an active and swiftly expanding population. We have in this country to-day only about thirty-eight millions; and yet, we are, in the providence of God, solving problems and performing wonders, physical, military, financial, moral and benevolent, which astonish the nations. If we keep up our present rate of increase the year nineteen hundred will see more than one hundred millions of people in this land. But let the proportion of increase for the last twenty years go on for a century, and nineteen hundred and sixty-seven will witness a population in the United States of America of more than six hundred millions, and some say of nearly a thousand millions, or a population approaching that of the entire globe to-day! The mind is appalled at the possibilities of such a nation. The Christian faints under the sense of responsibility which it imposes. What shall it be? What shall it do? What shall be its attitude towards Jesus Christ? Why just now, with our homes drained of their young men, drained to sustain a government established on the principle of the Christian religion, and to carry on a war which the history of the world can parallel but once or twice, not an interest in our broad domain suffered, not an enterprise lacked men to embark in it, not a field has been left unplanted, nor a harvest unreaped.

Not only were our gifts and charities sustained at home and abroad, but actually doubled—leaving out the magnificent gift of Peabody, and the enormous sums collected and disbursed by the Sanitary and the Christian Commissions—our religious charities were doubled. During the very years of our terrible and bloody strife, which one would think might have taxed to the full all our energies and endurance, more than seven millions of dollars were contributed to our universities, colleges, and higher seminaries alone,—more than seven millions to this one cause of education.

Now when we think of the nation thirty years, fifty years, a hundred years hence; the measure of its influence, the importance of its character, the power of its life, the imagination sinks down overwhelmed! Shall it be in covenant with God? Shall it wield its mighty resources for the advancement of the kingdom of heaven? What causes of division may spring up among us—what jealousy of races—what struggle of religions—what conflict of interests—what pride of sections—what ambition of parties—what mad designs of reckless leaders—what cause of internal dissention and self-destruction may spring up in the future, God only knows. But to prevent that which many fear, we must teach the people, we must preach in all its fulness, majesty, and power, the gospel unto every creature in this land.

To control the mighty developments of future years all the energies of our national life must be penetrated and permeated with the spirit of Christ.

One institution has been torn up, like a tree by the roots, others must be repressed, or cut off near the ground and grafted with scions taken from the garden of the Lord. We stand to-day by the springs that are to send their waters into the future, as Elisha did by the fountain at Jericho. We must cast in the prophet's salt: that will sweeten the waters, remove all barrenness and bless the land. The harvest of a hundred years is to be determined by our planting in this and the next generation. Oh, what a sublime opportunity is given us of this nation, to cover this land—to say nothing of other lands—to cover this whole land, from the Lakes to the Gulf, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific shore, with bright and golden sheaves. They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.

From Tabor's graceful summit comes the command, "Go, teach the nations whatsoever I have commanded you." From Plymouth Rock goes back an answer over the sea "In the name of God, Amen. "We whose names are underwritten * * having undertaken for the glory of God, and advancement of the Christian faith, * * to plant a colony * * do by these presents, solemnly and mutually * * covenant and combine * * for the furtherance of these ends." From Tabor comes the call, "Go, teach the nations," and from Yale and Harvard springs up the resolution, "that every student should be instructed that the main end of his life is to know God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent." Years roll on-eighteen hundred and forty-niné, still the voice from Tabor is heard. Eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, and as the people bind up their wounds, and furl their victorious banners, the voice, which was heard above all, and through all the din and roar of battle, is still heard sweeping down from Tabor's height, "Go, teach the nations," and we are here to lift up our answer, and, "send the gospel to those portions of our own and other countries that are destitute of it." And when we have finished our work, and rest from our labors, there will be other hearts to receive the great commission, and other true and loving disciples to obey the command, "All power is mine, go, teach the nations whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

Our Duty in Regard to the Americo-African Race.

WHEN Senator Seward, in describing the struggle between Christianity and slavery, uttered those winged words-"the irrepressibleconflict," we accepted them. They gave utterance to our deepest convictions; they gave vent to some of our profoundest feelings; they served to fix our most earnest purposes; they were the gauntlet thrown down at the feet of tyranny, the rallying cry of the friends of humanity. Not that we ever desired or delighted in antagonism or strife for its own sake; not that we desire or despise the enmity of any human being; but because we desire to have our brief life made subservient to God's highest purposes; to use our powers most effectually for his glory and the happiness of our race; to be found in eternal antagonism with wrong of every form. We now consider ourselves equally indebted to General Howard for another of those terse phrases, which may serve as banner mottos for the army of Freedom; it is a widely reaching phrase that reveals one great want of society; and describes the goal towards which nations have been urging their way through ages of darkness, oppression, revolt, and revolution. It involves this question-did God create the human race to be divided into two classes; the one, a caste of capitalists to luxuriate in his bounties; and the other, a caste of pariahs or laborers, to toil without hope for themselves, or the long generations to whom they shall give being? We have settled that question for ourselves; we understand the Creator to have settled it for mankind. We are confident it is not right nor expedient so to organize society that its advantages shall be artificially confined to any class; that, for instance, capital alone shall accumulate, but labor barely subsist. We utterly reject the spurious Christianity that fosters the aspirations of power, and condemns those of weakness; which teaches that the capitalist must own the laborer, and use him as we use brute power, or machinery, solely for the employer's advantage. Here, however, we must enter a protest and declare our disagreement with many true philanthropists and honest reformers; with all those who, while striving to become rich, are endeavoring to create a prejudice against the rich; with all who resort to mob-violence to secure a remedy for social evils; with all those who endeavor to regulate the price of labor by strikes and combinations; with all those who indiscriminately censure the individual capitalist for giving only the market price for labor; and finally with those who would employ legislation to determine the market prices of anything, whether merchandise, metallic currency, or labor, unless it be as a temporary expedient. It is manifest that human wisdom can never make a tariff of the price of labor that shall be always equitable and just.

And it no more diminishes our confidence in this general principle, that we cannot make such a tariff, determining precisely what proportion of the harvest belongs to the reaper, and what to the owner of the field, than it diminishes our confidence in the law of love, that we cannot tell in every case just what love to our neighbor requires. The point I am presenting to you may be thus stated; there is an immeasurable moral wrong, and an immense and ruinous social evil involved in a state's founding itself on the principle of unrequited labor. And this topic I discuss before you, because many are hoping to secure in the lately revolted States the re-inauguration of this exploded principle, changed in form, identical in essence; and because the opportunity now exists, through this and kindred associations, to prevent it by the most efficient policy, by applying the antagonist principle of educated labor. Let me then, for the moment, aid you in contemplating the immeasureable importance attached to the right treatment of the laborer, to our very theories of the relation he holds to the capitalist; and especially let me attempt to show that it is of vital importance that we, as a nation, adopt the truth on this subject-that we, by every honourable means in our power make the coloured laborer in the Southern States, as independent as the white laborer of those who are to own the soil, machinery, and working capital; nay, that he have full opportunity to become participator in such ownership. The general interests of the whole Republic demand it. If this people are to be henceforth, as they have been heretofore, mere beasts of burden; if capital is to own labor hereafter, in a large section of our Country, then we have been making an awful waste of blood and treasures. If capital is to make labor a badge of degredation, the gain of our grand victory is an illusion. The wedge that had begun to split asunder the magnificent structure of the Republic was nothing else than this very question. Our Country was not really classified into a Democratic and Federal party. It was not, as in Britain, the question of hereditary aristocracy that divided us, and endangered our peace and the permanence of our liberal Institutions. The corrupting, relentless, uncompromising leaven that caused our political fermentations, and threatened our political life was, simply the principle of uncompensated labor, adopted by three hundred and fifty thousand aristrocratic owners of human cattle, and from them accepted by millions, including a large portion of immigrants who lived by labor, and were cheated by the hollow title of "the Democracy." The conflict was irrepressible so long as there remained any conscience and enlightened patriotism in the free States; nay, so long as God should have one living representative of himself, his government, his truth, on earth. His empire is founded, not on Force, but on Right; and "every plant that my Father has not planted, shall be rooted up."

Rome's was the first kingdom founded on Power. Her mission was ended when the kingdom of Grace was established. This is a Christian Country. The men who founded it were moulded and shaped by the influences of Christian truth. And therefore, while even atheism may peacefully endure here in the life of individuals, Injustice and Wrong never can enter into the National life without exciting a perpetual struggle. The conflict must be irrepressible, or the nation perish. This Country never was, never can be at peace; our Institutions never can stand on a firm basis, until the question of the right of the Laborer to personal freedom is so settled among us, that no political party can again rally around it. Without attempting fully to demonstrate this position, I simply appeal to the entire history of the Republic to illustrate and confirm it. I fully believe also that the world has reached the period in which Society can no longer afford to retain in its bosom a class of serfs, of degraded laborers, living only an animal life. I fully believe that the advance of civilization demands a continual approach toward the law of love, which is the immutable law of every world God has made, and which has this as one of its demands; that labor shall have no artificial hindrances to its bringing as valuable returns to the laborer as capital brings to the capitalist; and that capital have no superiority to labor in the eyes of the law-makers.

The wonderful changes which the rebellion has produced, so opposite to all that demagogues promised the people of the Southern States, have made it impossible that even the former degree of tranquility and security can co-exist with the forced supremacy heretofore given to Capital over Labor. So that if forced and uncompensated labor was once a great evil, that evil would be greatly magnified by its existence in this country in its present condition. This question affects also and equally, our moral and social interests. No society of twelve million people can afford to have in its bosom two million women degraded almost to the condition of brutes, and one-third of the remaining female population crushed to hopeless poverty, and social ostracism for the sake of a clique of land-owners. Yet that was the condition of those States which had founded their political and social existence upon the principle of unrequited labor. Think, too, of one-third of all the families of a country annihilated by this detestable principle! And then, add to this, one half of that remainder, including the so-called "white trash" of the South, equally prevented from having the full benefit of the family, in the Christian sense. Think of the corruption of the employers and their sons, of the moral degradation of a majority of the entire population living in such an atmosphere, and you have, not a picture of the fancy, but the living, horrible results of this principle of forced labor. The laborer was trained by his circumstances to deception, lying, thieving, indolence, unmanly fear and servility; the owner, with very many gratifying exceptions, to violent passions, cruelty, self-will and unscrupulous grasping after power. The very religion of the laborer became extensively a religion without morality. 'I trust the picture is not overdrawn. The truth is dreadful enough.

There is another consideration we should notice in our inquiry after the importance of this question of unrequited labor. I mean its relations to the national wealth. In the island of Cuba recent investigations have brought to view the productive value of free and forced labor respectively. Of the former, $730 per head is the highest and $670 the lowest, while of the slave-labor $420 is the highest and $240 the lowest, giving these results; free labor gives $100 for every $47 of slave labor. But you need no instruction upon this point. It has been ably discussed, and the conclusion made manifest that while the slave system concentrated wealth in the hands of a few, the national growth was in fact checked by it. Traverse the magnificent valleys of Virginia, the Shenandoah and Kenawha, or the grand mountain ranges of the Alleghany in Tennessee, North Carolina and Georgia, and observe the slovenliness, neglect and waste of the vast treasures God has there deposited for the benefit of an entire nation and of the human race. You there see his curse on the institution whose genius is avarice, whose motto is unrecompensed labor. The Southern States to-day ought to be the richest whereas they are the poorest. Soil, climate, mineral treasures, navigable waters, all combine to give them the supremacy. But they have come out of a war which leaves the free States strong, and them exhausted and bankrupt; us paying our war debt, them unable to pay. Their financial state contrasted with ours exhibits to the world the difference in the results of free and forced, compensated and uncompensated labor. Their grand political error was the error of pride; the notion that accumulated capital is more respectable than honest, intelligent labor; that national strength consists, not in the industrious, but the wealthy class; not in skilful and intelligent industry, but in the mere possession of this power to employ forced labor. We find with much satisfaction, even the Richmond Inquirer now holding language like this, "What we want is fortunately now not so much laborers to be hired, as industrious and frugal farmers to settle on our own lands. We must repeat it, at the risk of dinning unwelcome news into the ears of our country friends, that there is no other salvation for Virginia, but the division of farms." Here is indicated one of the momentous and beneficial results of the war; Virginians are discovering that great plantations cultivated by unpaid laborers do not secure the highest degree of national wealth. Perhaps nothing in the condition of those sections of our country was more calculated to shake the confidence of honest planters in their favorite theory, for which they at length staked every earthly interest, than its unavoidable effect upon the non-landholding white people of the rural districts. This prevalent contempt for labor should have arrested their attention, and called it to the fact that it threw more than half the white men of the country entirely aside, as contributors to the general prosperity, and made them mere consumers of the lowest products of the earth; really unproductive, useless, burdensome members of the community. Did not this question sometimes arrest the mind of a Calhoun, a Stevens, a Stonewall Jackson: Why might not Pompey in the cotton field, as rich as John Jacob Astor when he first placed his foot on the wharf at New York, as Stephen Girard beginning his career, as half the country at the start-why might not he become as wealthy, as respectable, as able to provide for his children as they?

Let us, fellow citizens, thoroughly study the lessons furnished by our national history. High in importance among them, I think we shall find this, that God's curse is upon the community that founds its hopes of prosperity upon a system of unrequited labor, and that the law of God will make this the standard of compensation—there shall be no artificial, legislative, or conventional barrier to the laborers becoming the equal of the capitalist; or to industry, integrity, intelligence, mind, heart, principle, character, being honored alike in the laborer and the capitalist. How like the seven thunders rolls out this curse from the eternal throne: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you—your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten, your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire—you have heaped treasures together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entereth into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth—ye have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter."

If then we look at the philanthropic aspect of the subject, and inquire for the actual results of these antagonistic principles respectively, we shall find ourselves yet more strongly impelled to contend for the right. For two and a half centuries almost, the children of Africa have dwelt among us. And what have we, as a nation, done to and for them? We have adopted principles, and pursued a course which assumed that God's curse was upon them, his poor children.

And now let us look at this assumption in the light of common sense, of common humanity, of coming judgment. Listen to reasoning by which even the ministers of the Gospel have attempted to justify our conduct toward this unhappy people. It is summed up in this-a remote branch of the decendants of a certain man, whom no ethnologist has ever yet proved really to have been their ancestor at all, are now lying under a curse pronounced on that man for a certain unfilial action of which he was guilty. Now mark: this man was living near Mount Ararat in Northwestern Asia; but this people's home was the Western coast of Africa. Mark again: this curse was uttered not even against the transgressor, but against one of his several descendants, whose posterity were to inhabit Western Asia; and it is evident that this curse was recorded by Moses for the purpose of nerving the Israelites to the terrible task of extirpating the inhabitants of Canaan. Mark again: this curse as a specific curse author.zing the enslavement of one particular race, now four thousand years old, if applicable to the races of Western Africa, was not to be executed for ages; not by the Assyrian, or the Egyptian, by Greece, or by Rome, but to be held in suspense for more than four thousand years, to be executed chiefly by the Anglo-Saxou colonists inhabiting a Continent, not to be known by civilized man for thousands of years from its date, nay, that it was our peculiar glory to be the executioners of that curse, and the watchful guardians over that devoted race; charged to see that it should never rise to manhood, that one stray beam of hope should never reach its heart, that in the remotest ages no negro should become a man in the land whose mission is to be the asylum of the oppressed, the home of the free

Nor did our piety content itself within these limits. So far from finding it a cross to be the executioners of this unappeasable, divine indignation, we exulted in it. One of us called it the distinguishing mission of our country, declaring that this curse of God on Ham was the foundation-stone of the highest form of Christian civilization. We were not accustomed to pray that Ham's sin, like our own, might be forgiven. Brethren, slavery exists no longer.

But its history has not yet been written. Has any man, any angel—no; none but the Omniscient has ever guaged the depth of anguish, counted the groans, and tears that have resulted from our adopting the principle that capital should secure unrewarded labor. Say not, we have heard enough of the evils of Slavery. The fact is, the irrepressible conflict has only changed its form, the war is not yet ended, and ballots are now to complete what bullets commenced. One more Gettysburg struggle; one more Appomatox surrender, and then the Republic stands on the basis of

REQUITED, HONORED LABOR.

Then capital and labor shall here share equally the rewards of Industry, Skill and Strength; then the European traveller who has been accustomed at home to see palaces surrounded by squalid hamlets, will see here a country made what God intended earth to be; the abode of an intelligent people, mutually respecting and respected; grouped in families; some splendidly, all, comfortably housed and attired. Now the question meets us: How can this be secured, especially in the case of that vast body of people recently owned as chattels?

THE REMEDY.

Suffer me to repeat, that law-making cannot secure it. Whatever may be true of monarchically governed people, and of mankind in past centuries, it no longer remains true, as in the period of the Tudors and Plantagenets, that the laboring classes are to find their safety and well being mainly in legislative protection or control. There is another, safer, surer policy than that. Combinations of workmen, strikes, and mob-violence are, at best, but superficial remedies, and often aggravate the disease they attempt to remove. There is one practicable, radical remedy, viz.:

EDUCATED LABOR.

The intelligent citizen, operative, or laborer, knows what his rights are, and will make no contracts that ignore those rights. His increased self-respect, also, is a guaranty against the crushing arrogance and avarice of the capitalist. Then the superior value of his services must secure for himself the highest wages from competing capitalists. Such a class of laborers moreover improves the style and quality of productions, and thus makes their labor more valuable to the employer and the country; and educated laborers, too, become a portion of the moral, intellectual and political strength of their country. This. then, we must aim to secure-Power and Industry to be controlled by Mind; the laborer becoming a man of intelligence, character, modest self-respect, fully aware that he and the capitalist are mutually indispensable, and have a common interest in the results of toil. In a word, it is our task to educate efficiently and sufficiently, the African race now entered into the rank of citizenship. Educate them for the country's sake, for they are now voters. Educate them for the sake of the States of which they are citizens; for the laborer is productive and valuable just in proportion to his intelligence. Educate them for the sake of the community in which they are to live. Educate them for their own sakes, because they are God's immortal children. But leaving the higher motives, I resume the lower ground from which I have been pleading; consistency with the genius of the Republic, the fullest measure of national prosperity, the most eminent degree of financial progress. demand the education of the laborers of our land. Have we exulted in destroying the former relations of labor and capital in the Slave States?

Let us beware of an illusion, a fatal illusion, here. Leave the black man uneducated in those States, and he falls back of necessity, under the absolute control of the capitalist, in some respects more to his injury than before. Slavery created some ties that secured sympathy, and the care of the sick, infirm and aged. But freedom for a poor, ignorant black man ensures for him exposure to imposition, and exaction, and an utterly helpless old age. Then as we love the peace of our country; as we prize above all other earthly goods the stability of this Republican Government; as we desire to see the laboring classes of our land become so far masters of themselves, of their industry, and skill, that capital shall not be able to compel their services at rates that make the elevation of the laborer and his children impossible, we must educate the black race, we must teach the negro his participation in our common manhood and citizenship, develope his mental powers, insure him the respect of his fellow-citizens, by forming him into a developed manhood. Is he a true patriot, is he a true christian, who either opposes this course, or regards it with indifference! Does it not betray in him an indifference to the best interests of his country and the welfare of man, the child of God? And can a character have in it the elements of either true piety or true honor that consents to enjoy power and wealth by the involuntary sacrifice of another's welfare? The meanness of the principle will one day be as palpable as that of stealing.

We have been accustomed for half a century to hear it said by slaveholders—"You do not understand the negro." But what there was about him so difficult to understand I never could discover. And if there was any such difficulty, I have been certain, for at least six years, that it affected the slave-holder more thoroughly than us. 'We judged the black man as a man; he judged him as a chattel. And, now, the negro proving to be a man, it is manifest that we knew him more accurately and profoundly than those who thought he could not fight; could not vote intelligently; did not love freedom; did not care to learn what white men learn; did not want to be disturbed in his paradise of chattelhood; would make insurrections if emancipated in masses. We did know the black man all along. We know him now. We know him, and we know his aspirations, his capacities, his real worth to the country; what he might become to himself, and to the nation, if the artificial pressure of the powerful hand of avarice were removed from him. The black man can become the cultivated cultivator in Southern fields, the scientific manufacturer, miner, machinist, navigator in Southern factories, mines, rivers and seas. 'We do know him; we are sure of him. We know he loves freedom for himself, his wife, his children, for those who shall carry his honored name to remote generations. We see him a few years hence manfully contending for all the prizes of honor, and emolument, at your agricultural fairs; at the National Expositions in Paris, in London, in Constantinople, in Pekin, and Jeddo. We do know him, he desires to cultivate his mind, and develope the powers God has bestowed upon him. He is fit to be a freeman, a citizen, a pastor of your churches, a president of your colleges, a leading partner of your great commercial houses, a President of the Republic. If he is not, we shall not put him there; all we contend for is-give him a fair chance to try, to prove his ability, or his inability, and do not force him to abandon his manhood to justify your prejudices.

Have you read both sides of the description of the Republican State Convention recently held in Richmond, Virginia? We know what the advocates of the old dynasty will say. Let us hear the other side from a spectator who gazed upon the wonderful scene of a Republican State Convention held in Richmond, on the same spot where a few years ago Robert E. Lee, a deserter from the United States Army, was made Commander-in-Chief of the Virginia forces, preparatory to entering the rebel service: "Now, grouped in front of that building for hours each day, in the broiling sun, I saw five or six thousand negroes, most of whom were slaves in 1861, but who are now enfranchised citizens of Virginia, while their former masters, the secessionists, are disfranchised. Never have I seen a more orderly, attentive, and enthusiastic audience, or one in which all were more determined to understand what they were doing. Each resolution offered had to be read again and again, and even then there were several upon which the colored men declined to act." The world moves, most certainly! Now let us hear the testimony of a native South Carolina planter. He says, in regard to this capacity to labor as freemen he has made full and satisfactory proof. These are his words: "Sometime after the close of the war, I found that my opinions upon the subject of the availability of the labor of the country (in the person of the black man) differed so widely with many of my best friends, who contended that the labors of the colored race as freedmen could not be made available, I determined to test my own notions: and, for this purpose left the city and rented a farm, where I might make the trial upon my own plans. I took the ground: First, that by fair and honest dealing with them, we could inspire and restore lost confidence. Second, by a system of education, elevate their conceptions of honor and honesty. Third, that it is the duty of the white man, South, to honestly and fairly instruct them as to their rights and privileges as citizens, that they may become allied to us, and satisfied to remain among us in the capacity of laborers. All of which I undertook to carry out, at very considerable risk to person and property; and am fully satisfied from actual experience, my theory is right, and practical in its widest sense. I got into possession of the farm I am now working, the 1st of January, 1867; the first act was to fit up a building in my yard, which was to be used exclusively as a school-house and church for the colored people alone (which I did under protest). I then, on my own responsibility, without books or money, employed a talented, accomplished Southern lady as teacher, at $50 per month, and opened a free school, night and day. I next employed ten farm hands and a practical, honest colored man as overseer. My school flourished, and increased daily, until now it numbers seventy day, fifty night, and over one hundred Sunday School pupils; and my crop is the best that has grown on the place for twenty years. And all this has been accomplished without an unpleasant word between me and my laborers, or among themselves; and many who entered the school not knowing their alphabet are now able in a pretty respectable way to write their own letters. The result of this is: if I had land sufficient in any part of the Southern States, I could to-day employ an unlimited number of hands, the pick of the country; for my interest in and for them they feel a debt of gratitude that no sacrifice would be to great for them to make for me; they are ever ready to serve me, and do it with much greater manifest kindness and pleasure than when I had the authority to command them."

A Georgia paper speaks thus of the freedman:—"The conciliatory spirit evinced by the colored voters cannot be sufficiently commended by all persons who are disposed to do them justice, and whose minds are not warped by prejudice. They show no disposition to monopolize the representation, even in those districts where they have an overpowering majority; but are disposed to give precedence to the whites. Their chief desire is evidently to procure capable men, and at the same time men who will see that the rights conferred on them by law are not sacrificed. Their conduct and care in the selection of candidates falsifies the assertion of their enemies, that they wish to occupy all offices wherever they can, and to oust the whites entirely. The modesty and forbearance with which they have exercised their newly-acquired rights do them great credit, and give assurance that they will become good, quiet, and law-abiding citizens." We are all creatures of prejudice. Our prejudices may be sincerely held, but none the less injurious. Our missionary history is just furnishing us illustrations of that. The missionaries we have sent to benighted countries have come very slowly to the belief that their native converts could be intrusted with the pastoral office. One of them now writes from Turkey :- "It is just amazing to watch our young men, and see their growth, as they walk with the responsibility and dignity of the pastorate upon them. The strides they take towards manliness, self-reliance, capacity, efficiency; and humility in a single fortnight, must be seen to be believed." Yes, responsibility is essential to the development of manhood. We have thus far made the African race a burden and a blight to ourselves, and robbed them of their rights and privileges as sons of God. Henceforth we are to bless and elevate them, and make them a blessing to ourselves.

Brethren, our year's work is before us, and it is one of immense urgency. We must educate the laborers of the South for the country's sake, for their sake. It cannot be done in a year. Gen. Howard, who has a full oversight of the field, shows the impediments to our success, not to dishearten us, but in order to stimulate our exertions. He says we ought to place five teachers in the field for every one we have there to-day. Is not the voice of God in our ears this day, as in the ear of Moses at the Red Sea—"Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward!"

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL MEETING. C. W. Wallace, of Mancheston, V. H., spoke upon the first of these recolutions, and was followed be delened Baylet.

THE Twenty-second Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held in the First Congregational Church of Springfield, Mass., commencing Wednesday, October 28th, 1868, at three o'clock P.M.

The meeting was opened by singing a hymn, after which the President, Rev. E. N. Kirk, D.D., of Boston, read a portion of the twenty-fifth chapter of the Gospel of Matthew, and offered prayer.

The minutes of last year were read by the Recording Secretary. In the absence of the Treasurer, Edgar Ketchum, Esq., his report with a supplementary statement was read by Secretary Whipple. These papers were referred to a Committee consisting of Hon, Amasa Walker, Rev. S. G. Buckingham, D.D., and Rev. W. W. Woodworth.

Secretary Strieby read an abstract of the Annual Report, which was referred to a Committee consisting of Rev. Wm. Patton, D.D., Rev. Dr. Wallace, Rev. E. B. Clark.

A Business Committee was appointed, consisting of Rev. H. M. Parsons, Rev. C. L. Woodworth, Rev. L. H. Cone, R. Burt, Esq., and J. P. Williston, Esq.

A Committee on Nominations was appointed, consisting of Rev. S. S. Jocelyn, Rev. F. Horton, and Rev. H. B. Blake.

Rev. R. G. Green was appointed Assistant Secretary pro tem. The Association then engaged in a season of devotional exercises. Rev. S. S. Jocelyn offered prayer. Rev. Dr. Kirk, Rev. Dr. Wallace, and Colonel Baylor, formerly of Georgia, made remarks.

The Committee of Arrangements reported that a sermon by Rev. Dr. Todd would be preached this evening; and a prayer-meeting would be held at half-past eight o'clock, Thursday morning.

A recess was then voted till evening.

EVENING SESSION, 71 O'CLOCK .- A large congregation was in attendance. Rev. Dr. Patton officiated in the introductory exercises. Rev. Dr. Todd preached the sermon, from Psalm, 68: 31: "Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God."

THURSDAY MORNING.—A prayer-meeting was held from half-past eight o'clock till nine, Rev. Wm. W. Woodworth, of Belchertown, presiding.

At nine o'clock the Association was called to order for business. Prayer was offered by Rev. W. W. Childs, D.D., of Boston. The Association then listened to an address from the President, Rev. Dr. E. N. Kirk.

A series of resolutions was presented by the Business Committee, relative to the objects and work of the Association. The Rev. Dr. C. W. Wallace, of Manchester, N. H., spoke upon the first of these resolutions, and was followed by Colonel Baylor.

It was adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the perilous and suffering condition of the loyal people of the South, both white and black, demands the sympathies of the Christian and the patriot of the North; that we should remember them in our prayers and at the ballot-box, and liberally support whatever measures promise most speedily to reconstruct society and government there, on the basis of a pure Christianity and an enlightened constitutional liberty.

The second resolution was discussed by Rev. E. M. Cravath, Rev. M. E. Strieby, Rev. E. P. Smith, Field Agent of the Association, and Major-General O. O. Howard, and adopted.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association should be devoutly rendered to Almighty God, for the prosperity given to its work during the past year, the amount of means placed at its disposal, the permanent foothold it has been enabled to make in the South for its higher schools and churches, for the preservation of life and general health of its officers and missionaries, and above all, for the conversion and Christian growth it has been permitted to witness among those for whom it has levered.

The third resolution was advocated by Rev. Horace James, of Worcester, and Major-General O. O. Howard, and adopted.

Resolved, That this land, of all lands, is most essential to be taken and held by the churches, for the sake of its bearing on the salvation of the world.

Hon. Amasa Walker, from the Committee on the Treasurer's Report, presented the following, which was adopted:

"The Committee to whom was referred the Report of the Treasurer respectfully report, that they have examined the same, so far as the time allotted them would permit, and find it correct and properly audited, and they recommend its approval and other time.

"From the supplementary statement accompanying the report, it appears that the total balance existing against the society at this time is $87,726. Of this amount $36,411 is the accumulated debt of previous years, and $51,315 has arisen from the operations of the past year. While it is a matter of deep regret that the Association is burdened with so large indebtedness, the undersigned are satisfied that the Executive Committee have conducted with wisdom and sound discretion in the expenditures they have made. A great part of this unfavorable balance arises not from the current expenses of supporting teachers and the ordinary operations of the Society, but from permanent investments in real estate, which it was entirely indispensable to make in providing normal school-houses and other buildings connected with the education of teachers for the Freedmen's Schools.

"These investments are not only of a permanent character, but have a money value far greater than their cost, and the debt of the Association, so far from being a cause of discouragement, should only inspire the friends of the cause with greater confidence in the management of its affairs, and excite them to extraordinary efforts to extinguish its outstanding obligations.

"The Committee recommend that the Treasurer's Report be published with the proceedings of this meeting."

The morning session was closed with the singing of the Doxology, and the Association took a recess till two o'clock.

Two o'clock P.M.—The Association united in the celebration of the Lord's Supper; Rev. Dr. Crawford, of Deerfield, and Rev. Mr. Wilder, of South-Africa, officiating.

Business being resumed, Rev. Mr. Parsons took the chair, and Rev. Dr. Patton read the following Report of the Committee on the Report of the Executive Committee:

"The Committee to whom was referred the Annual Report of the Executive Committee would state that they have attended to the duty assigned them, and would call attention:

"1st. To the graphic history of the successful labors of the Association among the slaves and the freedmen, as tending greatly to strengthen our confidence in the ultimate and complete success of the noble work in which the Association is engaged.

"2d. The Committee are unanimous in the opinion that in the present condition of the laboring classes at the South, the system of schools as carried on by the Association is eminently wise and productive of lasting good upon both their intellectual and religious interests; especially would we express our approbation of the Normal Schools, by which the future teachers will be supplied from the raw material on the ground.

"3d. The progress made in the organization and enlargement of churches, your Committee judge is an element of hope, and demands the constant and vigorous attention of the Executive Committee.

"4th. Your Committee are pleased to learn that, whilst the pressure upon the home field has been so immediate and urgent, the foreign field has not been neglected, and that Africa on both sides of the Alantic is faithfully cared for.

"5th. From the report it appears that, whilst the work has speedily and wonderfully increased upon the Executive Committee, the pecuniary resources have not proportionally increased. The operations of the year close with a debt of about $90,000. This fact, in the judgment of your Committee, should not be regarded as a discouragement, but simply as a trial of your faith, and as an incentive to more determined exertions; especially as the providence of God is steadily enlarging the fields of labor and inclining the hearts of proper laborers to enter in and reap the ripening harvest. As God opens the field and prepares the laborers, we may have confidence that, in answer to our prayers, he will incline his children to bring into the treasury all the money needed. We believe that the Executive Committee should be encouraged to enter upon this new year with the resolute determination of doing their whole duty, with the assurance that, if they freely tell the churches the pressing work to be done, and the amount of pecuniary contributions needed, they will find a most cheering response. For the signs of the times indicate, both at home and abroad, that God is about doing great things for the advancement of the kingdom of his Son.

"6th. The Committee would close their report by the following resolution, which they trust will be met by a generous reception, and to the carrying out of which all present, and all whom those present can influence, will aim most religiously to see that amount secured:

"Resolved, That, in view of the present indebtedness of the Association, and the increasing work to be done, and done speedily, it is the deliberate conclusion of this meeting that there should be poured into the treasury the sum of FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS this year."

The report was briefly discussed, and temporarily laid on the table. While the report was under consideration, contributions amounting to about $3000 were pledged.

Rev. Henry T. Cheever moved that the officers of this Association be requested to memorialize Congress regarding the interests of the Freedmen at the South, which was voted unanimously:

Resolved, That, as a Society intrusted by Divine Providence with the moral and religious instruction of Freedmen, and having under our care numerous Christian teachers whose lives are in frequent jeopardy by reason of their friendship for the Freedmen, and their steady loyalty to our National Government; and meeting at a moment when outriges that cry to Heaven for vengeance are being perpetrated daily upon our unoffending wards and their friends, we are compelled to give expression to the common thought of the just and generous minds of our numerous constituency, calling for the instant interposition of Congress in behalf of the Freedmen; and therefore,

Resolved, That the officers of this society be instructed at once to memorialize Congress upon the condition of affairs in that region of country which is the field of our Christian labors, and to ask for immediate measures of relief.

Rev. Dr. Patton offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to Rev. John Todd, D.D., for his sermon preached last evening, and that a copy be requested for publication.

He accompanied his resolution with some friendly criticisms, and after discussion, it was adopted.

The fourth resolution of the series offered in the morning was taken up, and after remarks by Rev. Samuel G. Buckingham, D.D., was adopted:

Resolved, That this land is in danger of being lost to the Church through the influence of infidelity, Romanism, intemperance, and the unsubdued spirit of rebellion.

The fifth resolution was supported by Rev. George L. Hovey, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Protestant Church of America owes it to Christ and the country that it shall not suffer the Man of Sin to seduce the Freedmen of this land from the simplicity of faith into spiritual darkness and the interest of despotism.

The sixth and last resolution was taken up, and, after remarks by Rev. Henry M. Parsons, of Springfield, Mass., adopted. Also the one reported by the Committee on the Report of the Executive Committee:

Resolved, That the South can be saved only as the West, by the school, the church, the Christian teacher and preacher, a loyal press, an intelligent and conscientious ballot and a sanctified literature, and to furnish these is the first duty of the American churches.

The Report of the Nominating Committee was then presented, as follows:

Rev. C. L. Woodworth offered the following:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association are hereby given to the Boston and Albany, and the Connecticut River Railroads for reduced fares; to this Church, for the use of its edifice; to the people of Springfield, for their pleasant, Christian hospitality; and to the Choir, for their service of song in the sanctuary.

This was responded to by Mr. Parsons, who expressed his gratification and the gratification of the people in being permitted to entertain the Association.

Colonel Baylor made a brief address.

The minutes of the meeting were referred to the officers for revision and publication.

Resolved, That this meeting of the Association be adjourned, to meet next year, at the call of the Executive Committee.

Rev. Dr. Patton read the 122d Psalm, and, after the audience had joined in singing the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," concluded with prayer.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE TREASURER'S REPORT.

THE Executive Committee have directed a supplemental statement to accompany the Treasurer's Report of receipts and disbursements for the year.

It will be seen, that the year's deficiency has been $51,315.45, to which we add the deficiency of previous years, $36,411.14, making a total of $87,726.59 against the treasury.

In explanation of the causes that have led to this deficiency, the Committee beg leave to state:

1. That the receipts have fallen short of their reasonable expectations, arising partly, as they suppose, during the latter part of the year, from the absorption in attention to the Presidential election, in the result of which every true patriot feels so deep an interest, and partly from the touching and effective appeals of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, for a very large sum, at the close of its fiscal year, which was so generously responded to by those who feel a common interest in its work and ours. On the other hand, the expenditures of the year have been unexpectedly large.

2. By the general inability of the people, through the failure of their crops, and the bitterness of their former masters, to meet their pledges of providing for the board of the teachers.

3. By the inability of the Bureau to furnish return transportation, as heretofore, for our teachers, who are compelled to come North to recruit their strength during the summer season. This threw a very large and unexpected expenditure on our treasury.

Another occasion of the indebtedness may be found in the necessity of providing Normal Schools to raise up teachers of Christian character, and ministers from among the people themselves. It was estimated that at least twenty thousand teachers would be necessary to meet the demand among the colored people alone. These could not be found at the South; and to supply them from the North, if possible, would involve the expenditure of a sum not to be hoped for; and hence the only feasible as well as most economical mode, was to train them on the ground. The cost of starting and sustaining these schools is necessarily greater than for an equal number of common schools; but, when we consider their importance, can any one doubt the expediency? The only question then remaining was, whether, with an impoverished treasury, the Committee were justified in attempting it? A brief statement of facts is the best answer.

By commencing at a time when the providence of God, the situation of the country, and the opportunity to secure the cooperation of the government seemed to demand it, a large part of the necessary means came to us for this express object, and would have been lost without it; and every dollar so invested secured two for the work. As an offset to the debt of the Association, it has in hand, received as donations or legacies, bonds and mortgages worth $66,390. The income of this goes to support missions in Africa, by special provision of the donors, and will relieve our treasury in that amount. It has lands in the North, not connected with the work, worth $31,856; total of this class of property, $98,246. It has, connected with its work among the Freedmen, lands and buildings valued at $188,885, making a total of $287,131. Beside this, it has made available to the work of elevating the Freedmen, through the cooperation of the Bureau, many thousands of dollars not included in the above.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

THE American Missionary Association meets to-day on its twentysecond anniversary. We render thanks to the Father of mercies and the God of all grace for the blessings of another year bestowed on our labors at home and abroad. Especially do we recognize with gratitude the seal of his approbation set upon our efforts among the colored people of America. When we consider the mighty hand which has been stretched out for their deliverance, and when we see every year more and more their inextinguishable thirst for knowledge, human and divine, we are the more convinced that God has a grand purpose in regard to them, both in this land and in Africa; and when we look back upon the history of this Association in its labors for them, at first as slaves and then as freedmen, we are constrained to feel that this close identification with them points it out as an instrumentality to be still further employed for their benefit on both continents. In support of these views we propose a sketch of the past labors of the Association in the South, as well as a review of its present work there.

The story of the Spanish Inquisition is now read with less astonishment and indignation than we shall soon feel in view of the martyr age of America, now passing away. We are only too familiar with the penalties of fine, lash, and imprisonment inflicted in our own age and country, on those who taught human beings to read "any book or printed matter" including, of course, the word of God. "Tis but yesterday that millions of the inhabitants of this land could meet for religious worship only to receive oral instruction, and that in the presence of censors armed with despotic power. We have not forgotten that in 1854, Mrs. Douglass, a lady of Southern birth and residence, was imprisoned in the common jail of Norfolk, Va., for teaching a few colored children to read!

HISTORY.

Notwithstanding these restrictions, the religious impulses of the colored people led them to organize numerous churches and to worship God as best they might under the vigilant eye of the master; but the eaching of the pulpit was partial when given by the white man, and uninstructive if given by the colored preachers, themselves often unable to read.

Schools were almost unknown; yet, under various restraints, a few existed in the larger cities for free colored people, but any attempt to teach the blacks, bond or free, either in letters or religion, otherwise than in entire subserviency to the interests of slavery was visited with swift vengeance.

ANTI-SLAVERY PREACHING AND SCHOOL

Before the modern agitation of the anti-slavery question a few Southern white ministers, and occasionally even religious bodies, had uttered noble words against slavery. Here and there also, churches were formed, principally Moravian, excluding slaveholders; but these utterances and organizations were few and uninfluential. The American Missionary Association has the distinction of beginning the first decided efforts while slavery existed, for the education and religious instruction of the people of the South, on an avowedly anti-slavery basis. The history of these efforts is full of interest.

Rev. John G. Fee was the pioneer in this movement. A Kentuckian by birth, the son of a slaveholder, disinherited by his father on account of his anti-slavery principles, preaching under the commission of the Home Missionary Society, but withdrawing from its patronage because dissatisfied with its position on the subject of slavery, he collected a church of non-slaveholders, and applied to the American Missionary Association for a commission. Mr. Fee was then in the vigor of young manhood, of sanguine temperament, and, as his subsequent history has abundantly shown, of unflinching courage and great moderation under trials. The Association was ready to welcome such a man, and gave him a commission dated Oct. 10th, 1848. A colporteur, an elder in Mr. Fee's church, was employed at the same time to distribute Bibles and tracts among all classes, white and black, bond and free.

Mr. Fee's labors were quite abundant. He preached in many places, organized another non-slaveholding church, and, in spite of some annoyances, was happy in his work and quite successful. Sunday-schools were established and day-schools begun. The beginnings were made of what has since become Berea College.

In March, 1851, the Association commissioned Rev. Daniel Worth as a missionary in North-Carolina. He too was a native of the State in which he labored, and had been a magistrate in the county. He preached to six feeble non-slaveholding churches, but his labors were not confined to them. He visited many parts of the State, and revivals attended his ministry.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT.

The next year the Association appointed three missionaries for Kansas, and others soon followed to share the trials and meet the dangers attendant on the efforts to settle that state with free men, and to plant there a free Gospel.

Thus did the Association, at every accessible point, endeavor to preach the Gospel in the South, peacefully, where it could, under persecution, if it must. But soon there began to be heard the mutterings of that tempest which reached its terrible fury in the slaveholders' rebellion, and whose billows are still breaking angrily but vainly against the shore. In 1855, Mr. Fee, reënforced by three other missionaries and three colporteurs, had given himself to a wider range of effort, employing his pen and engaging in discussions on the subject of slavery. These, with like efforts on the part of that noble champion of human rights, Hon, C. M. Clay, had called public attention extensively, and, as it was hoped, favorably to the subject. But slavery, ever vigilant, saw the danger and was aroused. The first 'indication of this was in Garrard county, Ky., where a mob was made to take the place of a discussion, with, however, no favorable results to the patriarchal institution. Mr. Fee thus describes the "Preparations had been made for a discussion with a young lawyer. He had reparations had been made for a discussion with a young lawyer. He had actually entered upon it, and made his opening speech at one of my previous appointments. I went at the time appointed, with a brother in the church, expecting a pleasant debate. My opponent, at the dictate of his masters, declined any further discussion, violated his promise to maintain liberty of speech, and joined a meeting (or mob) which passed resolutions against my further preaching in the neighborhood, all at the time unknown to me or my friends. When I would the expectation and the present of in the neighborhood, all at the time unknown to me or my friends. When I went, I found the accustomed good and attentive audience absent, (expecting no discussion,) and a lawless band of wicked, profane men (about forty) in their stead. They presented their resolutions, accusing me of rebelling against law, teaching doctrines immoral and tending to violations of chastity, and insisting that I must desist from preaching there, adding, 'This is peremptory.' A physician was put forward as their foreman. In the company were one preacher and ten professors of religion, as I was assured by an aged member of the Baptist church, at whose house the meetings had been held. I replied to their resolutions and demands at some length. I demanded to be brought before law tribunals, if I had violated law. If I was teaching error, Lasked some lawyer doctor or preacher or any some length. I demanded to be brought before law tribunals, if I had violated law. If I was teaching error, I asked some lawyer, doctor, or preacher, or any half-dozen of them, to appear before the people and show it, and let me have a chance of reply. They replied: 'We want no discussion; it only does injury.' This is the policy of slavery and every other wicked work; it shuns the light. "They then demanded that I should promise not to preach any more there. I refused to thus pledge myself, telling them I should be treacherous to God, to my own soul, and to their highest interest if I should do so, and that they would really regard me in that light. They then demanded that I should leave that house, threatening violence if I did not. I again refused, saying I should do no one thing that had the appearance of retreating or surrendering a right. They swore I should; took me by force, put me on my horse, then with boards and sticks forced my horse along, pouring upon me vile abuse and constant threats of violence. Then it was that I felt the force of the words uttered against Christ, my Saviour; 'Away with him I away with him!' In many respects this was to me a most trying occasion. I regretted it because of the effect upon the minds of many friends who were just beginning to lend a favorable ear, and upon thousands in the distance who will have their minds prejudiced by misrepresentation as to the cause, and because of the manifestations of depravity and wickedness in our citizens. Yet to me it has been a blessing. It has driven me nearer to God my strength. It has given me such sympathy with Christ as I had not before, and could not have had otherwise."

The good effects of that scene are mentioned subsequently by Mr. Fee:

"Hundreds who were before silent are now speaking out in tones of marked disapprobation of the conduct of the mob. That mob, in two houses time, probably did more to advance the cause of freedom, in this and adjoining counties, than we could have done in two years of faithful preaching. God be praised 'that he makes the wrath of man to praise him!"

The next year came the crisis in Kansas. Forays were made into the territory by infuriated men, under unprincipled leaders, from Missouri; United States troops, under the lead of marshals, were arresting citizens for no orime but that of protecting themselves, their families, and their property; and hordes of ruffians were prowling over the country, abusing, robbing, seizing, and dragging away peaceful inhabitants. It was truly a reign of terror. The lives of our missionaries were providentially spared. Their escape was remarkable. Rev. Mr. Adair, one of the number, wrote, under date of October 1st, 1856:

"I am now where I have fled from the tyrant Pierce and his Border Rufflans.'
They seek to shed my blood. They have shot down a nephew of mine, who hap-They seek to shed my blood. They have shot down a nephew of mine, who happened to be in the road near my house. . . This was soon followed by the murder of a cousin of mine, an invalid Christian man, who was near and tried to escape; he fled to the wood, two horsemen pursued him, and shot him. Another man, near by, was badly wounded. I shall not attempt to describe my feelings while I lay concealed, much less the feelings I had when, late at night, I got help, and with a lantern in hand went to the woods, found the dead body of my cousin, and brought it home on the Sabbath. May God have mercy on the murderers, they know not what they do! . . My children are in constant fear, but my wife is not in a situation to leave, nor could I leave her alone. Do pray for us."

Mr. Adair was connected by marriage with the celebrated John Brown, and the nephew here mentioned was the old hero's son. This murder was one of the series of events that led to the raid at Harper's Ferry, and thus hastened the outbreak of the rebellion.

Mrs. Byrd, the wife of another missionary, narrates the capture of her husband:

"My husband is a prisoner in the camp of the enemy. Last night, about ten o'clock, we heard horsemen riding at full speed up to the house. They were soon at the door, knocking, and calling for Mr. Byrd. They ordered him to get up and go with them, but would not for a long time tell us where or for what reason. They assured him he should not be harmed at all, and finally said they had orders to take him to their camp. Husband rose and let them in, for they were also directed to see whether he had any firearms, and to search for papers. The company consisted of five armed men. One of our pro-slavery neighbors brought me a note this morning from Mr. Byrd, in which he says that he is courteously treated, but did not know when he should return. Here I am alone, with four little ones, the youngest a babe, not two months old, and worse than all, my husband is in the hands of merciless men. Do pray for us."

The year 1858 brought another mob upon Mr. Fee and his fellowlaborer, Jones, a colporteur who accompanied him, and who, as it turned out, was the only sufferer of physical violence. A graphic pen sketches the scene:

"While Bro. Fee was preaching, thirty or forty armed men rode up, and sent one of their number into the house to demand that he should desist. He replied, one of their number into the house to demand that he should desist. He replied, as he has usually done in such cases, that he was peaceably exercising his constitutional right, and requested the person to be seated until he had finished preaching. The messenger returned to his company, who then rushed in and seized Bro. Fee a promise that he would never return, threatening to duck him in the river till there was no breath left in Fee and Bro. Jones; they tried to extort from Bro. Fee a promise that he would never return, threatening to duck him in the river till there was no breath left in him. Failing in getting a pledge, they mounted their horses, one of them taking Bro. Jones up behind him, and rode about two miles to the river, and descended into a dark, lonely ravine upon the bank. At the foot they halted, and made another effort to induce Bro. Fee to promise to leave that part of the country and not return. He at length got their attention and commenced talking to them, telling them he could not make a pledge that might conflict with future duty. Said he: 'It is not impossible that some of you may yet want me to come and pray with you, and I should hate to be under a fledge not to do it.' He also told them, if he did this from fear of their violence, they themselves would not respect him, and reminded them of that greater meeting, when they all must be assembled to give an account of 'the deeds done in the body.' At length one of them said: 'They did not come there to hear a sermon; they must attend to their business.' They then proceeded a little way further to a thicket on the bank of the river. They here ordered Bro. Jones to strip; he pulled off his cont and vest, and stopped. They jeered him, and told him to 'strip his linen.' They removed all his clothing except his shirt. Then bending him over, they turned that up, and one of the leaders of the gang proceeded to whip him upon the naked back with a sycamore switch or switches—these grow large and heavy. Every blow left its mark. His wounds, as seen afterward by others, are of no slight character. Bro. Fee expostulated with them, but in vain. When they had satisfied their crealty upon Bro. Jones, the man who plied the whip, approaching Bro. Fee, told him, if he would not promise never to return, he should be treated five times worse. Well, he told them, he would meet his suffaring then. They compelled him to remove a part of his clothing. He knelt to receive the blows, and th

At length came the raid of John Brown, (October, 1859,) the universal terror of the South, and the expulsion of all our missionaries from Kentucky and North-Carolina. The onset began at Berea. Madison county, Kentucky. The school at this place was prosperous. A number of families, some from Ohio, had gathered here to aid in building up the institution and the cause of freedom. Mr. Fee was absent at the North, soliciting funds for the school, when a committee of sixty-two persons, appointed at a public meeting held at Richmond, the county-seat, came to Berea and warned the principal men to leave the place in ten days. No disrespectful language was used, but it was said that force would be employed if the warning was not heeded. On the next day, two of the proscribed citizens called on the Governor of the state, who assured them that he could not protect them; and the 30th of December, thirty-six persons reached Cincinnati, exiles for the crime of holding and teaching antislavery sentiments! They were ministers, teachers, business-men, and their families; one of the number had recently erected a steam saw-mill at Berea, and was the owner of five hundred acres of land.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT.

Bro. Fee's family had removed to Bracken county, where he joined them, hoping that, as this was near the Ohio, in the vicinity of his birth-place, and the scene of some of his most successful labors in preaching and planting churches, he might be suffered to remain in peace. But the hope was vain. The organized mob came with the inexorable notice. Eighteen exiles, including women and children, started for Ohio, in January, 1860.

In North-Carolina, the useful labors of Rev. Daniel Worth were also stopped, and himself forced from the State by these first throes of the coming earthquake of rebellion. He wrote from New-Salem, North-Carolina, December 21st, 1859:

"The prospect is, that we shall have times of trial here before long. Since the unfortunate affair at Harper's Ferry, the country is in a tremendous ferment. Threatenings reach me from various quarters, and I should not be surprised if met by a mob at my next appointment. I do not expect to leave my work except compelled by brute force. I know arrangements are making to meet me with a mob at my next appointment.—Sabbath, the 25th: I am calm, peaceful, confiding in my God."

He was arrested, and had his preliminary examination at Greensboro. He pleaded his own defense. A correspondent of The New-York Herald gives this description of him:

"The Rev. Daniel Worth is a large, portly man, with a fine head, an intellectual and expressive countenance, and a large, commanding eye. He looks enough like Burton, the comedian, to be his twin brother. . . He is fluent in speech, and the general style and manner of his speaking are calculated to win attention. He did not appear to be at all embarrassed or frightened at his position, but, on the contrary, expressed his ideas with boldness and fearlessness."

He was indicted and remanded to prison. His trial began March 30th, 1860, occupying one whole day and nearly a whole night. The verdict was guilty; the sentence, a year's imprisonment. On his appeal to the Supreme Court, he was released on bonds for $3000. He came North, and the funds were raised.

Rev. A. Vestal, the other missionary of the American Missionary Association, in North-Carolina, was compelled to leave. In these and other ways, Sodom was prepared for the doom of fire and blood!

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

BEGINNINGS.

The Union armies, on entering the South, found a surprising thirst for knowledge among the negroes; and chaplains and Christian soldiers became, to a limited extent, their teachers. But the first systematic effort for their relief and instruction was made by the American Missionary Association; and the honor of the initial steps is due to Lewis Tappan, Esq., then its treasurer. This gentleman had been identified with the anti-slavery movement from the beginning, had endured his share of obloquy and persecution, and was one of the originators of the Association, whose treasurer he had been from the beginning, giving his services gratuitously. He began the movement for the Freedmen by a correspondence with General Butler, whese famous dictum, (May 27th, 1861,) pronouncing the escaping fugitives "contraband of war," gave them safety at Fortress Monroe, and prepared the way for relief and schools from the North. Up to that time, no encouragement was offered to the colored people who fled to our army lines. Many officers of the army ruthlessly sent them back to their masters. The policy of Government was avowedly that of non-interference with slavery. It had virtually annulled General Fremont's proclamation of emancipation. But General Butler's declaration was so palpably legal and patriotic, that it met approval at Washington, and under its ægis the fugitives found refuge. Large numbers of them were gathered at Fortress Monroe and Hampton, and, in consequence of the burning of the latter place, they were homeless and destitute. These facts becoming known, Mr. Tappan wrote to General Butler, (August 3d,) making inquiries and suggestions as to the means of relief. General Butler replied, (August 10th.) showing the necessity for the colored people to remain South, and welcoming any efforts in their behalf.

A few days later, Rev. P. F. Jones, chaplain of the First Regiment New-York Volunteers, wrote to the Young Men's Christian Association of New-York City, depicting the wants of the colored refugees at the Fortress, and urging the employment of a missionary to labor among them. This letter was brought to the rooms of the American Missionary Association by Rev. L. C. Lockwood, who had been employed by the Young Men's Society. It was deemed best to send him to make investigations, and accordingly he went to Washington, and was recommended by the Assistant Secretary of War to General Wool, then commanding at the Fortress. He reached there September 3d, called immediately upon General Wool, who approved of the enterprise, and gave him authority to enter upon the work immediately. He made what explorations he could during the day, and in the evening, while conversing on the piazza of the hotel, he overheard music, and following the sound, came to a long, low building, just outside the entrance of the Fortress, where he found a number of colored people assembled for prayer. To them he told his mission, and was heard with emotions of gladness and gratitude. They hailed his coming as the answer to their prayers, and the assurance that "the good Lord" had some great things in store for them and their people. The next day, arrangements were made for meetings in several places, the house of Ex-President Tyler being one of them. A Sabbath-school was opened in that house on the 15th—a new use for that mansion, and a new era for the colored people. Other Sunday-schools soon followed.

But the great event in Mr. Lockwood's mission, though its significance was, perhaps, not then suspected by him, was the establishment, on the 17th of September, 1861, of the first day-school for the Freedmen. The school was opened in a small brown house, near the large building known as the "Seminary," where once the proud daughters of the South were educated. The first teacher of that humble school was Mrs. Mary S. Peare, an amiable and intelligent Christian woman. Her mother was a free colored woman, very light; her father a white man—an Englishman of rank and culture. Mrs. Peare taught the school with great success for a few months, when failing health compelled her to relinquish it, and she was soon called to her rest, which she entered with peaceful trust in the Redeemer.

We must linger for a moment over that school and its teacher. That little school was the harbinger of the hundreds that have followed, and of the thousands that are yet to come, that are to give an intelligent Christian culture to the colored race in America. It stands in contrast with that Seminary whose decaying building is the symbol of a tyrannical aristocracy that has fallen to rise no more. The spot where that house stood was on the coast where, two hundred and forty-one years before, the first slave-ship entered the line of the American Continent, and planted the germ of that baleful upas-tree, so fruitful of woe and blood to both races; and that woman, the representative of both, though by the bitter logic of slavery classed with the oppressed, will be remembered ages hence, as the teacher of the first colored school in the slave States that had legal authority and the protection of the national guns. Mrs. Peake and that first slave-ship will hereafter be contrasted as the initiators of two widely different eras; a barbarism and a civilization.

These beginnings were followed by other schools and with religious services. The Executive Committee, soon feeling the influence of foreshadowed events, withdrew largely its Home Missionaries from the North-West, and concentrated the energies of the Association more fully on the new field opening at the South.

ENLARGEMENT.

Enlargement of effort among the Freedmen came. The capture of the Port Royal Islands, S. C., (November, 1861,) gave the new impulse. General T. W. Sherman and Commodore Du Pont, on taking possession of these Islands, from which the whites had fled, found themselves surrounded by a crowd of ignorant, half-clad, half-famished negroes, numbering about eight thousand. Their condition attracted the attention of the Government and of the benevolent at the North. Efforts were made for their relief, and for the establishment of schools.

Secretary Chase sent Lieutenant Pierce, early in January, 1862, to examine the condition of the abandoned plantations on the Sea Islands. About the same time, Rev. Mansfield French, after consultation with the officers of this Association, went to Washington, and was deputed by the Government to examine the situation of the negroes along the whole Southern coast, taking with him a teacher from this Association, who established a school at Beaufort, S. C., February 1st, 1862.

Mr. Pierce, soon after reaching the islands, wrete to Rev. J. M. Manning, D.D., of Boston, urging him to arouse the philanthropic people of New-England to send teachers and help to the eight thousand unfortunate colored buman beings within our lines in South-Carolina. Mr. French returned in February, bearing letters from Gen. Sherman and Com. Du Pont, appealing to the benevolent at the North, in behalf of these destitute people.

FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETIES.

Public meetings were at once held in Boston, New-York, and Philadelphia. The reports of Messrs. Pierce and French, recommending the establishment of schools and sending supplies, were promptly acted upon; by the formation of the "Boston Education Society" February 7th, and of the "Freedmen's Relief Association," New-York, February 22d. On the 3d of March, 52 teachers, missionaries, and superintendents (40 men and 12 women) sailed from New-York to Port Royal-a large share of them being under the commission of the Boston Society. They were all mainly employed at first in the organization of labor and in relief of physical want, and received transportation and boarding furnished by the Government, which also, after a short time, paid the salaries of the superintendents. The Societies paid the salaries of the teachers who immediately began schools. Other teachers soon followed, and, in June, 86 persons were reported in the field-a Society in Philadelphia, called the "Port Royal Commission," contributed funds, provisions, and la-

We anticipate our narrative to introduce a brief sketch of these Relief Societies. They were not formed in opposition to the American Missionary Association. On the contrary, its officers were the main originators of the New-York Society. The first meeting in New-York, after Mr. French's return, was held in the Park Hotel, pursuant to a call with three names attached—that of Mr. French, and of L. Tappan and G. Whipple, the Treasurer and Secretary of the Association. Mr. Tappan was chairman of the meeting. The impression then was, among the friends of the Association, that the emergency required some further instrumentalities-temporary perhaps in duration, and devoted largely to physical relief, and likely to enlist a constituency that the Association would not then reach. These Societies multiplied rapidly, others being formed in Cincinnati, Chicago, Cleveland, and elsewhere throughout the North. They were soon so numerous, and their claims and labors became so conflicting, that efforts were made for unity. After many endeavors and frequent changes, the various branches were finally concentrated (May, 1866) into the "American Freedmen's Union Commission." After this event, the American Missionary Association and the Commission were recognized, by the Freedmen's Bureau and the country, as the two central institutions in the Freedmen's work.

But the Union Commission had scarcely been consummated ere disintegration began. The Cincinnati Branch, the oldest of the Western Societies, withdrew and united with the American Missionary Association in October, 1866, and the Cleveland Branch in January, 1867. The Chicago office closed in July, 1868, and the August issue of the American Freedman makes the announcement that the New-York Branch, in its present form, will terminate with the settlement of pending matters, but that certain of the trustees propose to associate for the purpose of prosecuting such work as may prove practicable for another season. Thus the American Missionary Association is left as the sole national organization, actually occupying the whole ground. The Boston, Philadelphia, Maryland (and perhaps some smaller) Branches of the Commission are still in active operation. These organizations have had an effective and, in many respects, a very useful career. Their influence has been somewhat impaired, in some of the Branches, by a seeming want of sympathy with Evangelical labors among the colored people.

We resume our sketch of the American Missionary Association. The formation of the Freedmen's Relief Societies, under the moving appeals that gave them birth, naturally drew public attention to them. But the Association continued to enlarge its operations at the South. During that year (1862) its schools and religious efforts were extended at Hampton and vicinity—the distribution of a large quantity of clothing being a part of its work. The old court-house, once the seat of slaveholding justice, but which the rebels had recently burned, was fitted up, and a school of "contrabands" was opened in it—another mark of a new era in that celebrated locality.

The Association opened a school at Norfolk, sent books to a school begun by a colored man in Suffolk, founded two schools at Newport News, and took its share in the work on the Port Royal Islands, sending there ministers, teachers, Bibles, and school-books. In May, it began a mission among the colored people who crowded Washington City, and, before the year closed, it had sent one to Cairo, Ill., where, from the opening Mississippi, these people had begun to gather.

EMANCIPATION-THE WIDE DOOR OPENED.

The Proclamation of Emancipation was dated January 1st, 1863. It gave legal freedom to all slaves in the nation, except in certain specified localities, yet it actually freed none who were not reached by our armies. But it settled forever the question of the safety of the fugitives escaping to our lines-and they came by thousands. Being destitute of all things, they were gathered and cared for as best they could be; in the East, they were often located on abandoned plantations, and at the West, they were congregated in "camps." Their physical destitution was no more manifest than was their eagerness for learning. In the midst of pinching want, amounting almost to starvation, they seemed more anxious for schools than for food. This double demand made a strong appeal to Northern philanthropy. A sense of justice to the long-oppressed slave awoke an enthusiasm second only to that which impelled the soldiers to enter the army. Hundreds of ladies, refined and educated, many of them teachers in Northern schools, volunteered their services; clothing and supplies were offered in large quantities; Freedmen's societies, as we have seen, were multiplied; religious denominations sent ministers and teachers to various points; the Bible, Tract, and other societies became enlisted; and individuals sought the field and worked alone.

The American Missionary Association rapidly extended its work. At Hampton and vicinity, its missionary labors were increased, and its schools brought into greater perfection. At Norfolk, the solitary school of last year gave place to an enlargement beyond precedent. In April, a missionary was sent there to open schools in the two colored churches. At the first session of the day-school, held in one of the churches, about 350 scholars came, and 300 others in the evening. On the third day, there were 550 at the day-school, and 500 others in the evening. The school was now divided, a part going to the other church. Fifteen colored assistants were engaged, and the energies of all the teachers taxed to the utmost. The number in the day-school has been as high as 1200, of whom 25 only were adults; but, in the night-schools, after the fatigues of the day, 400 grown people have been seen, making half of the 800 in attendance. In the three Sabbath-schools there were 1500, of whom 500 were adults. At Portsmouth, also, the schools were enlarged, and missionary labors were attended with success.

There was much suffering among the people. Their patience under it was remarkable. One missionary writes: "I have gone to their houses, or huts and holes, where every thing spoke of destitution, and would say, 'I am hunting up the sick and suffering. Do you know of any poor people who are in great want?' 'Dey's none round here,' they would answer, when their own clothing was the sheerest rags, their home a hovel, and their diet hoe-cake." On many abandoned plantations around Norfolk, occupied by colored people, the Association planted schools and preached the Gospel. The estate of Ex-Governor Wise was thus occupied, and his mansion was used as a school-house and a home for teachers of colored people.

Thousands of Ereedmen were gathered at Newbern and other places in North-Carolina, "who had sought freedom at any price, and obtained it at the cost of their all." They were destitute of every thing, yet eager to be taught. On Roanoke Island, a colony under Chaplain James, laid out a village in a large, well-wooded tract, and soon the axes were ringing merrily, mingled with the songs of happy men and women. To Newbern the Association sent two teachers, and to Roanoke Island one.

In the Port Royal Islands, the work of the Freedmen's Relief Societies was pushed forward vigorously; but there was a call for the aid of the Association, and it multiplied its labors and benefactions there.

The success of our arms on the Mississippi, culminating in the surrender of Vicksburg, July 4th, opened a wide door of usefulness and charity, which the Association entered promptly and efficiently. A missionary was sent to St. Louis, who preached and ministered to the destitute, and opened schools. But the larger work was in the "camps." Missionaries and teachers were sent to Columbus, Ky., Cairo, Ill., Memphis, Tenn., President Island, Camps Fisk and Shiloh. These laborers had a blessed yet trying work in teaching the schools, visiting from hut to hut, and in preaching the Gospel.

In the whole field, the Association reported at its annual meeting, October, 1863, eighty-three ministers and teachers, and nineteen monitors or assistants.

STEADY PROGRESS.

Henceforth our sketch will proceed more rapidly; for the work has reached that stage of steady progress that presents few incidents, yet yields the most efficient results.

This progress, in 1864, is indicated by the fact that the Association employed 250 missionaries and teachers, instead of 83, last year. This force was scattered over the field held by our armies, being most numerous in Virginia and along the line of the Mississippi. A most efficient system of education, introduced into Louisiana by General Banks, and supported by a military tax upon the whole population, absorbed a large number of the teachers sent there by the Association. The enthusiasm of the colored people for the schools was seen when their removal was threatened. Superintendent Alvord, of the Freedmen's Bureau, reports: "When the collection of the general tax for schools was suspended, the consternation of the colored population was intense. Petitions began to pour in. I saw one from the plantations across the river, at least thirty feet in length, representing ten thousand negroes. It was affecting to examine it, and note the names and marks (+) of such a long list of parents, ignorant themselves, but begging that their children might be educated; promising that, from beneath their present burdens, and out of their extreme poverty, they would pay for it."

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT.

Colored men were now enrolled in the Union army, and one of the most interesting features of the work was their education. Mr. Fee, who was once more in Kentucky as a missionary, was for a time at Camp Nelson, with a corps of efficient teachers, where four thousand colored troops were stationed. He bears testimony to their progress in learning, in morals, and in religious knowledge. He says that, riding through the camp, six miles in circumference, he saw several companies resting from drill. Quite a number were poring over their primers, or First Reader, but not a card was to be seen. In the four thousand colored men there he had not seen one intoxicated, although he had seen white men drunk. At night, the camps of these colored men are scenes of continual prayer and praise, with frequent preaching.

The condition of most of the colored people, driven from their homes, with neither food nor raiment, was pitiable in the extreme, especially at the West. Hundreds, if not thousands, perished, and a large share of the efforts of the missionaries was employed in physical relief.

CLOSE OF THE WAR-FREEDMEN'S BUREAU-BOSTON COUNCIL.

The year 1865 was marked by events of more than usual importance to the Freedmen and the Association. Prominent among these was the close of the war. The march of Sherman and the capture of Richmond were followed at once by teachers who established schools. Rev. J. W. Alvord, then Secretary of the Boston Tract Society, and with Sherman's army, opened schools in Savannah immediately; 500 pupils were enrolled, and $1000 contributed by the negroes for the support of teachers. Two of the largest of these schools were in "Bryant's Slave Mart," whose platforms, occupied a few days before by bondmen for auction, became crowded with children of the same class learning to read. These schools were soon put under the care of the Association. In like manner schools trod closely in the steps of the United States troops in entering Wilmington. Mr. Coan, representing the Association, was there with teachers. He thus describes the scene:

"By appointment I met the children at the church vestry the next morning. They were to come at nine o'clock: by seven, the street was blocked, the yard was full. Parents eager to get 'dese yer four childern's name token,' came pulling them through the crowd: 'Please, sir, puts down dese yer.' 'I wants dis gal of mine to jine; and dat yer boy hes got no parents, and I jes done and brot him.' While these things were transpiring, a group of boys, stout, hale, and hearty, made a flank movement, got around in front of father or mother, whose countenances told of fears that they might not be in time to enroll their children's

"The same evidences of joy inexpressible were manifest at the organization of evening schools for adults. About one thousand pupils reported themselves in less than one week after our arrival in Wilmington. . . There are already connected with the day-schools full two thousand persons of different ages."

Like scenes, with like joy, followed the capture of Richmond, Charleston, Augusta, etc.

The Freedmen's Bureau was created by Act of Congress, March 3d, 1865-an institution demanded alike by the wants of the Freedmen and the best interests of the country. We recognize the wise and kind orderings of Providence in guiding to the fitting choice of Major-General O. O. Howard, the Christian man, the indefatigable worker, and the impartial friend of white and black, as the Chief Commissioner. Under his administration, this Bureau has been to the Freedmen a wall of defense in danger, a source of prudent supply in time of sore need, and an efficient helper in the paths of knowledge; to the country, it has been a wise expenditure in payment of the vast debt due to the colored man, and a needed provision for the culture of those who are now intrusted with the responsibilities of citizenship.

A National Council of Congregational Churches assembled in Boston in June. Among other liberal devisings, it recommended to the churches to raise $250,000 for the work among the Freedmen, and designated this Association as the organization providentially fitted for that work. This generous indorsement induced the Association to enlarge its administrative force, and to prepare itself for still wider operations in the field. The annual meeting of the Association occurred so soon after the adjournment of the Council as to leave no room for any marked results of this vote on its finances for that year. The number of its teachers had risen to 320.

The Association was, from the first, unsectarian. It had employed the teachers, and sought the cooperation of all evangelical denominations. From the beginning, the Wesleyan Methodists had acted with it. Since 1864, the Free-Will Baptists had supported a number of its teachers. Churches of other names, and individuals, had made it their channel for reaching the Freedmen. The action of the Boston Council did not change this unsectarian basis.

ASYLUMS-NORMAL SCHOOLS.

The marked features in the history of the Association in 1866 were its success in raising a little more than the $250,000 voted by the Boston Council, the founding of two Orphan Asylums, and the beginning of Normal Schools.

The Orphan Asylums originated in the sad condition of so many colored children who had been deprived of their parents by the war, and by the ravages of the small-pox, which prevailed most fearfully. One of these scenes is thus sketched by an eye-witness:

"Just across the river there were a father, mother, and four children; the children were all small, the oldest not above ten years. The parents sickened and died a few weeks since. The children were left alone and lived alone. They were attacked by the small-pox. Two days ago one of them died, and the corpse is still lying in the room where the living children are; another of the children is lying by the side of the corpse, sick with the small-pox; the other two are ailing and will soon be down; there they are, the dead and the living—the dead unburied, the living starying, naked, sick, and none to care for them. The dead one was soon buried, and the living are in the small-pox hospital. What shall be done with these little children when they come from the hospital? 'Bind them out,'I hear some one say. Yes, but they must have a home until a place for binding can be found. Besides, many of the orphans are too small to be bound out; some are sick, and can not be."

The first Asylum was located at Wilmington, N. C., the funds coming as special gifts from various donors; the second, at Atlanta, Ga., from the generous donation of Hon. I. Washburn, of Worcester, Mass.

The Normal Schools were the evidence and demand of the advancement in learning of the colored children. The impulse for learning was not a mere curiosity, nor were the powers of these pupils confined to the lower ranges of study. Henceforth, the Normal or training school will be the leading and most valuable educational gift of the North to the Freedmen, because it will be the grand means of fitting them to be their own educators.

The Synod of the Reformed (Dutch) Church indorsed the Association as its chosen instrumentality for school-work among the Freedmen.

UPWARD AS WELL AS ONWARD.

The operations of 1867 were marked by a large increase in its force, the number reaching the unprecedented extent of 528 missionaries and teachers among the Freedmen. The extension of Normal Schools, the founding of the Industrial College at Hampton, Va., the efforts at temperance reform, and the gathering of churches, were among the important events of the year.

In view of this history, the Committee are impressed with a sense of gratitude to God, for giving them the heart to work for the poorest and most oppressed of the land, for permitting them to see the slave converted into a freeman, and to be allowed to aid him in rising to the dignity of a citizen, a man, and an enlightened Christian. May we still walk so carefully as to retain the confidence of the churches and the increasing favor of God, until we shall guide the educated and Christian Freedmen to the establishment of schools, missions, and churches, amid growing and enlightened empires in Africa!

AID FROM ABROAD.

This sketch would be incomplete if it should contain no allusion to the generous sympathy and aid received from abroad. It is estimated that from Great Britain more than a million of dollars in money and clothing have been contributed, through various channels, for the Freedmen.

The Missionary Association has shared in the kind words and substantial help that have come from across the water. Its representatives have been welcomed. Revs. Dr. Thompson and H. M. Storrs were gladly heard, by the Congregational Union of England and Wales, speaking in its behalf; and subsequently, at various times, that body, as also the General Assemblies of Scotland, has received its representatives, Drs. Patton and Holbrook and Revs. Thome and Martin, and have adopted resolutions of cordial sympathy with its evangelical character and benevolent work. In response to these resolutions, and to the appeals of these last-named brethren, the churches have contributed largely in cash and clothing.

As an evidence of the acceptableness of these gifts, and as samples of the rewards which these generous donors receive, we give a few illustrations, quoted from the statements of missionaries and teachers. One writes:

[&]quot;With nine packages of clothing I received that splendid lot of English blankets. God bless the donors of this rich gift, which will very soon warm the bodies of two or three hundred shivering Freedmen. It will do more than this. These gifts, in many instances, inspire the most grateful devotion to God, as well as love to men. Last evening I hurried away to a distant portion of the city with three of these blankets under my arm. One old man, crippled in the cotton-field, two aged women, and three children lived in the shed to which I directed my steps. The little girl was reading the Testament by the firelight to the rest of the family. I knew how they shivered and huddled together these cold nights, for I had often been there. 'Dese yere blankets,' said the choking voice of the old man, 'will warm soul and body.'"

Another says:

"Tell the good friends in England that we feel grateful for their kind remembrance of our suffering poor. The blankets (one bale) they sent us through your kind ministration have warmed and comforted at least four hundred needy women and children. I will mention a few cases in particular. One woman called on us for a blanket, and, as she appeared destitute, we gave her one. I followed her a few hundred yards to see how she fared. But O me! what a house! Slash sailed in the form of a pen, about eight feet square, with a rude fireplace on one side, and one bench and a pail comprised the whole farniture. On a few loose boards, which served for a floor, lay a pile of rags which served for a bed, a loose board answered for a door, and open cracks and corners supplied the place of windows! And whom do you think I found there? Two women and six children, two of them quite young. There they were, cold and huddled up around their five, made of beards gathered up here and there around the camp. It was a sad sight, and I trust neither you nor the good friends in England will blame me for sending them a second blanket."

But all the good done by these contributions to the poor, and by the use of the funds in schools and in Bible instruction, can never be known till all things are known above. In behalf of the Freedmen, as well as for ourselves, we invoke the blessing of the God of the poor upon the people whose benevolence has not been hindered by the wide Atlantic.

PRESENT ASPECTS OF THE WORK-GENERAL SUMMARY FOR 1868.

At the close of the war, the Southern whites were disposed to accept the political situation in which the fate of arms had placed them. But the sudden and unexpected change in the attitude of the President of the United States, and the lingering hope of political sympathy at the North, gave a new impulse to the spirit of rebellion, which was not dead, but sleeping. This impulse has reached its greatest intensity in the political contests of the present year. The varied modes of influence employed by the whites would be amusing if it were not for their intense hypocrisy or fiendish violence. The proud aristocracy of the South can use the most sycophantic flattery toward the blacks, and invite them to barbecues, elevate them to seats on the platform, and stand with them, side by side, as speakers in addressing the people. But on the other hand, when these appliances are not likely to succeed, no pressure of torture seems too cruel to be used. The blacks are then denied employment, when it means starvation; they are assaulted by mobs and shot down in the streets, when they and their white friends attempt to assemble in political meetings; and they are dragged from their homes at midnight and murdered in cold blood by the infamous Ku Klux Klans-the Thugs of America.

An equal bitterness is manifested toward the whites at the South who are disposed to regard the rights of the colored man. No excellence of character, past services, or present position secures these whites from violence. Bureau officers, legislators, magistrates, judges, and most estimable citizens are alike subject to the abuse of the mobor the murderous assaults of the midnight assassins.

The missionaries and teachers of the Association are to a large extent the objects of this malignant hate. But God has mercifully spread his hand of protection over them, and, with some exceptions, has given them not only safety, but has made them leaders and moral supporters of the people of their flocks and schools. The schools and churches have been the pledge to the Freedmen of the continued sympathy of the North; they have opened to them the doors of hope, of knowledge, of manhood, and of Christian instruction. It has been found that where the schools are, the Freedmen have been less easily seduced by flattery, and more firm in resisting the violence of their enemies.

But the skies are brightening, and it is hoped that soon the popular choice of patriotic rulers, and the steady administration of the government by those who say, "Let us have peace," will end these scenes of cajolery and murder, and that the colored people will have a fair field for the race in knowledge and social and Christian advancement.

We must not, however, infer that this race will be easily won. Foes will still be in the pathway of the Freedmen, not open, but secret, and therefore all the more dangerous. The wily arts of Romanism, with its school-houses, churches, imposing vestments and ceremonials, its priests and "sisters of charity," will seduce the unwary steps of the colored people. Intemperance will find a ready welcome in their warm blood and large social natures. Infidelity will meet them as they are breaking away from their old moorings, and nothing but the strong attractions of their natural faith, enlightened by Christian culture, will hold them to the cross of Christ. In short, their safety, politically, socially, and spiritually, depends not upon charity in clothing, nor the help of armies and legislation, but solely upon their own development into intelligent men and Christians.

In this point of view, no boon will be so important to them, in the coming year, as the Christian school and church. These the Association will endeavor to furnish to them to the full extent given to it by the contributions of its friends and the blessing of Heaven.

PHYSICAL RELIEF.

A meagre harvest last year, and the bitterness of the old masters, have given the Freedmen another sad experience in physical suffering. The Association has furnished for their relief more than $50,000 worth of clothing and supplies. The two flourishing Orphan Asylums, one at Atlanta and the other at Wilmington, have given shelter to many little sufferers who would otherwise have had neither home or food.

LABORERS IN THE FIELD.

The Association has employed among the Freedmen 532 missionaries and teachers; commissioned at the Central office, 255; at Cincinnati, by the Middle West Department, 59; the A. M. A. and W. F. A., 92; at Chicago, 105; by the F. W. Baptists, in Virginia, 21.

SCHOOLS.

The Day, Night, and Sunday-schools, under these teachers, have been efficiently maintained, and in many places have laid the foundations of a common school system for their districts or States. One important aim of the Association is to raise up teachers and preachers among the people, as the only possible way of meeting the constantly increasing demand for them. With the aid of the Freedmen's Bureau, and by making all the use it can of the cooperation of the colored people, it has already secured a large number of sites and buildings for

HIGH SCHOOLS, NORMAL SCHOOLS, AND INCORPORATED COLLEGES.

High Schools are established in Wilmington and Beaufort, N.C.; Savannah, Ga.; Memphis and Chattanooga, Tenn.; and Louisville, Ky.

Normal Schools at Hampton, Va.; Charleston, S. C.; Macon, Ga.; Talladega and Mobile, Ala.; and Chartered Colleges at Berea, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.; and Atlanta, Ga.

"The Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute" offers a three years' course of study. It is situated on a farm of 120 acres of choice land, in the cultivation of which the young men defray a considerable part of their expenses; the young women, in like manner, lessening theirs by doing the work of the boarding-house.

A peculiar feature of Berea College is, that of the 300 pupils which it numbered last year a little over one third were white. Its college preparatory class numbered eight; the remainder were in the normal and primary departments.

Fisk University, Nashville, has a charter, a corps of ten instructors, and numbers 418 pupils—88 in the normal department, 85 in the grammar-school, and the remainder in the lower department. It stands on a block of land in the city worth at least $16,000.

The Atlanta University, Georgia, occupying a choice location in the city, has a large number of students, in the earlier stages of their course. It is laying the foundations for an important institution, destined to exert a wide influence over the State. At Atlanta as at Wilmington, N. C., the Association has an Orphan Asylum in operation.

The school building at Mobile occupies one of the finest sites in the city, and is really one of the most substantial and commodious buildings in the State. It will furnish school-room for 800 pupils.

CHURCHES.

The auspicious time for the formation of churches among them on the basis of intelligence and active piety, free from the mere emotionalism of the past, has come. Already the Association has under its care such churches, at

Charleston, S. C.; Atlanta and Macon, Ga.; Chattanooga, Nashville, and Memphis, Tenn.; Talladega and Selma, Ala.; Camp Nelson and Berea, Ky., and elsewhere. One has recently been organized in that scene of prison horrors. Andersonville. Ga.

It is expected that similar organizations will soon be formed at other important places. These churches may be small at the outset, but under God they must and will increase, and become a power for good among both the colored people and the whites.

These efforts were begun with faith in God and humanity—they were consecrated with prayer to Christ—they have been blessed with a large number of revivals, all bedewed with the influence of the Spirit—and they must bear fruit to the glory of God, the salvation of these people, and the welfare of the country.

SURVEY OF THE FIELD.

EASTERN DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Missionaries-J. A. Cole and Miss J. L. Patterson.

Teacher-Turner Torrey.

Results have fully justified the withdrawal of our day-school teachers from Washington last year. By the vigorous efforts of the friends of the Freedmen and the Bureau officers in Washington, the Public School Board was induced to adopt the colored schools. A good proportion of the teachers from the North were continued by this Board, with their schools, at the public charge. This establishing, in the capital of the nation, of a free-school system upon schools already taught after the most improved methods by Northern teachers, is a natural and happy result of the educational work carried on in the city by the different benevolent organizations for the past five years.

The Association has assisted Mr. Torrey in his night-schools among the colored refugees at East Capitol Hill, and Mr. Cole in his large Sabbath-school, gathered in our former school-room in Wisewell Barracks. Miss Patterson labored most assiduously in this Sabbath-school as missionary visitor and Bible reader. Her mothers' meetings and cabin prayer meetings showed a wide and waving harvest-field ready for the laborers.

Mr. Cole's Sabbath-school will be transferred to the Colfax Industrial Mission on the completion of the new brick building, and we trust will be greatly enlarged in numbers and power during the year.

MARYLAND.

Teachers—Mrs. E. G. Jackson, Miss M. E. Watson.
The Maryland Freedman's Commission occupies this ground so fully that the Association has sustained but three teachers in the State. A letter from Miss Watson, dated Darlington, Feb. 3d, presents a pleasant picture of the school, and an evidence of her own energy and that of the people in providing a school-house:

THE SCHOOL-OLD AND YOUNG TOGETHER.

There is an increasing interest among the people for education. We have more names on our register this term than ever before. A number of adults attend the day-school, whose distance of residence forbids their attending the night-school. Several of them come four miles every day, and they learn with a rapidity truly astonishing. While the progress of the little ones acts as a stimulus for the older portion, the correct deportment of the latter has an influence for good on the former. So it is more of a benefit than disadvantage for old and young to meet on a level, although it presents rather an odd appearance.

SCHOOL-ROOM NEEDED.

We are uncomfortably situated, having no regular school-room. The church is small, and we are obliged to turn and twist many ways to carry out our daily programme. Not the least objectionable feature is the wind whistling in at every crack, and there are not a few. Some days we experience some of the scenes pictured by Howitt in "The Wind in a Frolic."

While I do not murmur, I am striving to get sufficient means to build a school-house. During the holidays we held a fair in the church for that purpose, and raised $140. We had previously collected by subscription $160. We were presented with $100 in the following manner: Two Quaker gentlemen of Philadelphia, who have relatives residing here, hearing of the progress of our scholars, and the disadvantages labored under, each gave fifty dollars. It was thankfully received as a token of God's continued goodness to those who strive to help themselves.

SPIRITUAL BLESSINGS.

I am happy to inform you that the Lord has been pouring out His Spirit abundantly in our midst. Many have professed faith in Christ, and some I trust are hopefully converted. There seems to be less of the excitement usually attending their meetings, and more of a deep, earnest work. We have had some precious prayer-meetings among the children, and there are indications that the Spirit is still hovering around waiting to bless.

A hard winter and political tyranny have brought great physical suffering upon the colored people of the South. The extract below, from a teacher's letter dated at Richmond, shows the presence of these afflictions, and is the forerunner of many similar statements yet

"The people are entering upon another hard winter, as, in addition to the old struggle against the surrounding whites, there is a concerted effort since the election, to throw them out of employment, and keep them out. Strong, active, incuss trious men and women, anxious for work and to be independent of help, are thrown by hundreds at once upon nothing, having made this sacrifice for their voting, and are now hemmed about by their old oppressors, who diligently carry out their threats to make it as hard for them as they can."

The school-work of the Association in Virginia finds its most permanent growth at the spot where its labors for the Freedmen began—Hampton. The Normal and Agricultural Institute there is in prosperous condition. *From a recent circular we copy the following items of information:

"This Institution, under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, was opened in April, 1868, and received an incorporation the following September, for the purpose of preparing youth of the South, without distinction of color, for the work of organizing and instructing schools in the Southern States. The extreme poverty of those who needed such an institution, and the value of self-help as a means of culture and true manhood, induced the Association to purchase a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, and provide it with all appliances of profitable labor.

"This 'Whipple Farm' lies upon Hampton Roads. The School and Home buildings, valued at $20,000, occupy a beautiful site upon the shore. They are so furnished and arranged as to offer to the students the helps to right living which belong to a cultivated Christian home.

^{*} Supported by the Free-Will Baptist Society.

"In the farm work, under the constant direction of an educated practical farmer, the graduates of this Institution will have learned both the theory and practice of the most profitable methods of agriculture.

"The female students do all the house-work of the boarding department. Thus, in the Home, on the farm, and in the school-room, the students have the opportunity to learn the three great lessons of life—how to live, how to labor, and how to teach others.

THREE YEARS' COURSE OF STUDY.

"First Year.—Reading; Analysis of Sounds and Vocal Gymnastics; Writing; Spelling, with definitions; Punctuation; Oral Arithmetic and Written commenced; First Lessons in Grammar; Physical Geography, with Map Drawing; Object Lessons; Vocal Music; Rhetorical Exercises; General Exercises; Gymnastics.

"SECOND YEAR.—The studies of the first year continued and carried forward; Miscellaneous Reading; Grammar and Analysis; Letter Writing and Composition; Drafts of Business Papers; Lectures on Physiology, with Charts; Lectures on Agriculture and Agricultural Chemistry, with Analysis of Soils; Vocal Music; Gymnastics; General and Rhetorical Exercises; Exercises in Teaching.

"THIRD YEAR.—General Reading; Composition and Orations; Instruction in Practical Business Methods and Book-Keeping; Exercises in Oral and Writter Arithmetic, and in Geography; Natural Science, with Lectures; Lectures on Agriculture and Agricultural Chemistry, with experiments by pupils; Rhetorical Exercises; Vocal Music; Gymnastics; Exercises in teaching classes, to develop power of expression, and actual teaching in the Butler and Lincoln Model Schools, in the vicinity of the Institution.

"Students who have the ability to take the course in two years are allowed so to do. Reviews of these studies will be held at the close of each week, term, and year. Those who fail to pass satisfactory examinations will not be continued in the school. There is a well-selected nucleus of a Library; cooperation in enlarging it, and in providing scientific apparatus, and minerals, and specimens of natural history for a cabinet is earnestly desired.

"Hours of Work.—In the First Term, four hours per day. During the Second Term, the time will be mainly devoted to study, until the first of February, when five hours' work per day will be required till spring harvest. In the Third Term, four hours per day.

"Regulations.—It is required that students shall abstain entirely from the use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco, and improve the fine opportunity for sea and fresh-water bathing; and always govern themselves by the laws of good deportment which belong to every well-ordered, cheerful, Christian household."

TERMS.

"Tultion in all studies, per month, $1. Rent of furnished rooms, per month, 75 cents. A large room, for evening study, warmed and lighted free of expense. Board, including washing and lights, per week, $1,75. Books furnished at reduced rates. Clothing supplied at cost of material and making. Wages paid for labor for from three to five hours per day, from four to twelve cents per hour. In vacations by the day, at the same rate. A strict ledger account, kept with each student, is always open to examination."

RESULTS OF THE MANUAL LABOR.

"The first crop has been planted and gathered under all the disadvantages of an experiment, and with a very heavy outlay in recovering a farm wasted by war, stocking it with fruit-trees, small fruits, hot-beds, etc., and erecting a barn and an entire new fence, amounting to $4059. The gross sales of produce in the Northern markets have been $2156.56. Crops now in the ground, (estimated,) $1800. Total, $3956.56.

"The 19 male students who entered in April earned during the term and spring vacation an average of $1.10 per week above expenses to them. The earnings of the 13 female students who entered in April fall a little short of their expenses. In the summer vacation, (six weeks,) male students earned $3 per week above expenses. Females from 50 cents to $1. The average cost of food has been 23 cents per day. It is expected that with ordinary prosperity the farm, during the coming year, will pay its own expenses and board the students for their labor."

TO FRIENDS.

! "The advantages offered in this Institution cost more than the rates named. Tuition is nominal, fuel is without charge, and no provision is made for the books or clothing of needy students. To meet deficits, which the annual account with some of the most needy and deserving must unavoidably show, scholarships yielding $85 for males, and $100 for females, are earnestly solicited.

"We cordially invite friends from a distance to visit the Institution, and note its methods and the progress of this first experiment of the kind for preparing teachers for the Freedmen. We also invite our friends, and especially our missionaries and teachers, to seek out such deserving youth as this Institution is designed to benefit, and call their attention to it,"

The schools in Norfolk and other parts of the State are flourishing, and elsewhere the calls for schools are urgent. The report of a Bureau officer says:

"Since my last report, in which it was stated that more than a hundred applications had been received for schools in new locations, the following reports of places needing schools have been made, namely:

"At Lynchburg, every neighborhood in a circumference of six to ten miles has a population of from forty to one hundred children. Pupils travel, in some instances, as far as six miles to attend school. Lieutenant Ayers, Bureau officer for Westmoreland and Richmond counties, (where as yet there have been no schools,) states that churches and school-houses are going up in every direction. Colored preachers are exhorting their race to push forward the work of education. Freedmen throng my office daily for papers or something to read. We want a few teachers and some day-school and Sabbath-school books.

"Major James Johnson, Sub-Assistant Commissioner for the Sixth Sub-District, sends a list of twenty-six places within his district which would furnish from twenty-five to one hundred scholars each, if schools could be established. At five of these places, the colored people have begun the erection of school-houses. All would furnish land and lumber for such buildings.

"Major J. R. Stone, Sub-Assistant Commissioner of the Twenty-second Sub-District, reports that sixty additional schools should be established within his jurisdiction.

"S. C. Armstrong, Agent Fifth Sub-District, asks for the establishment of fifteen additional schools

"Captain C. S. Schaeffer, Bureau officer at Christiansburg, petitions for schools at Blacksburg and Parisburg. In several other localities, the Freedmen are building log school houses, with the hope that they will be occupied by somebody. These needy, hungering thousands make an appeal which should reach every heart, and this is a sample of what is true in every State. Our efforts should be greatly

The following extracts indicate the religious interest of the people, with some old superstitions:

"Eastville, (Eastern Shore.) November, 1867.

"We open our doors two evenings in the week for lessons to adults in reading. writing, and searching the Scriptures. Our house was too much crowded at first. I presume from the novelty, but afterward comfortably full. The interest that was manifested exceeded our most sanguine expectations. We brought benches from the school-house. Our largest boys and girls crowded in and took their seats upon the floor, with Bible in hand. After singing and prayer, each present that could would read a verse of Scripture, from such a chapter as some one present particularly desired. .

"But the best of all was, the word they were searching sank deep into the hearts of some and took root, sprang up, bearing precious fruit, they rejoicing that they had become Bible Christians.

But strange indeed to say, it quite alarmed some of the members of the church But strange indeed to say, it quite sharmed some of the members of the church that those who were concerned for their soul's salvation should attempt to look for instruction or comfort from the Bible. They wanted to see their children and friends get religion as they did. They fell under the mighty power of God, and after mourning many days, and then came out shouting; for an angel, they said, told them their sins were forgiven. They said their masters and families were Bible Christians, and they did not want to be like them.

"On one occasion we heard some earnest talking at the back of our house. We found it was one of our scholars, who lived with one of her colored sisters, who was upbraiding her as backsliding, because she was a Bible Christian. 'Oh!' said she, 'I thank God for such backsliding.' She had been in the habit of going with me at a distance, in retired places, to read the Scriptures to the people. She had learned to read them, and only knew how to spell in three letters a few months before. On Easter Monday she was going to wash. I said to her, 'Marie, this is a holiday your people keep. You need not work to-day.' She was much pleased, and we soon saw Marie going out of the door with her Testament in hand, to read to the neighbors and to her mother. She truly loved the Bible."

"Nonvolk, February 5, 1868. "Last Wednesday evening was one of the happiest evenings of my life. It was spent in a little meeting of young men, the most of them anxious about the salvation of their souls. Jesus was surely with us. I never felt his presence more palpably than on this occasion, and this was the testimony of the teachers present. The exercises consisted in reading a portion of Scripture, in prayers, interspersed with singing, in reading appropriate tracts, and in personal conversations.

"RICHMOND, VA., June 6, 1868.

"The most extensive revival that has ever been known here is now prevailing among the colored people. One can scarcely walk out without meeting some one who is telling his experience to friends and neighbors, and many of the un-converted that one meets by the way are much affected when conversed with on personal salvation. It is certainly an opportunity for sowing good seed. While there is reason to hope that some are truly converted, the errors which mingle with their religious views (and which I suppose are generally understood by their Northern friends) give much cause for sadness.

"The more I am with the people, the more I am convinced that the great point to which the most earnest effort for the Freedmen should be directed, is to create a healthy conscience-sensitiveness in regard to sin-a true moral sense."

FREE-WILL BAPTISTS

The missions and schools of these brethren are wisely concentrated in the Shenandoah Valley, Harper's Ferry being the headquarters. A Normal School has been started with favorable beginnings. "The work in the primary schools," says an editorial in the Morning Star, "still goes on in the valley; and never before was that work so much needed, nor so much appreciated, nor so heartily cooperated with by the people themselves, nor was the promise of precious results ever so large and clear as now." Sunday-school instruction and the preaching of the Gospel are a large and excellent part of the work of active and faithful laborers.

From this State we have pictures of physical suffering, drawn by sympathetic pens, and a touching sketch of gratitude for liberal assistance.

MUTE DESPAIR-AN AGED SUFFERER.

"BEAUFORT, N. C., October 31, 1867.

"Another failure of crops, with the fall of cotton, has spread over the whole community a general despondency. The entire withdrawal of government rations from hundreds of disabled men, women, and orphan children of both races.

"This fall we forget race and color in our plea for the poor. I have never known less complaint among them; but their quiet is mute despair.

"During this month, a family, a few miles distant, brought an aged sufferer to the town to deliver him to the wardens of the poor. They would not receive him. They then applied to the Bureau, but they are forbidden to give rations. In desperation they lifted the helpless victim of more than a hundred years from the boat, and, laying him down on the shore, left him to his fate. A poor colored man took him in for a few days, till his own last crust was exhausted, and then carried him to the same place, and laid him down to await the passing of another Samaritan."

EXTREME POVERTY.

"Morehead City, May 6.

"The poverty of the people is beyond any thing I have ever seen. Mothers buy (not meal, but) bran to keep their children alive, and deal it out in very small quantities.

"Mr. Jerkins called on a family, the other day, where the father had been afflicted with dropsy ever since Christmas; and his sufferings are so great that he is unable to lie down. Mr. Jerkins inquired how his family got along.

"'When I was in health,' the man said, 'they never suffered for food; but now,' he said, bursting into tears, 'they go along the street picking up and eating what other children cast away.'"

VOTE WITH THE OLD MASTERS, OR STARVE.

"Wilmington, N. C., August 11, 1868.

"There are thousands compelling their laborers to join a Democratic club or dismissing them from their employment. Many in Wilmington are now daily dismissed. Suffering already grows out of this evil, which threatens to become extensive. Some twenty or thirty men have joined such clubs rather than have their families starve. Most are firm, and tell their employers that they will perish before they will sell themselves to those who would drive them from the ballot-box and rob them of their rights.

"Remember us in these trying times."

A GRATEFUL DISTRIBUTER.

" BEAUFORT.

"Sitting, the other day, beside a gray-haired man, while with difficulty he spelled out, 'Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me,' he exclaimed, 'Thank God! thank God!' The religion of these people is not a cold abstraction. Where other hearts would sink under the weight of trial, their voices, often triumphant in prayer, exclaim, 'Give us this day our daily bread.' And God hears them. Do not we know that God hears them? The other day! wrote a letter to a dear friend in Worcester, Mass., and he sent me forthwith $100 to feed God's poor. I wanted to get down on my knees and kiss his feet; and every time I carry a pail of meal or a few potatoes, to put into the bony fingers of sickly sufferers, I say, 'God sent you this.' And in their dark cabins they have a thanksgiving unknown in lands of plenty."

SCHOOLS.

The "Williston School" of Wilmington is sketched in the Post of that city:

"Through the courtesy of Rev. S. S. Ashley, we yesterday had the opportunity of inspecting two of the four free schools now located in this city, and which, through Mr. Ashley, as Superintendent, have been heretofore supported altogether by the American Missionary Association.

"Our first visit was to a large building which contained in all, some five hundred and fifty pupils. This, the Williston School, is divided into a primary and a grammar school, and the exercises are conducted altogether by ladies. The former numbers about three hundred children. In the other department, the grammar school, there are about two hundred and fifty scholars.

"We spent an hour at this school very pleasantly, busied in listening to the recitations of the different classes, and to exercises in singing, arithmetical catechism, etc. The proficiency, as exhibited yesterday, is truly wonderful, and reflects much credit upon the patient toil and care of the lady teachers."

The teacher at Fayetteville, a colored man, without assuming his to be a Normal School, yet shows that it can send forth teachers:

"Last week I had the pleasure of organizing a school in the country, about twelve miles from this place. I have placed one of my advanced pupils in charge of it, and it promises well. About thirty scholars are already enrolled, and the number daily increases.

"Another of my pupils has taken a school in an adjoining county, which is out of my district. Another begins to teach next week, which will be the sixth teacher sent out of my school.'

A VERY SMALL TEACHER.

"Besides these, many others are engaged in teaching their friends and neighbors at night. One little fellow, scarcely three feet high, but who is remarkably smart, has two or three grown men as his night-scholars."

From Morehead City we have this picture:

"This month has unhered into school a number of married people. Mothers leave their infants with their neighbors and come. Two ministers sit side by side in my morning-school, observing the same decorum and order that I require of all mysophile.

"One of them, upon entering the school for the first time, said, 'I can never leave it until I have learned my letters.' And sure enough, before he left the room he was able to call every letter. But he labored most industriously, and besides the assistance that Mr. Jerkins had time to give, I had one of my pupils chow him '

RELIGIOUS.

Love of Learning and of the Bible.—The Superintendent at Beaufort writes:

"And to see this work go steadily on against great odds—so many difficulties—children coming in mid-winter to school from five miles distant—coming half-clad, often with bare and naked feet—women without bread, picking up a few oysters on the margin of chilly waters, and hurrying away to school, as if food for the mind, the soul, was better than life! What makes it more beautiful is the motive most apparent impelling them to this thirst for knowledge—their desire to be able to read the precious Bible. If there is a people on earth in whom an instinctive love of the Gospel of our Lord has not been crushed out, this is the people. From the dark pine forests, many miles distant, they come to me often for a primer, saying they must learn to read the blessed Bible.

"I could show you a Bible, if you were here, 'toted' hundreds of miles all through the long war, laid beneath the head many a sleepless night in the damp forest, pressed to the heart in fervid devotion daily through lingering years; and yet he who possessed it waited all these lingering years till his little son from our school taught him to read its glorious truths.

"Another, an old mother in Israel, 'toted' hers, a large family Bible, five hundred miles, kept it for years, only to have its glorious pages unsealed to her spectacled vision in our day-school."

Revival influences have been enjoyed and temperance efforts have been pushed forward with success.

One teacher writes from Favetteville:

"The fruits of the late revival are still being reaped. During the past month twenty-five have been received into the church, on profession of faith in Christ. Truly the Lord is gracious!"

Another says:

"Last Sabbath, ten of our former pupils united with the church, and there are others who are hoping in Christ. The school-house was overflowing, and many were seated around the door and in our front yard to listen to the exercises."

We have this notice of a temperance movement in Beaufort:

"We had formed, several months since, a Juvenile Temperance Association. In their pledge of abstinence from every thing that intoxicates, we included that curse of North-Carolina, tobacco, in its varied forms. We often met with the children, pointed them to the 'Black Valley Railroad' with all its horrors, read to them, talked to and prayed for them. Steadily the number increased, till more than eighty children were enrolled in the Temperance Band of Hope. Not till the early part of the month now past did adults begin to clamor for admission to these associations, that are lifting them from their vice and filth. For the last thirty days, the temperance reform seems sweeping every thing before it. Middleaged and gray-haired men and women ask to join this army, now strong for freedom in its highest sense."

PHYSICAL RELIEF.

Here, too, we have pictures of destitution and supply. We give one sketch from Hilton Head:

"Most of the people are very poor. They have a disposition to work, but employment is wanting for many. Some cultivate a piece of land that they get, one, two, or three miles out of the village. Some have work from the Government, but there is very little of that now. A few have a trade which gives them a comfortable support. Their diet is very simple. They live chiefly on hominy; the children eat it without any accompaniments. The people eat with it fish or sorn, and are satisfied. But when they come to the end of their year's supply of corn, it is hard times with them. The fish and oysters that they can get plentifully in their season afford a great relief. The little children have a hard life out of the school-room. Most of the time they are put to some hard work. Little ones, eight or ten years old, go for wood, which they bring on their heads, and bravely too, singing under their burden; or down by the shore to catch crabs for dinner, or are left for hours together with the whole care of younger ones, babies even, while their mothers are at work in the field. And they are just as faithful as can be to every trust.

"The barrels of clothing that have been sent us this year, twelve or fifteen in number, have been of great benefit to the people. Some of the children had been to school in ragged garments for a long time, and some of these, not having any proper fastenings, were sewed together in front. We were happy to be able to substitute for those rags comfortable garments."

SCHOOLS.

Reconstruction and the vote of the people have deprived the Association of its Charleston Superintendent of Schools. Rev. F. L. Cardozo, who has so long and so efficiently conducted them, has been elected Secretary of State for South-Carolina. We congratulate him on the call to a higher sphere of usefulness, and we rejoice that the people of that State have selected a valuable officer. No more significant illustration has yet been furnished of the marked change in the South than that F. L. Cardozo, born in Charleston, refused education there, and obliged to seek it in Europe, because of the tinge of colored blood in his veins, should be elevated by popular vote to his high position in South-Carolina!

The Avery Institute was dedicated May 7th, 1868. We copy from Charleston papers, a description of the building and of the dedicatory exercises:

THE AVERY INSTITUTE, CHARLESTON.

"This new and handsome school building is named in honor of the late Rev. Charles Avery, of Pittsburg, Pa., from whose bequest $10,000 were given to the American Missionary Association, and applied by it to the purchase of the lands on which this edifice stands, and to the erection of a mission-home. The normal school edifice itself was built for the Association by the Freedmen's Bureau, at a zost of $17,000.

THE BUILDING.

"The building is 88 feet long, 68 feet wide, 50 feet high, and to the top of the flag-staff 90 feet. It is raised on brick pillars, with spacious brick basements, and a large cistern underneath. On the first floor are four large class-rooms, two for the first class of boys and two for the first class of girls. Two of these rooms are of double size, divided by sliding glass doors, and intended, when built, for the preparatory and higher classes of a normal department. Each of the class-rooms is capable of accommodating from fifty to seventy-five pupils, and is fitted up with handsome desks. The hallway is also furnished with convenient closets and racks for the reception of hats, cloaks, etc. On the second floor is a commodious assembly hall, with four long rows of seats, and a desk and platform for the principal. On this floor are also two large class-rooms, and running round the walls of the class-room is a composition blackboard. On either side of the building are spacious piazzas running the entire length, and opened upon from the class-rooms. The building is finely ventilated on a new and improved plan.

THE DEDICATION.

"The services were held in the assembly hall of the building. The audience was chiefly composed of colored persons, but there were also present General R. K. Scott, Governor-elect of South-Carolina, Judge Bryan, and other gentlemen of distinction. The exercises were under the direction of Rev. F. L. Cardozo, then Superintendent of the Schools, now Secretary of State. They were commenced by singing a children's chorus. Selections of Scripture were read by Rev. E. J. Adams, colored, and prayer offered by Rev. Giles Pease.

"Rev. Dr. Hicks, of Brooklyn, N. Y., then delivered the address.
"The exercises were closed by a short address by Rev. F. L. Cardozo, in which he acknowledged their indebtedness to General Scott for the erection of the building, and many other noble works in his administration of the Bureau."

RELIGIOUS.

Charleston, S. C., has its Plymouth Church as well as Brooklyn,

N. Y.; the latter, the largest church in the land, of the denomination to which it belongs—the former, the largest colored church of the same denomination. Facts in regard to its numbers, liberality need of an edifice, and enjoyment of Thanksgiving Day, are given in a letter from its late pastor. We copy:

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT.

"Affairs are, so far as I can judge, in a most delightful condition in our church. The meetings are well sustained, in numbers and interest; while the Sunday school is rapidly increasing, numbering about two hundred and seventy-five

"Last Thursday we had a Thanksgiving service in regular New-England style. It was our first Thanksgiving as a church, and the first in which this people were ever included in the 'call.' They appeared to enjoy the meeting greatly; and after the sermon, they came forward and subscribed $520 toward purchasing a lot on which to build a church. We shall raise the subscription, I think, to $800 or $1000, as only seventy-five have yet subscribed, and every member will desire to have a part in this first effort of the church. Most of the brethren subscribed $10 each, a few $20, and a few $5; most of the sisters subscribed $5. These subscriptions are to be paid in weekly installments of 25 cents and 50 cents each, although some have paid half down. The Sunday-school scholars are to have a hand in this work. It has already raised by penny contributions $10 for the church in Washington.

"In this way we expect to realize $500 by the 1st of February, with which to make the first payment on the lot, as we hope to secure one by that time. We are very anxious for a church; our membership being two hundred and fourteen now, and several ready to unite soon. Some of the leading members have their minds about made up as to location and the lot they will purchase. I hope you will not think that we underestimate the privilege we hope by and by to enjoy of having the chapel at our command."

The work in Georgia demands extended notice—more, in fact, than our space will warrant. The State contains a larger colored population than any other State, and the Association has a larger number of missionaries and teachers in it than in any other State; indeed, it has almost the exclusive occupancy of the field, so far as the Freedmen are concerned. It has a noble band of workers there, some of them young men of enterprise, education, and piety, who, intending at first to remain but a short time, have become so much interested as to have decided to make Georgia the scene of their lifework.

Governor Bullock, in his recent message, referring to the time that will be required to perfect the system of common schools in the State, speaks in terms of warm commendation of the educational efforts sustained there by the liberality of friends in the Northern States, and invites the attention of the Legislature to the report of Mr. Ware, the Bureau Superintendent of Schools in Georgia. We copy a few sentences from that report:

"This last school year they (the Northern societies) have supported 123 teachers, at an expense of $50,000. Of these 104 were supported by the American Missionary Association, 7 by the New-England branch of the Freedmen's Union Commission, and 12 by the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In addition to the above, the American Missionary Association has expended, during these three years, about $30,000 in land and buildings for school purposes, and has distributed more than $50,000 worth of clothing and provisions to the poor of all classes. They also, with the aid of the Bureau, support a large orphan asylum at Atlanta."

As might be expected in a State where the Association is expending so much money and sending so many laborers, it is aiming at permanency; hence its effort for the establishment of Normal Schools, and the erection of buildings. The following account of Beach Institute, Savannah, is taken from the Savannah Republican. The building is "a neat and substantial frame structure, resting on a brick foundation. The main building is 55 feet by 60 feet, and at the north and south ends there are two L's, each 10 feet by 35 feet. On the first floor there are four large school-rooms, each fitted up with substantial desks and seats, and with blackboards lining the walls of each. The ceilings are high, and the rooms well lighted. By sliding-doors and windows the rooms can all be thrown into one, at any time it may be desirable so to do. On the second floor are also four school-rooms, and one antercom. They are also fitted up neatly with appropriate furniture, blackboards, etc. There is a staircase at each end of the building, so that there is furnished safe and ready exit from the upper story. Taken as a whole, it is one of the most complete, comfortable, and convenient educational buildings that can be found anywhere.

ORIGIN, COST, ETC.

"The building cost $13,000, and was erected by the Freedmen's Bureau. The land was purchased with a sum donated by Alfred E. Beach, Esq., editor Scientific American, and the building has been most appropriately named the 'Beach Institute.' There are six hundred scholars in the different schools, and now that there are more accommodations, this number will probably be largely increased. The institution is under the charge of O. W. Dimick. There are nine female teachers, eight white and one colored. On the east side of the school-building stands the 'Teachers' Home,' a two-story frame building, and a very neat and comfortable looking structure, which was erected at a cost of $3000, by the American Missionary Association, which society provides for the school.

THE DEDICATORY EXERCISES

commenced at a few minutes past twelve o'clock, upon the arrival of the processionists, who filled the large room to repletion. Prayer was offered by Rev. James Simms, and the children then sang most beautifully a little hymn, 'Hosanna is the children's song.' Mr. Dimick then introduced the State Superintendent, Mr. E. A. Ware, who delivered a short address.

"Mr. Ware congratulated them upon the completion of the school-building, and tried to impress upon the minds of all present the importance of education. He bade them remember the denor of the land, be grateful to him and to the government which had erected the building, and teld them their parents must support and assist the teachers, or all the expense would be in vain. He urged upon them the importance of keeping the building clean and unmarked, and said that it should be carefully cherished as a means of securing the great end—education. The inscription, 'Knowledge with virtue,' had been placed over the door. Let us, said he, dedicate the building to knowledge clothed with virtue; and he hoped that within its walls there would be those trained up in strength of mind and purity of character who would be a blessing to all with whom they came in contact.

"General John R. Lewis, Inspector Freedmen's Bureau, was then introduced, and said that they all seemed to be rejoicing, and they had good cause to rejoice. He asked them to look back over the year that was passed, and review their short-comings, and determine that at the close of this year they would have nothing to regret. The future was not all bright and promising. Gaunt hunger and dreadful want hung as a shadow over the land. Let us henceforth make such good use of our opportunities that, hereafter, we may not be compelled to look back with regret upon the acts of the past. They were not thoroughly emancipated or free until they emancipated themselves from vice and immorality, and became educated, and fit to enjoy the rights which had been conferred upon them, and became a law-abiding, honest, and industrious people, that would be so looked upon by people everywhere, and be respected and trusted. In this building is the great influence that must accomplish this result. He trusted that it would be re-dedicated every day by the faithful labors of teachers and the study of papils, that this great end may be accomplished.

"Rev. James Simms then made a short speech, congratulatory in character, and indorsing what had been said by the previous speaker.

"The assemblage then united in singing 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,' etc., and after the benediction was pronounced, they slowly dispersed."

MACON.

From several accounts, we combine a description of recent scenes in this place, which are full of interest and promise;

DEDICATION OF THE LEWIS SCHOOL-HOUSE-CLEARING FOR ACTION.

"On the 25th of March, the builders had struck their last stroke; the rooms had been washed and made clean; the doors were closed, and the keys delivered to the representative of the American Missionary Association. The building was ready for the sacred use for which it had been erected.

"On the day following, March 26th, at three o'clock in the afternoon, we assembled to dedicate this edifice to God, and to the Christian education of the freed people. The yet incomplete chapel, adjoining the school-building, and into which one of the school-rooms opens by sliding-doors, had been cleared of its benches, its tol-chests, its lumber, its shavings, and the noise of its builders; the huge sliding-doors opening into the first school-room had been drawn back; the folding-doors between that and the next-room had been folded back upon themselves—transforming the chapel and two rooms of the school-building into one large audience-hall. As the hour for the services approached, crowds of men, women, and children filled the chapel and the adjoining rooms, eager, expectant, evidently feeling that this was indeed a great day for them.

THE DEDICATORY SERVICES.

consisted of the reading of appropriate selections of Scripture, prayer, and several addresses; all interspersed with the singing of several patriotic and other fitting pieces by a selected choir of more than one hundred pupils, from our higher grades of school

"Mr. Rockwell made a brief statement of the commencement and progress of the American Missionary Association's work in Macon. He was followed by the leading speaker, Mr. E. A. Ware, of Atlanta, in a clear, simple, frank, bold presentation of truths appropriate to the time and the occasion. Mr. Ware was followed by General Lewis, a prominent officer of the Freedmen's Bureau in this department, and in honor of whom the new school-building had received its name. His address was very touching.

THE SCHOOL.

"The school which the American Missionary Association has just completed stands on a very sightly lot, and is in every respect a most commedious and well-furnished building. The building is eightly feet long by sixty in width, two full stories high, and has accommodations for nine schools, and, altogether, for something over five hundred scholars. The schools are graded, and are most admirably presided over by teachers who can not be surpassed by any in New-England. Intelligent, refined, thoroughly capable, these teach with enthusiasm, and adopt the latest and best method of imparting instruction in vogue in the common schools of Boston and Worcester. The school-rooms are finished with Georgia pine, and are-furnished with neat cherry desks and all the modern appliances of the best New-England schools. Adjoining these rooms are convenient closets for the shawls and hats of the scholars. In the upper floor is also a pleasant office for the principal, and a recitation-room for normal and more advanced classes. The whole building is a model of its kind, and is justly the pride of the teachers of the Association and the colored people of Macon."

ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH.

"Yesterday, April 11th, will form an era in the history of Macon; for New-England came down and planted her peculiar institutions, the school-house and the church, in the midst of these dark and desiring masses. An ecclesiastical council met at Macon at the call of persons here, white and black, who desired to be organized into a Congregational church. The public services of the occasion were as follows: Reading of the Scriptures and prayer, by Rev. E. O. Tade, of Chattanooga, Tenn.; sermon by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, of Boston; consecrating prayer, by Rev. E. P. Smith, of New-York; fellowship of the churches, by Rev. C. W. Francis, of Atlanta, Ga.; concluding prayer, by Rev. M. M. G. Dana, of Norwich, Ct.; benediction, by Rev. Frank Haley, acting pastor.

"The circumstances in which the council was placed not unnaturally con-

"The circumstances in which the council was placed not unnaturally conspired to render the whole scene one of deep and tender interest. When it is remembered that, two years ago last December, there was not a school in Macon for the colored people—hardly a spelling-book or a Bible—one who has looked upon results which meet the eye to-day is constrained to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought?' Within these two years, out of a colored population of 6000 persons, the Association has gathered into its schools at least 2500, all of whom have been taught to read, and hundreds of whom, now in the schools, are as thoroughly taught, as well disciplined, as scholars of a similar grade in the schools of the North."

DEDICATION OF NORWICH CHAPEL-DESCRIPTION OF THE BUILDING.

"Our new chapel is at last completed, and dedicated to the worship and service of the Most High God. The chapel is seventy feet long, and forty feet in width. Its style of architecture is Gothic. Outside it is white, with brown trimmings. Inside it is a model of taste and symmetrical beauty. It is admitted to be 'the neatest chapel in Macon.' As you enter its doors, you are impressed with its cheerful and inviting aspect. It is called Norwich Chapel, because it was largely built by contributions from the Second Congregational church and society in Norwich, Ct.

THE DEDICATION.

"On Sunday, April 12th, at eleven o'clock A.M., an audience of six hundred assembled in the chapel and the adjoining school-room to witness the dedicatory services. Rev. M. M. G. Dana, pastor of the Second Congregational church in Norwish, Ct., preached from Isaiah 46:13. The sermon was simple, earnest, and impressive, and was listened to with the closest attention. The dedicatory prayer was by Rev. C. F. P. Bancroft, of Lookout Mountain, Tenn. This prayer was very appropriate and impressive. As the prayer of dedication was about to close, there was a hushed silence, while with voiceless gratitude our hearts gave this house to God, to be his peculiar dwelling-place—and again the voice of prayer arose: 'We dedicate this chapel to thee, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. These seats we dedicate to thee. This pulpit we dedicate to thee. From foundation-stone to the loved flag of our country that floats above us, we dedicate it all to thee.' And so Norwich Chapel, with its proud emblem of universal liberty, was solemnly dedicated to God; to his service in behalf of the ignorant, the poor, and the oppressed. And then, in a song of praise, this joyous act was repeated, and the benediction of God fell sweetly upon our hearts."

THE CHURCH.

"The church enterprise starts most auspiciously; the congregation, already numbering some three hundred, largely composed of the intelligent young men and women in the day-schools, and the Sabbath-school having on its rolls more than two hundred names. It does not need large faith to believe that such a church and congregation, at a very early day, will be a controlling power in this community. At the close of the Sabbath service in the afternoon, the little church sat down to the table of communion. It was a scene of touching and sacred interest. We thought of our suffering and glorified Lord, of the work to be done, of the future career of blessing and influence opening up and bearing the consecrated band forward to toil and duty."

AUGUSTA.

The National Republican of Augusta sketches the closing exercises of the schools in that city;

"The exercises at Springfield Church, on Wednesday afternoon, were of a peculiarly interesting character. 'At four o'clock, the ten colored schools, accompanied by the teachers, entered the church in good order, where had already assembled the Richmond County Board of Education and a large number of citizens."

After giving the order of exercises, which we omit, the article speaks of the teachers which the Association has sent into Georgia, and of its work in Augusta:

"Many of the teachers have gone into this work without earthly remuneration. Some have come from luxurious homes; some as graduates, others as teachers, from the very best colleges and seminaries in the land. No less than five alumnt of Yale Colleges are engaged solely in this work in the State of Georgia. These teachers have worked on quietly, minding their own business, yet faithfully and earnestly—oftentimes amid terrible opposition, frequently amid insults on the streets, and always under the ban of social ostracism.

"THE WORK IN AUGUSTA commenced much later than in some other places. The first teachers, two or three in number, came to this place in December, 1865. In January, 1866, others followed. Since then, the work has been steadily increasing, until now more than two thousand children have been taught to read, more than twelve hundred have been taught to write, and more than one thousand have been taught the elements of geography and arithmetic. Nor is this all. The teachers have distributed themselves among all the colored Sunday-schools, and are leavening mightily the whole lump. When the school-hours have closed, they have gone into these huts of poverty and administered delicacies and consolation to the sick. They have given them lessons in economy and cleanliness, and counseled them to industry and sobriety."

RELIGIOUS INTEREST.

A teacher reports:

"I am happy to report the deep interest in religion manifested by some of my own pupils. Several have already confessed Christ, and give good evidence of conversion. Three that have acted as teachers in my Sunday-school have found Jesus to be precious. One of them remarked that 'she had felt, when trying to explain the lessons, unit for her position; for how could she teach or present Christ as a Saviour, unless she had experienced his love?' I wish you could see the changed faces, for they are changed."

ATHENS.

Our schools in this university town are thus described:

"I came to this city in October, 1867; found three ladies from the State of New-York in charge of the schools. They then met in the two churches, and had an attendance of 120 pupils."

NEW SCHOOL-HOUSE.

"On the 4th of November, our new school-house was dedicated, and since that time we have been teaching in it. It is a fine building, erected by the Freedmen's Bureau at a cost of a little more than $5000, under the direction of Major Knox, whose name it takes. It is a two-story building with four rooms, capable of holding 63 pupils each. Our school for the month of March numbered 270 pupils. Each pupil pays a monthly tuition of fifty cents, except those who are not able, such as orphans, etc., of whom there is a considerable number.

NIGHT-SCHOOLS.

"Besides the day-school, we teach a night-school, which is attended by adults, some as old as forty and fifty years. These are just learning to read, write, and cipher, but they make good progress. Some of them who began in the primer, and knew nothing of figures, are now reading in the Third Reader, and have been through the primary Arithmetie; and this in about four months, attending three nights each week, their business meanwhile occupying nearly all the time out of school, and making the time spent in study comparatively short.

"NIGGERS SOON THUNDERING AT THE GATES OF UNIVERSITIES."

"The colored people of this place are generally well off, compared with those of other places. This is a literary town; here is the State University, which of course brings young men here from all parts of the State. And it seems to pain them exceedingly to see the 'young niggers' going to school instead of waiting upon them as heretofore. One of the teachers here has expressed the fear that 'the niggers will soon be thundering at the gates of our universities.'

MIDWAY.

From an interesting sketch of a missionary tour performed by Rev. Giles Pease, we copy two items:

AN INTERESTING FAMILY.

"The father of another family near by, one of several brothers of this lady, having a wife and six or seven children, formerly an extensive planter and slaveholder. an officer in the rebel army-paroled on surrender of the army, and returned to his now comfortable but once elegant house, surrounded by elegant pleasure-grounds. embracing varieties of fruit-bearing trees and vines, flowering plants and vines and shrubs and trees, but all now neglected in their culture—told me that he found it difficult to provide even corn-bread enough for the subsistence of his household, while, a few years ago, he could have easily and luxuriously subsisted twenty families as large as his own-that meat they did not eat, except as a rarity and a luxury."

A CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH DISCOVERED.

"In allusion to the religious service of the previous evening, with deep emotional interest, this gentleman remarked, 'I did not know, till after the meeting last evening, that you were a Congregationalist. We are a Congregational church here. This is a branch house for religious service. We had our centennial in 1851. We have existed here by ourselves this more than a hundred years. But we are now scattered and peeled and desolate, and some of our members must starve, if help can not be afforded them soon. I wonder,' he continued, 'if the original church of Dorchester, Mass, from which we came, would not be willing to give us some little help, if they knew our state? We have existed alone—here among ourselves -have had no connection with any other churches in the State-our marriages even have been almost wholly among our own membership. We formerly were wealthy-sustained a branch colored church of five hundred members-supported a minister for their special instruction. We have educated more than a hundred for the gospel ministry—and for physicians and lawyers a very large number, above any other portion of the State. Now we are scattered and weakened and desolate,' etc., etc.

On a subsequent visit, Mr. Pease gathers farther facts in reference to THE DISCOVERED CHURCH.

"The church was organized in Dorchester, Mass., in 1695. December 5th, of that year, they embarked with their pastor for a place on the Ashley river, eighteen miles above Charleston, S. C. After a long experience of the unhealthiness of that locality, in 1752 they projected and began a settlement in Georgia; to which the church and pastor soon removed. The place of their settlement they called 'MIDWAY,' because of its supposed equal distance from the Ogeechee and Ottamalia

"Without relating many incidents of deep interest in her history, in colonial times—her foremost position in the cause of Liberty, on which account the legislature gave the settlement the name of LIBERTY COUNTY-I would state, generally. that the influence for good of the MIDWAY Church, throughout the State of Georgia, in all her resolutions and interests, has been proverbial, and has been felt to an extent vastly beyond that of any other body of men in proportion to their number.

"A minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in McIntosh county, and a native of Georgia, and once a soldier in the rebel army, volunteered this testimony:

The Congregational church of Midway is the most remarkable organization in the State of Georgia. It has done more for the cause of education and religion than any church of any other denomination, TEN TIMES OVER. I hope it will not be suffered to die, because of its prominent connection with the historic events and interests of the State in the past.'

"The colored portion of the church, numbering about FOUR HUNDRED, NOW ON THE GROUND, are far superior in intelligence to the generality of ex-slaves in other sections of the State."

GOOD HUMOR UNDER TRIALS.

"With the utmost care we can exercise, our teachers are sometimes sent to places where the home and school house are not prepared as we had been led to suppose they would be. We present in the subjoined humorous sketch a picture of the consequent privations, and of the abundant good nature with which such vexations are endured. We need scarcely give assurance that the difficulties of the situation were speedily relieved; for soon the home of the teachers was supplied with a fair share of modern conveniences, and the school mentioned at the close of the letter gathered.

" ' January 8, 1868. "'We have been here nearly a week, and are still living in primitive style. We were here three days without even a bed; at last, by our united efforts, we succeeded in obtaining that. We are still minus chairs and dishes and about every other article of furniture. Fortunately we have some tinware, which answers various purposes besides its ordinary uses.

"'One needs to be a missionary awhile to appreciate all the uses to which a tin plate can be put; a long one answers for a plate for two persons; one corner can be partitioned off for salt, another for sauce, another for bread, and a potato in the middle. This same tin plate will make an excellent mirror. In the absence of chairs, the floor (my present location) is not a very bad seat, and one can use their lap for a table if necessary. Shovels and tongs are quite useless extravagances as long as one has fingers-liable to get burned sometimes, but missionaries must expect that. Add to this the fact that our stove smokes most outrageously, causing us to shed a great many tears, and you have some idea of our internal arrange-

"'Our home from the outside appears to be a very neat little cottage; but when you open the door, "what a fall is there, my countrymen!" unceiled and unplastered walls whose rough, barn-like boards are well adorned with wasps' nests; these, however, have nearly disappeared since our arrival, owing to a vast amount of poking and pounding. We wash our own windows, do our own cooking, kill our own lizards, cut our own fingers, burn our own faces, and hold no one responsible. Our house at night is made luminous by the light of one tallow candle set in a tin pepper-box; we think candles are less dangerous than oil, and pepper-boxes are less expensive than lamps. Add to our other blessings a contented mind, and you will see we have very much for which to be grateful. I should have told you about our school, only we have none; school-houses are scarce about here. We have the prospect of a very large school."

Atlanta is in the Middle-West Department, and the details in regard to it will be found in Secretary Cravath's report.

FLORIDA.

Teacher, Miss E. B. Eveleth.

Captain Wilder, asking for Bibles, books, etc., gives some interesting facts in regard to Florida, from which we copy the following:

"JACKSONVILLE, January 1, 1868. "DEAR BRETHREN: I find the moral destitution of the colored people in this city and State several degrees below that of the more Northern slave States, and with fewer agencies for good.

"Up to within the last six months, the old feelings of hatred, arrogance, and spite were observable, often cropping out here and there, sometimes in open insults to Northerners, but more generally in suspicions and insinuations. Thanks be to God, a better day is dawning, and a better feeling is noticeable on every hand.
Two weeks since, as one of their leading men was riding into the city on Sabbath morning, seemingly pondering as did the 'Ethiopian eunuch,' what these things could mean, he accosted a colored man on the way to church and Sabbath-school, with his boys and girls, and said, 'Where are you going?' 'To church and Sabbath-school, sir.' 'Where?' 'Up there,' pointing to the church, 'where they have white teachers.' 'Do they learn you any thing?' 'Yes, sir; a great deal, Please go in with us and see.' After some hesitation and urging he ventured in, and finding several white residents known to him, he became composed and watched the proceedings with intense interest. It was at the opening of the Sabbathschool. The singing, 'Come to Jesus,' by the entire school, aided and led by one of Smith's splendid melodeons, was very fine; he seemed spell-bound. A passage of Scripture was read and explained, prayer was offered specially for the school, and church, and State, for both temporal and spiritual blessings upon all classes of the people. This seemed to be more than the poor man could bear, and he arose as if to leave. It was noticed, and he was invited to address the school, and also to call again. He declined the first, expressing his very great satisfaction at what he had witnessed, and promised to call again at some future day."

MIDDLE-WEST DEPARTMENT.

OFFICE, TRACT BUILDING, 176 ELM STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The cooperation established between the Middle-West Department of the American Missionary Association and the Western Freedmen's Aid Commission, October, 1866, has been continued this year, and the common work has been under the charge of the following officers:

Secretary.

Rev. E. M. CRAVATH.

Treasurer.

THOMAS KENNEDY.

General Agent.

LEVI COFFIN.

DETT COLLEN

Advisory Board.

Hon. WM. PENN NIXON,

Rev. HENRY D. MOORE,

Rev. G. M. MAXWELL, D.D., EDWARD HARWOOD,

JAMES W. SIBLEY.

The receipts at this office as published in The American Missionary, as compared with those of the previous fiscal year, have been increased 41 per cent. Of supplies there have been received 182 packages, estimated value, $2715.

There was received by the Western Freedmen's Aid Commission from Great Britain and Ireland $3646.37, and from Switzerland, $134.20.

This sum was contributed mainly for the support of Normal schools, and has greatly assisted in the work of training teachers.

There have been under commission in this Department during the year 151 teachers and missionaries. Of these, 59 were sent under the commission of the American Missionary Association. The remaining number, 92, were commissioned by the American Missionary Association and Western Freedmen's Aid Commission jointly. There have thus been in the field under our charge 6 more teachers during the present year than during the previous year.

We submit more in detail our report by States.

The success of this institution for the past year has exceeded the sanguine expectations of its friends. Early in the year additional buildings were provided, so that the capacity for accommodating students was more than doubled; yet the buildings were insufficient to meet the wants of the students. A large, permanent building is now being erected which will furnish needed recitation-rooms and dormitories for sixty students. About one third of the pupils were white; the other two thirds, colored. No distinction is made on account of color in conducting the school, and the utmost harmony prevails.

The following is an extract from a letter written by President Fairchild, of Oberlin, who was present at the Commencement exer-

"TESTERDAY I returned from a visit to Berea, Kentucky, to attend the anniversary exercises of the school, and will give you a few of my impressions.

"The exercises, Thursday, were held in the grove, on the college grounds, under a bower prepared with considerable expenditure of labor, and quite artistic, under the direction and at the expense of Mr. Hanson, a trustee of the college.

"The people came in from the 'mountains' and from the 'Blue Grass' to the number of twelve hundred, as I judged; and listened with great attention throughout the day. The forenoon was devoted to orations, essays, and declamations from members of the school, evincing a good degree of culture, vigor of thought, and expresses of character. and earnestness of character.

"Of twenty-six who came forward in these exercises, fourteen were reputed white and twelve colored; but it required keener discrimination than mine, notwithstanding my long experience, to divide them properly. I failed in three in-"The afternoon was given up to short addresses from visitors who were in attendance. I was much impressed, from all I saw and heard, with the moral power and efficiency of the movement. To outward observation there is only a beginning. The buildings are temporary, and the original forest overshadows every thing. But the location is one of great natural beauty, and the surrounding scenery is very fine. The most impressive fact is the interest and enthusiasm of those is very fine. The most impressive fact is the interest and enthusiasm of those connected with the school, teachers and pupils, and the hold which it manifestly has upon the surrounding country. It looks like a successful solution of the problem of 'impartial education' in the South. If the accounts were to be balanced to-day, I think the result already obtained might be regarded as full compensation for all the expenditure of means and labor; and the prospect of good to come is certainly very encouraging. The spirit and tone of the place reminded me very much of the early days of Oberlin. If I mistake not, it is the beginning of most thing." great things."

ELY NORMAL SCHOOL.

The Ely Normal School has been built during the year. We quote from a letter written by Chaplain T. K. Noble, Chief Superintendent of the State:

"No school in the city has a more delightful situation. The lot has a front of 100 feet on Broadway, the finest street in the city, with another front of 220 feet

'A home for the teachers can be built upon it, and still the play-grounds for the pupils will be ample.

"The building, in point of convenience and comfort, simplicity of design, and beauty of proportion, has no superior in the city. Its dimensions are 50 x 70, its walls are high and two-storied, and the material is brick of the best quality. Located on a corner lot, its seven rooms are sure of fresh air and good light. It has accommodations for five hundred pupils.

"In addition to the seven rooms just mentioned, there are two teachers' rooms, which can be used as class-rooms if necessary.

"The entire cost of the institution is as follows:

| Expense of lot | $5.000 |
|-------------------|--|
| Expense of lot, | 14,000 |
| School furniture, | 1,000 |
| | The state of the s |

Of this sum, the Government appropriated $12,300.
"On the 6th day of April last, the house was formally dedicated. It was a day long to be remembered by the Freedmen of Louisville. At an early hour they long to be remembered by the Freedmen of Louisville. At an early hour they began to gather in from all parts of the city. Guards were placed at the entrance of the building, but the people, in their eagerness, pushed by them, and filled every portion of the house. Hundreds were compelled to go away.

"After the opening prayer, by Rev. Mr. Hayse, pastor of the Walnut street Presbyterian church, addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Hayward, Rev. Mr. Cravath, Rt. Rev. B. B. Smith, Bishop of Kentucky, Hon. Bland Ballard, Hon. James Speed, and others. The dedicatory prayer, by Rev. Dr. Humphreys, followed.

"The school is named in honor of Brevet Major-General John Ely, who, as Chief Superintendent of Freedmen's Affairs, first organized the Bureau in this State, and, by a long term of service, by faithful labors in the educational work, and by convergence and persistent efforts to right the Freedmen's wongs and invest them by a long term of service, by faithful labors in the educational work, and by contrageous and persistent efforts to right the Freedmen's wrongs and invest them with their just prerogatives, has merited their lasting gratitude.

"The school is now in successful operation, under the immediate direction of your Association. A report for the month of April shows an actual attendance of 399 pupils. I have visited the school frequently, and with great satisfaction. Its Principal, Mr. John Hamilton, is a graduate of Oberlin, and has already proven himself the right man in the right place. His assistants are all teachers of experience, and devoted to their work

'A Normal department has been organized, and some twenty pupils are receiving from the Principal such special instruction as may fit them to teach others."

The present fall term opened on the 14th of September, under the Superintendency of A. H. Robbins, a graduate of Oberlin College, and the attendance is large.

Being situated in the largest city of Kentucky-one containing a large population of intelligent colored people-we are confident that this institution will accomplish a great work in training teachers.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT.

At Lexington the schools were prosperous and are important. They will prepare students for the Normal schools.

Through the persistent efforts of Rev. John G. Fee, a portion of Camp Nelson has been purchased and re-sold to the colored people of the settlement. Ten acres of ground and two large government buildings have been set apart for the church and the school. During the year there has been much religious interest under the labors of Rev. Gabriel Burdett.

The general work of establishing primary schools in the State was during the year greatly enlarged. The educational department of the Freedmen's Bureau in Kentucky is especially well organized and efficient.

We submit the following general statement from the Chief Bureau Superintendent of Education in the State:

| Total number of schools in operation June 30th, 1867 | 96 |
|--|------|
| Aggregate attendance | 5921 |
| Number of schools in operation June 30th, 1868 | 162 |
| Aggregate attendance | 7829 |

Thus it appears that 66 schools were organized during the year, and the aggregate attendance increased by 1908 pupils.

Forty school-houses were also built in various parts of the State, the entire cost of which was $41,415.99. Of this sum, the Freedmen contributed from their poverty $14,091.32. They also raised during the year for the support of their teachers $17,137.30. No better proof could be given of their deep interest in the education of their children.

FISK UNIVERSITY.

Early in the year, $7000 were received of the Government by the trustees of this institution, and repairs and changes were made in the buildings, so as to accommodate students from abroad with rooms and board.

Through Rev. Barnas Sears, D.D., General Agent, who visited the schools, and saw the work being done, a generous appropriation of $800 was received of the trustees of the Peabody Fund, to assist students in the Normal Department. As beneficiaries of this fund, representatives were secured from different parts of the State, some selected by the superintendents of our High Schools in other cities, and some by the State Superintendent of Education, from those who were teaching in the schools but had never received proper training for teachers. Thus a class of students of unusual promise was selected, and all portions of the State brought into connection with this Institution.

These pupils being made members of the family, and brought constantly under the influence of the teachers, not only made wonderful progress in their studies, but secured a social culture and a general Christian training such as could have been received in no other

The result of this experiment, thus far, is entirely satisfactory.

The great want now is of additional buildings for the accommodation of students that could, with such facilities, be brought under the training of the school.

The vital relation of this Institution to the future of the common school system of the State is recognized by the leading men in the educational work in the State.

We quote from a letter bearing the signatures of-

Hon. W. Bosson, Chairman of Committee of Common Schools.

JOHN EATON, Superintendent of Public Instruction.

A. E. ALDEN, Mayor at Nashville.

"We believe that the best way to permanently establish and perpetuate schools among the colored people of the South, and especially of Tennessee, is to establish good Normal or training schools for the education of teachers to supply the schools already provided for in the State school law. Our reasons for this belief are, in brief as follows: 1st. The education of the colored people, and indeed all classes, is of more importance just now than any other matters pertaining to the political and social relations of the people in the Southern States. 2d. The investment of funds in Normal or training schools for colored teachers would perpetuate the breast the providing a superior class of teachers and thus people in State to benefit, by providing a superior class of teachers, and thus enable the State to carry forward a work which it now finds impossible without such a class of teachers as can take charge of the colored schools. Not one school in ten can, under existing circumstances, be supplied with a competent teacher. 3d. It will throw the burden of expense where it rightfully belongs, on the State, which, in the case of Tennessee, has undertaken the work of educating the colored people, but finds its best provisions thwarted by obstacles which could measurably be removed by establishing institutions that could furnish a constant supply of trained teachers.

"In reference to the practical working of this plan, to wit, the education of colored teachers for the schools of the State, we beg leave to state :

1st. That the Fisk University has already commenced the work, that upward of forty young men and women, from an attendance of four hundred, have already been selected and put under a course of rigid training for the special work of teaching-with what results the accompanying report of the examining committee

"The examination was very satisfactory, and was conducted in a manner cal-culated to reveal the real merit of the members of the class. The proficiency of those examined was gratifying, and indicates the wisdom of the efforts that have been made to prepare competent colored teachers for all the duties of instruc-

"In view of the skill and acquirements of many members of the class, we take the liberty to suggest that they may be immediately accepted and employed as teachers wherever a door of opportunity may open to them.

"2d. That no other institution, to our knowledge, in the State, has, as yet, undertaken this work on a scale so nearly adequate to existing wants in the case as the Fisk University; and that it stands so intimately related to this work, that the sum required for improvements can not in any other way be so well expended to subserve the interest of the colored schools in Tennessee.

Professor Ogden gives the following statement concerning the work of the year:

"THE PRESENT ORGANIZATION

consists of a High School, numbering about seventy-five pupils, including forty Normal scholars who are pledged to become teachers. The selection of this class has been based upon a close and somewhat rigid examination as to moral, intelhas been based upon a close and somewhat right examination as to moral intellectual, and physical fitness, as well as aptness to teach.

"A donation of $800 from the 'Peabedy Educational Fund' was made last February, to be applied to the education of sixteen of the most worthy and needy colored teachers, to be selected by the Principal. This appropriation has enabled us to secure some of the very best material in the State. These are included in the number stated above. The Normal constitutes the leading characteristic of the School, at present.

"THE MODEL SCHOOL

is composed of three grades, namely, Grammar, Secondary and Primary Schools, numbering, in all, about one hundred and twenty pupils, ranging in size and age from adults to infants. In addition to the above, we have a school numbering about forty-five, composed exclusively of adults. A night-school, averaging about forty pupils, mostly adults, taught by a separate teacher, has been in operation since last October.

"THE COURSE OF TRAINING

in all these departments is such as is usual in the best schools of similar grade with this exception, that in addition to the class recitations and drills in the High School, twenty four of the most advanced and competent of the Normal class are pledged to devote at least one half-hour per day to teaching in the Model School, under the personal direction of the Principal. The class is divided into two sections—twelve in each. These two sections are appointed according to grade, to the two general departments of the Model School; one recitation-room being attached to each. These teaching exercises in the Model School commence at 9.30 in the A.M., and continue till 3 P.M., with the usual intervals of recesses, etc. Two details of two pupils each are sent out—one from each section of the teachers' class, every half-hour of this time, to hear their respective classes in the Model School. These teacher pupils are so arranged that they alternate regularly through the twelve classes in each of these departments of the Model School, so that within about two weeks each one hears all the classes in his department, and so on for succeeding weeks. Each teacher, on hearing his class and assigning the lesson for the next day, also reports the same to his successor, who prepares to

"At the close of the day's teaching in the Model School, both sections of the Teachers' class meet in the lecture-room of the Principal for the purdose of listening to criticisms and corrections on the day's work, of undergoing an examination on the lessons to be taught, and receiving instructions and general directions for the next day. This occupies one hour, a part of the time being devoted to instruction in 'Theory and Practice' as developed from the nature of the work.

"These teaching exercises constitute the chief excellence of the Model School—being at once most thorough and searching, and, at the same time, they give the teacher-pupil that thorough practical knowledge of the duties and responsibilities of his work so necessary to the profession.

"Another leading characteristic in the plans and practices of the school is the mode of inculcating religious truth. It is not merely assumed theoretically that the growth and development of the spiritual nature of the pupil are essential to good scholarship and efficient teaching, but they are made matters of every-day practice in the school-room, in the class, in the chapel, in the lecture-room, and in the family where about forty of our best pupils board. This has the happiest effect both in the government of the school and in inspiring the students with a just idea of the duties and responsibilities of their high calling. It is assumed that absolute conversion, or the new birth, is the door to successful mental and moral development, and that fixed laws regulate the condition of things here, no less than in the physical universe; that purity of heart and life is an essential condition to healthy mental activity; that religion is just as necessary to a thorough vigorous manhood or womanhood as good healthy food is to sustain ani-

"Acting upon these principles, nearly all the permanent pupils of responsible age have commenced a Christian life, either prior or subsequent to entering the school. Almost every week witnesses the conversion of some one or two, as long as any are left unconverted. We are led to expect this just as certainly as the farmer expects a harvest of wheat after the preparation of the ground and the sowing of the seed. Fixed laws regulate the one no less than the other. Christ says, 'Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.' We believe this in its fullest sense; and believing, we accept, in some degree, the conditions of fulfillment.

"A Union Church of about thirty members has accordingly been organized, independent of any denomination, and open to all who love the Lord Jesus, irrespective of race or color, or of evangelical differences. Most of the teachers, though differing in doctrine and church government, have united with this organization, whose sole and declared object is the conversion of souls, and the upbuilding of the cause and kingdom of Christ.

"THE UNION LITERARY SOCIETY has been organized for about three months. It already numbers some of the best talent in the school and in the city.

"Finally, the work, in all its relations and aspects, has been a marked success. The great demand is teachers who are competent for the great work. To supply this demand this institution will lend all its energies. Some have already gone out as teachers, and are doing nobly. About twenty-five more will be ready to begin their work at the close of the present term."

Under the wise administration of our Superintendent, J. H. Barnum, our work at Memphis has been a great success.

Last December, the schools were adopted by the city authorities, and our Superintendent and the whole corps of teachers accepted. An equal portion of the State funds was voted to the support of these schools. This being the first year of schools under the free school system, and the resources of the State being severely taxed for other purposes, there has been a delay in the distribution of the school funds by the State authorities. We have, however, already received $2000, and bills have been accepted and ordered paid by the city authorities to the amount of nearly $5000; this sum will be paid as soon as the school funds for the year are distributed by the State authorities. Thus, by means of the buildings we own, and our economical plan of conducting schools, we have turned to account these public funds, which would otherwise have accomplished little toward giving schooling to the colored children of the city. A similar arrangement has been effected for the coming year. A large number of schools at various points in the State, which heretofore have been supported by this office, have passed with their teachers under State support.

The following statement from our Superintendent gives some facts relative to the year's work in Memphis:

MEMPHIS SCHOOLS.

"The schools were opened about the 1st of September, and up to the 1st of January six teachers were employed. At that time the number was increased to

"At Lincoln Chapel we had seven distinct grades and ten teachers; at Phenix school we had three grades and three teachers, and on Washington street we had an unclassified school with one teacher.

"The total number of pupils enrolled during the year was 1921; the largest number enrolled in one month, 1426; the average monthly enrollment was 1106; the whole number who commenced the alphabet was 455; the number who avanced from alphabet to reading in easy lessons was 878; the largest number in attendance in one month who could read the Testament was 851; the whole number belonging to the schools during the year who could read the Testament, 1319. This number had instruction also in arithmetic and writing, and oral lessons in geography. Only 175 used text-books in geography, while 1284 had a text-book in arithmetic, and learned to write and combine numbers on the slate and recite the table of simple numbers."

SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

"Our teachers taught in two Sabbath-schools each Sabbath, thus giving Sabbath-school instruction to about 800 each Sabbath. Besides our own teachers, we have had the assistance of eight business men of the city in our Sabbath-

PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

"There has been a most decided improvement in the tone of public sentiment oward our schools. The Board of Visitors for the city schools have been unan-oward our schools. The Board of visitors for the city schools have been unanimous, on every occasion when called upon, to actin reference to our schools.

"They have agreed to expend a portion of the State fund due the colored youth of the city to aid us in sustaining free schools, and they would cheerfully adopt our schools, and pay all their expenses, if they were able to do it.

"A great work has already been done to convince the people here that the colored youth can be and ought to be educated, and to persuade them to assist in the work which we have begun. Let the good people still hold on till the work can be transferred, with all the life and influence of Northern schools, to the civil authorities here."

At Lincoln Chapel, a Union Church of 21 members, was organized in February. Since that time there has been a constant religious interest, with frequent conversions, and the membership has increased to over 50. Mr. Mallory, the pastor, reports some opposition, but concludes: "Thank God that some coming among us sinners go away rejoicing in the hope of eternal life, while others finding this hope and joy, stay with us; and our little church is, and from the first has been, blessed with a steady increase. Pray for us, that we may still be prospered."

CHATTANOOGA.

The Rev. E. O. Tade has not only superintended our schools, and been pastor of the Union Church at this point, but, as County Superintendent, has done a very important service in organizing the public schools. Through his efforts our schools were adopted by the city authorities, and received their share of the public funds. A similar arrangement has been effected for the coming year. Quite a number of district-schools were established under the free-school law; and, as Brother Tade continues to fill the office of County Superintendent, we confidently expect that, during the coming year, in spite of the indifference and prejudice of the people, a free school will be established in every school district.

The Union Church, organized June 9th, 1867, with 14 members, has since increased to 33; males, 18; females, 15. Two of the original members-both young men, men of rare promise-have been called from these scenes to rest in Jesus. The New Testament polity seems to take well and work well. The ladies have formed a sewing-society to raise funds to buy a lot for a church. Average Sabbath-school attendance, 150. Prayer-meetings well attended. The church is doing a great work in this vicinity.

The free-school system of Tennessee is fast becoming efficiently organized under the wise administration of General John Eaton, Superintendent of Public Institution for the State. Much embarrassment is experienced through the want of competent teachers. The expense of importing them increases greatly the cost of the schools. This is a greaf hinderance to the establishment of schools in the small districts, where wages must of necessity be small,

Teachers must be trained within the State before the common schools can be supplied with competent teachers.

Crawfordsville.-Mrs. Emma Woods.

The work of the year at Atlanta is given in the following statement by Rev. C. W. Francis:

"The work carried on in this city under the direction of the A. M. A. has been highly prosperous during the year now closing, showing in all departments a steady and healthful growth.

"The death of Rev. F. Ayer at the beginning of the year brought great sorrow to the little circle of laborers and to the poor of the city, who leved him as a father, and sadly interfered with some of our plans for the work of the year. The new brick school-house at Sumner Hill was the last result of his labor, and was completed upon the day of his death. In memory of him it was named 'The

"By the completion of this building we are able to have schools in three different portions of the city.

"The fall term opened October 1st, and during the first month 1088 scholars were enrolled. The number in attendance during the winter months was considerably smaller, owing to the poverty of the people and the unusual severity of the weather; but the average attendance for the year has been but little less than 900. The attendance during the last month has been 980.

"The progress of the scholars in all the studies has reflected great credit upon the fidelity and ability of the teachers, and given abundant evidence, if any were needed, of the capacity of the pupils.

"Probably more than 250 have learned to read who did not know the alphabet before. A corresponding advance has been made in every department.

"The study of written arithmetic, physical geography, grammar, and history, has been introduced and successfully prosecuted. Discipline has been easily maintained, and punishments have been few. The schools are in such a settled and hopeful condition that the work can be taken up and prosecuted with greater success and more direct results next year. A large class of pupils will be ready to enter the Normal school, which, it is hoped, will be in operation here in October

"An industrial school for the girls has been taught most of the year, and a large class has received instructions in all kinds of needle-work. Mrs. General Saxton, Mrs. General Lewis, and other ladies have had the principal care of this work, and have rendered very valuable assistance.

"The night-schools have been maintained six months, with the best results. They furnish some of the most interesting features of the work, because they show the eagerness of the older people to acquire knowledge.

"About 125 have been taught during the sessions of these schools.

"THE ORPHAN ASYLUM

has done a greater work and given more satisfaction than during any previous months of its existence. The number of children has varied from 50 to 85; and during a portion of the year the house was filled to its utmost capacity. Most of these waifs are quite small, many of them being under six years of age and some were infants. It is, of course, difficult to find homes for such as these; and the number remaining in our care is constantly increasing. About thirty have been provided with comfortable homes since October last. The health of the children has been very good, though there have been eight deaths. All who are old enough receive regular school instruction; and the whole family is brought under constant and heart folly religious inflores. and heart-felt religious influence. No other department of the work appeals so directly to the sympathies of the benevolent or presents stronger claims for assist-

" RELIGIOUS WORK.

"Our directly religious work has been very prosperous and has received tokens of Divine approval during all the year. Weekly prayer-meetings have been held in all the schools, and have been well attended. Our teachers have given much assistance in three Sabbath-schools besides our own, so that nearly 800 children came under our influence upon the Sabbath. Our own Sabbath-school, held in came under our influence upon the Sabbath. Our own Sabbath.school, held in Storrs Chapel, has a regular attendance of nearly 425, and is a very interesting and prosperous school. Religious worship has been held in the chapel every Sabbath during the year, and the congregation has been constantly increasing in number and regularity of attendance. During the spring months we have been blessed with a quiet and thorough religious awakening, during which many were brought to Christ. The work was marked by the deep thoughtfulness of all brought under its influence, by earnest inquiring after the truth, by sincere convictions of sin and simple faith. No better evidence of the genuine work of God's grace could be afforded by the experience of an equal number of young Christians in any community in the country. These have been 39 additions to Christians in any community in the country. There have been 39 additions to the church since January 1st, and it now numbers 50 members, with several others ready to unite with it. The converts were mainly from the most promising pupils in our schools, and their influence over the whole school is decided and hopeful. The interest in religious things has suffered no reaction; and we are still walking under the shadow of God's presence and looking for yet greater blessings. The evening prayer-meetings of the church have been well supported, and all the indications are of a thorough spiritual growth. Our religious work has been constantly gaining in the respect and confidence of the community, so that obstacles to greater success are being removed. Social gatherings of the congregation have been held once each month, and have been enjoyed by the people, to whom such refined social intercourse is a new experience; and a pleasant feature in our labor has been the weekly prayer-meetings of a literary society, which have been kept up with great enthusiasm. Recently the society has resolved itself into a temperance society, and is seeking to awaken a much needed interest in that subject. It is hardly possible to do more than notice some of the more prominent results of this year's work in such a review as this. Of the character and fidelity of the laborers, the work they have done must speak. Their record is on high, as well as in the hearts of the lowly ones whom they have been raising up into the sunlight of knowledge, purity, and piety. The year has had its sorrows and failures; but on the whole, it has been a year of gladness, a year of ingathering, a year of precious harvests; and the good hand of the Lord has been was incorporated early in the year, and received $10,000 from General Howard toward establishing the Normal Department. A very desirable site known as Diamond Hill, within the corporate limits of the city of Atlanta, and containing fifty-three acres, has been purchased, and two brick dormitory buildings will be erected this fall.

The embarrassment of our treasury, which has prevented the advancement of the funds necessary to make the Government appropriations available, has caused an unfortunate delay.

The Washburn Memorial Orphan Asylum has been under the charge of Miss Mitchell, and has done a most important work. We ask for it still the support of our friends.

The schools in Alabama have been prospered during the year. To a great extent the people have paid the board of our teachers; so that, although the number of teachers has been increased, the expense has been diminished. At Montgomery, the same buildings were occupied by our schools as during the previous year. The new school building, owing to a delay in perfecting the title to the site, was not completed, but we now have the assurance that it will be ready for occupation by December 1st. We will then be able to make our school at the capital of the State, what we have long desired to make it, a representative school. C. H. Adams, our Superintendent, wrote thus under date of May the 20th:

"Much of our experience is encouraging, yet how one's heart yearns to see more work done! With six teachers, our school has an average attendance of about 300. Other schools in the city will probably add another 100 pupils under instruction. But these are not one half of those who should be in school. Each of the two Sabbath-schools numbers from 350 to 400.

"Another year we need ten teachers to reopen the work; we also need a missionary to organize a loyal church, instruct the colored pastors, help build up the school, etc. As it is, teachers find no sympathy in the public worship of God, and other loyalists prefer to stay away from church, with a consequent loss of religious vitality.

"The colored people have purchased three and a half acres of land, south of the Capitol, on which the Bureau intend to erect a school-house, to accommodate 400 pupils, having appropriated $10,000 for that purpose. It is expected to be ready for occupation in October. Other rooms will be furnished for all the scholars we can muster.

"A laborer upon this field is a daily witness of the growing importance of the work of educating the Freedmen. It has but just begun, but it is constantly proving to be the preserver of their freedom and their rights, and the source of their elevation, civilly, socially, and morally. Out of a colored population of 439,469 in this State, but 4700 are known to be toiling up the hill of science; but the Macedonian cry reaches our ears from village and plantation, 'Come over and help us.' How is this to be done? Manifestly by giving for their asking, just as far and as fast as we can. Let every A. M. A. school in the State be a training-school for teachers, from which young men and women shall go forth as 'laborers into the harvest.' Let Christian benevolence continue at the North to aid us, and as years roll on, our eyes will see this 'valley of dry bones' teem with life.'

At Selma, our school has been small, owing to the new school buildings not being erected according to our expectation. A superior High school has, however, been carried forward, under the superintendency of Joseph H. Sears, who was the first man to open a school for colored children in the city. The new school-house will soon be completed, and our school materially enlarged.

Rev. J. Silsby has labored as a missionary in Selma and the region round about; but no churches have yet been formed.

At Marion, a new school-house has been erected during the year; and we hope at that point to maintain a permanent High school.

The most important event of the year, however, has been the establishment of the central institution of the State at Talladega. Our Superintendent, Rev. H. E. Brown, has made the following statement, which we submit in full.

"One year ago the A. M. A. began its work in Talladega, a pleasant county-seat among the hills and mountains of Northern Alabama. Aided by the Government, the Association purchased a fine college property, consisting of thirty-four acres of land and a handsome brick building 100×60 feet, three stories high; erected before the war at a cost of $23,000.

"The school opened in November last with 140 pupils. For two years previous an excellent school had been maintained at this point by the Cleveland Freedman's Aid Commission, so that most of the pupils in the village had received good primary instruction. The enthusiasm of the people for the education of their children had been kindled, and the establishment of a Normal School, to be developed into a college, deepened and strengthened it. The country around was canvassed, and the people instructed in relation to the purposes and plans of the school, and were made to feel that their children must be educated.

"Thus the establishment of this important enterprise has served as an inspira-tion to the whole region round about, and it will soon take its place as the leading influence in the State in favor of impartial Christian education. In many places the people are already putting up log school-houses, and will soon have 'made' enough corn and bacon, so that some of the children can be spared to study. Already from every side comes the call for teachers.

"In each neighborhood, and on many single plantations, from fifteen to thirty children can be gathered, but where shall a teacher be found-one who will willingly board in a colored family, and who can teach for ten or twenty dollars per month? Only by educating the young people can teachers be provided in suffi-cient numbers. To train these teachers must be our immediate work. We train these normal students by carefully drilling them in the rudiments of two or three of the most needed branches, and by practicing them under the eye of the teacher in drilling the younger pupils in the same. Nine months of such training in the elements makes of an earnest person a more than average teacher for these so called, of the colored people, was formerly under the charge of the pastors of white churches, of which they were nominally members. 'After the surrender,' some of the colored people came off and formed new churches, but secured only unlettered 'preachers.

"For some time after we began-school, I attended the various meetings, till I became fully satisfied that in no one of the present churches, or Sabbath-schools, became fully satisfied that in no one of the present churches, of Sabbath-Schools, could be found a real home for the growing colored Christian, or for his teachers. Meetings for prayer, for preaching, and for Sabbath-schools, were accordingly appointed. In the prayer-meeting we talked fully upon some one matter till all the Christians were ready to pray about it, and that, too, without 'having the power.' It was only after carnest consecration of the whole life to God had been urged for weeks, that eight or ten (young and old) could be depended upon to attend these weeks, that eight of ten (young and out) could be depended upon to attend these meetings and take part in them regularly. It was a blessed task to show them that they were created in the image of God, and invite them to deeds befitting freemen in the midst of fields so ripe for the harvest.

"THE SABBATH-SCHOOL,

beginning with seventy members, soon doubled. In the Sabbath-school teachers' meeting each one of three or four white and ten colored teachers, after the lesson, led in brief, pointed prayer. As our leading students began to realize the responsibilities that were soon to come upon them as teachers, they felt their need of the Divine aid. One, and presently another, asked us to pray for him. Seldom have I heard such importunate and earnest prayer as went up from our teachers' family altar, from the Sabbath evening meeting, and, ere long, from the general prayer-meeting. How many times have we thanked God for such co-workers! They all love to pray. Soon new-born souls began to be added to our praying band. It seemed a miracle that they should so soon learn to pray earnestly and intelligently. We now divided the prayer-meeting into three parts, in separate rooms. About forty prayers were offered each evening.

"As the time drew near when fifteen of our students should go forth to teach during the summer vacation, one of our teachers met the Normal class in a sort of inquiry prayer-meeting, every other day, during the half-hour of school worship, till inquiry prayer-meeting, every other day, during the half-hour of school worship, till all of them felt that to try to teach, without Christ as their teacher, would be wicked, and nearly all gave evidence of having found him.

"These young disciples must not be left to the 'power' of the existing churches. A new church was a necessity. Leading members in each of the colored churches were glad to send us some of their number, and would come themselves rather than have this good work, in behalf of their people, stop. A church of eighteen members was formed May 18th, and is growing in numbers and efficiency. In the published words of one of the members of the council, 'The facts have been published, but the joy of the people, the full hearts, the tearful eyes, can not be told.' The occasion was one to be seen and felt in order to be appreciated. Methodists and Baptists, and Christians of other churches, seemed to be as full of joy as those who formed the little band.

"We have sent out fifteen teachers, nearly all of whom also hold prayer-meetings and Sabbath-schools. We hope to multiply rapidly our number of earnest, consecrated teachers, till, with the Divine blessing, in two or three years such a demand for Christian teachers shall be created that Romanists and infidels will seek in vain to control the educational influences of Alabama."

The General Field Agent of the Association, who visited Talladega in the spring, says:

"We have at Talladega, one of our best Normal schools, in fine working order. It began last year under the following circumstances. Rev. Mr. Brown, the teacher and pastor, was importuned for teachers. Nine counties adjacent, thickly er and pastor, was importuned for teachers. Mne counties adjacent, thickly populated, had no school of any sort. We could seen no more. Mr. Brown met some of the colored people in their log churches and told them there was but one way by which they could secure a teacher. 'Pick out the best specimen of a young man you have for a teacher, and bring to church with you next Sunday all the corn and bacon you can spare for his living, and I will take him into my school and make a teacher of him.' They followed his advice and brought their convenients of the form a hearful to form another. corn in, from a handful to four quarts. More often a handful in their pocket, or tied in a handkerchief, and laid it on the altar in front of the pulpit, singing as they marched around the aisle. Eight or nine young men were then selected from the different localities; and, furnished with rations, came into Talladega, ten, twenty, and thirty miles, on foot, with sacks of corn and bacon on their backs. There were no accommodations in Talladega for them, so they were obliged to sleep. on the floor, in such cabins as could receive them and give them a chance to bake their corn-cake by the fire."

"These young men under such circumstances, made good progress in learning. They began in their alphabet, and after six months, by giving their whole time to one thing, were able to read quite well in the Second and Third Readers, and, better still, had been taught, by practice upon other pupils in the school, how to teach reading. This summer, they have gone home to teach 'bush' schools till the Fall term opens. In October they will be back at Talladega in force, and Mr. Brown has applications from fifty or sixty more young men and women who want to come in the same way, that is, bring their rations—mostly corn-meal—and have a place to bake it, and a shelter for their heads."

ATHENS.

The school at this point is still under the superintendence of Miss M. F. Wells, who established it soon after the "surrender." There is needed a permanent building at Athens, for our High school in Northern Alabama.

A liberal free-school system has been established by "reconstructed" Alabama; and it is expected that funds will be available to provide for a short reunion of the public schools during the coming vear.

In summing up the results of the year's labors in the Middle West, we find abundant occasions for thankfulness, and great encouragement to continue our efforts. We record, to the praise of Him who has extended the shield of his protection over us, that there has not been a single death, by disease or violence, during the year among the whole number connected with our work in this department. There have been deliberate attempts made to assassinate two of our young men, but they have failed, and these same persons continue on cheerfully in the work.

The fact that the receipts from our field have been so largely increased, notwithstanding the drought and the depression of business, attests the faithfulness of our friends to the great work that they have undertaken.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT.

The great progress that has been made toward the establishment of free schools in Tennessee and Alabama, reveals the important service that we have done these States by the three years of labor in organizing and supporting model primary schools. The marvelous success that has attended the establishment of the high schools and central institutions, points clearly to the great service we have yet to render to the cause of impartial Christian education in the South.

It may be properly said that our system of labor is developed and in successful operation. For Kentucky we have Berea College, with Lexington High School and the Ely Normal School, and we would like, this year, to add a High School at Paducah. For Tennessee, Fisk University, with the High Schools at Chattanooga and Memphis. For Georgia, the University at Atlanta, with the various institutions in the State under the charge of the Central Office. For Alabama, Talladega College, with High Schools at Montgomery, Selma, Marion, and Athens. At these points there is now represented in lands and buildings more than half the whole amount of money that has been expended from the contributions of the people of the North, in this department, for the past three years.

Three of the central institutions are incorporated under the laws of the States, and the fourth will be within a few weeks. These enterprises are especially commending themselves to all persons who are interested in, and are working for, the general establishing of impartial Christian education, and will receive pecuniary support, as fast as the people of this class become able to give it.

We have seven Churches—three have been organized during this year—that are growing steadily and healthfully in numbers, efficiency, and power. This growth must be in geometrical ratio, for it will be from the material being prepared in our schools. The little church at Storrs Chapel, Atlanta, has raised for the A. B. C. F. Missions $50, and for the A. M. A., $60, during the year.

A letter just received brings the sad news that one of the most carnest and promising young men of that church has been murdered, because engaged in advocating the cause of union and loyalty in connection with the election of General Grant to the Presidency. The blood of the martyrs is as ever the seed of the church, and we believe that the fiery furnace in which these poor people are being tried has not been kindled to destroy.

Our work in Kansas continues, as reported last year, evangelical rather than educational. The State laws provide for the education of a portion of the colored children resident within the State, and our missionaries are able to render valuable assistance in the extension of opportunities to those who might be missed, as also in the awakening of interest where it as yet remains partially latent.

Brother Paine, at Lawrence, continues with marked fidelity his highly appreciated labors in a community of two thousand colored persons, among whom he goes, with apostolic spirit, "teaching and preaching" as he finds opportunity.

Brother Brown, at Leavenworth, continues zealous and faithful; abundant in labors "in season and out of season;" teaching, preaching, exhorting, praying. His mission church, based upon an absolute impartiality of Christian kindness toward black and white, rich and poor, has steadily gained favor with the community, having from the first commanded profound respect.

Brother Fox tendered his resignation in June last, and it was reluctantly accepted, that a corresponding extension of missionary work might be made southward. The Executive Committee have earnestly desired to give not only the Gospel, but the preached Gospel, to the dense millions in the great valley, and to this end have deemed it expedient to retrench expenditures in other directions. This duty, as involving the discontinuance of labor in a high degree useful and acceptable, has been any thing but pleasant.

Brother Platt, assisted by Mrs. Platt, continues diligent in useful labors at Topeka.

The night-school in Chicago and the school at Cairo, sustained from the general treasury of the Association last year, have both been discontinued, with a view to enlargement in other quarters. The former was continued until April last, receiving but slight assistance from the Association for the last six months, the enthusiasm of pupils and the rare devotion of their admirable teacher rendering the enterprise nearly self-sustaining.

Except the teacher at Chicago, (Miss Cherrie,) all the teachers above named were sustained directly by the Committee of the Free-Will Baptist Church, and have labored under the more immediate supervision of Rev. A. H. Chase, that Committee's executive representative.

The teachers' monthly reports indicate a large work, courageously pushed and successfully achieved. The stations occupied were in the Southern extremity of the State—being Cairo, Mound City, Villa Ridge, Caledonia, Shawneetown, Middleport, and Carbondale.

Decided progress has been made when we contrast the summary of the year's work now closed with the work of the year preceding. Fifteen months ago our teachers, in several instances, were in danger of life and limb. During the twelve months last past no peril so great has been apparent; on the contrary, general toleration has risen in several instances into something like friendly good-will and rudimentary cooperation on the part of white citizens, observing the self-sacrificing zeal of our faithful representatives. From several towns applications have come from the local school boards for "good teachers," to be selected by the executive officers of the Association, and wholly sustained from the general school fund of the State. The apt and timely aid our Secretaries are enabled to render in such instances, by selecting experienced, highly-cultured, Christian teachers, and locating them where open furrows wait for the good seed of Christian civilization, is not easily to be overestimated. The number of applications for assistance of this kind is steadily increasing, and must in the progress of events become at length very large from every Southern State. Within the last three months, foreshadowings of such applications, by the score together, have reached our several executive offices; nor is it too much to expect that the crowning triumph of our educational work may yet be the selection of Christian teachers by the thousand for the complete common school systems which are sure to be provided for the regenerated States within the next ten years, perhaps in less than five. No more gratifying indorsement of the work which the Association has been able to do by means of its advanced corps of volunteer laborers, sustained by the generous contribution of the churches at home, could be desired than these calls, now coming aftener and oftener: "Send us more of these teachers, and we will gladly sustain them."

The Association has keenly felt the loss of Mr. Isaac T. Gibson, its General State Agent, whose long-neglected private affairs rendered it necessary for him to leave the field in April last. His serene enthusiasm, constant and steadfast—his incessant industry, and unfailing courage, defied all embarrassments, and carried success a captive in his hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Weston closed their labors in November, 1867. Mrs. Montague and Miss D. C. Hess resigned in the summer of 1867. Their school at Jefferson City was continued by Miss Buffington, temporarily, and afterward by Miss Mannel, until the close of the school year. It has now been united to "Lincoln Institute," under the general supervision of Mr. R. B. Foster.

Mr. and Mrs. Copeland resigned their commissions in February, 1868, and the school having been assumed by the city authorities, (Kansas City,) the property owned by the Association was sold, and the proceeds invested Southward. The church enterprise begun there had not proved on the whole successful.

At the meeting of the General Conference of Congregational Churches in Missouri, last October, a committee was appointed to confer with the Secretaries of the American Missionary Association, with a view to the systematic and thorough exploration of the State, with especial reference to the evangelization of the freed people. In due course correspondence was opened by two members of this committee, Rev. E. B. Turner, State Agent for the American Home Missionary Society, and Rev. Julian M. Sturtevant, Jr., pastor of the Church at Hannibal.

These overtures were fraternally welcomed, and upon the nomination of the committee, Rev. E. D. Seward, of Laclede, was commissioned for six months to explore the State and report upon its needs. Brother Seward entered upon his work in August last, and has made good progress.

At Troy and at Fulton new school-houses have just been built by the Freedmen's Bureau, upon lots owned by the A.M.A. At Palmyra an excellent school has been maintained, whose prosperity is largely due to the wisdom and fidelity of the teacher, Miss Ferrand. Upon reopening her school for the year, she wrote:

"I am once more at work among my people. They had been expecting me with feelings of deep satisfaction for some time, and had a surprise in store forme. And a very pleasant surprise it was too. A new church building had been erected dura very pleasant surprise it was too. A new church building had been erected during my absence, well-lighted, comfortably furnished, and containing a stove large enough to warm the whole room comfortably. A foot-bridge had been built across the creek, thereby shortening the distance to my home, and enabling me to get to my school-house without going to the top of my shoes in mud. Five cords of wood lie snugly piled up at one side of the house, suggestive of comfort through the whole winter. You remember that last winter, through two months of cold and dampness, we had no fire at all in my school-room, the roads being so bad that wood could not be brought into town. Do you wonder that I feel very comfortable this winter? The colored people have taxed themselves to their utmost ability in building their house, and they may justly be proud of it for it has been planned, and the work almost entirely done, by themselves, proving that they have executive ability."

ARKANSAS.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. E. K. Miller, Superintendent; James O. Lyman, David C. Casey, George Hare, Wm. A. Hubbard, James A. Scovill, Augustus C. Stickle, Wm. H. Purdy, Mrs. E. K. Miller, Miss M. L. Fuller, Miss Kate G. Slesser, Mrs. Mary B. Hitchcock, Mrs. Mary B. Stuart, Miss Delucia F. Getman, Miss Charlotte A. Watson, Miss Caroline Green. Scholars enrolled, 575.

A continuation of embarrassments has rendered labor in Arkansas less productive of substantial results than had been hoped; nevertheless, on the whole, a decided and gratifying gain is secured, a gain marked by the number of new and commodious school buildings erected by the Bureau, and now ready for occupancy.

The Bureau in Arkansas is fortunate in its responsible general officers. General Smith, the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Colby, the Superintendent, and Mr. Miller, his assistant, have united their efforts, and have achieved not only a good work but a great one. The American Missionary Association enters this autumn, by official invitation, upon the occupancy of new buildings-some of these upon its own lots-at Helena, Batesville, Lewisville, Camden, Washington, Pine Bluff, Arkadelphia, and Fort Smith. Several other edifices are in process of construction, to be ready in January.

Political disturbances, violence, and injustice, aggravated by a succession of scanty harvests, with the suffering that follows in their train, have greatly disheartened the freed people, and laid burdens upon our missionaries. A brighter day at length seems dawning, and we anticipate the coming year's work with cheerful expectation.

Mr. Scovill wrote in May, from Camden:

"The Freedmen have purchased an elegant site for a school-house, at an expense of $175. I have expended out of my monthly wages, for repairs on the colored church, for windows, blinds, benches, etc., $50. The Government has already awarded the contract for building a fine school-house for $2600.

"Our first monthly concert for the benefit of the Sabbath-school was an extemour lists monthly concert for the beneat of the sabath-school was an exten-poraneous affair, and but thinly attended. I mean to try again. The mite con-tributions in the Sabbath-school have already amounted to $20. An energetic Freedman, an expert and tasteful worker in wood, has given the Sabbath-school a fine bookcase and table, for the reception of the contemplated library.

"The school is progressing finely. I have had two independent schools in operation, partially connected with mine, and taught by two colored ladies; one of them has been my pupil.

BROAD FIELDS-BARREN WASTES.

"The field here seems to be ripening and bids fair to become a source of spiritual and intellectual power for the Freedman, yet there are thousands of fields in the State that need the fostering care and assistance of the Association. Many a barren waste might be made fertile and fruitful of good results, were it only cultivated. My prayer is, that Christians may be more deeply impressed with the importance of a sound educational reconstruction, built upon the solid rock of Christian truth, and give more liberally for the successful prosecution of the work."

Mr. Miller reviewed his year's work under date of Little Rock, Jan. 15, 1868:

MEANS OF TRAVEL IN THE SOUTH.

"There are about forty miles of railroad, and though we have many streams that are navigable in high water, yet for many months in each year we have to adopt either the stage or horseback mode of transportation. I chose the saddle as the means of visiting the more remote portions of the State, and met many adventures, such as crossing deep bayons, over which there were no bridges, swimming my horse through a river, or riding for safety to the hill country with the water rising at the rate of a foot per hour, when I could see the marks of former overflows on the trees three feet above my head. Taking one of these long tours, you meet the intelligent educated men who dwell for the most part on the rivers, and own large plantations. You meet the unlettered yet industrious poor white men who work small farms on the hills, and you find also the poor 'white trash,' who stay (but can scarcely be said to live) anywhere and everywhere, and eke out a miserable existence by fishing, hunting, and stealing.

SCHOOLS-PROGRESS.

"There are very few schools for either black or white, and churches are far apart. Many of the ministers are too ignorant to accomplish much for the cause of Christ, even were they in every other respect qualified.

"On entering my field a year ago, I found but two teachers commissioned by our society, both stationed at Pine Bluff. There were but fifty-two pupils enrolled in both day and night-schools. When our schools closed in June, there were reported chout even hard and the schools. ed about seven hundred pupils, and twelve teachers.

"A spirit of opposition has been exhibited toward our work in different parts of the State, in refusing to board, or have any thing to do with our teachers. When I first arrived at Pine Bluff, Mr. Lyman and Miss Tenny were living in a hut with a negro family, because there was no other place for them to go, and we were compelled to establish a teacher's home in order to render them comfortable.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT

A SCHOOL-HOUSE ERECTED.

"At Pine Bluff, under directions from yourself, I purchased two eligible lots upon which Government has erected a school-house worth three thousand dollars. We have there a first-class school in every respect. Mr. Lyman and Miss Slesser show, by their faithful and patient labors, that they are highly qualified for their work. The school now numbers over one hundred pupils in regular attendance.

OTHER SCHOOLS ESTABLISHED.

"Schools were also maintained during the past year on several plantations in the vicinity of Pine Bluff. We also opened a school on Col. Lewis's place in May, but after a month's existence it was closed because of the ill-health of the teacher. Miss Larhart taught a month at Fairdale; but on account of the overflow in June, which destroyed the whole of the growing crop, the school was abandoned. Near Red Fork, lower down the Arkansas river, flourishing schools were formed on the plantations of Mr. Lenox and Col. Branch; but the failure of the crops, and the violent death of Col. Branch, caused the schools to be abandoned. At Davis Lake, schools were efficiently conducted by Mr. A. C. Stickle and wife, and much good accomplished.

"At Arkadelphia we have a small school. At Washington a rigorous and good school is carried on under the care of D. C. Casey. A new school-house has been built by the Bureau, which I dedicated last October. Miss Farrer is still laboring patiently and faithfully at Van Buren amid difficulties enough to discourage any one with less faith. With poor health and much bitter persecution she still holds the ground, and reports conversions every month. We should have laborers at Batesville, (where the Bureau is building a good house,) at Fort Smith, at Lewisville, and Magnolia. Arrangements are being made to erect buildings at all of these points; but it must be distinctly understood that very little money can be raised at any of these places, with the exception perhaps of Batesville.

TEACHERS TRAINED.

"Our schools are raising up a corps of youth from which we hope to draw many teachers in the future, and if we can only maintain for two or three years such schools as we have at Washington, Pine Bluff, and Van Buren, we shall be able to prosecute our work with material from home sources."

The peculiarity of the work in Mississippi, under the admirable superintendence of the Association's veteran missionary, has been a widely distributed and very effective dissemination of elementary instruction. So thoroughly, relatively judging, has this primary work been done, that for the future our policy will be shaped toward central and Normal schools.

A large graded school, including not less than 600 pupils, will be opened in a few days at the state capital, upon premises belonging to the United States. Either here, or at some more eligible point, we hope to secure this year a Normal school property, whose title shall be vested in the American Missionary Association. To this the primary schools will be feeders, and its graduates in time will go out to establish more primary schools, to an indefinite extent.

Brother Bardwell has found in the Assistant Commissioner, General Gillem, and in Captain H. R. Pease, the State Superintendent upon his staff, generous, constant, and cordial co-laborers.

Miss Goodrich wrote from Shubuta, in June:

"Every Friday P.M., after school, we have a prayer-meeting; and it does seem as if the Spirit of God was with us. Many interesting remarks are made, and earnest prayers offered by some of my scholars. Deprived as I am of such privileges at white churches, I find these little meetings a comfort and pleasure. They are doing much good. Usually twenty or thirty are present. We feel that this is a good way to end our school work.

"The Sabbath-school numbers over 100. My class numbers about 50. Our room is crowded. One Sabbath I had the whole Sunday-school alone, and I'll never forget that day. I felt a fearful responsibility as I looked over the throng, made up of all ages, from old, gray-haired men to little day-pupils; but how thankful I feel to learn, since, that from the teachings of that hour one soul was born into the kingdom.

"The sanitary condition of the Freedmen is improving. The whites find it very hard to labor for themselves, and do not care to pay the Freedmen for work, so, of course, the whites suffer, and the blacks are raising cotton for themselves. They say there has not been a better prospect for a good crop for seven years. 'Aunt Phebe' says she is 'obliged to de whites for teaching her to work, but is as willing to do so for herself as she was for them, and if de blacks had been free all der lives, dey would be ahead of de white men now.' The Freedmen take pride in working and providing for themselves.

"I am in a delightful place of labor. Never was a field more ripe for Christian effort, or that promised a more abundant harvest. Indeed, my heart is full. There are scenes here which make tears start. Sallie says, 'I has got feelings; I an't no animat; I's folks. You's got a soul; I's got one too.' When we have done all we can for these people, may we meet them at the 'Beautiful River!'"

Our work has no partisan political mission; and for this reason, with others, it underlies all political parties and political successes. The enlightened, Christianized voter can be neither deceived, cajoled, nor intimidated by unscrupulous partisans, as they are easily able to cajole, deceive, or intimidate the ignorant and the vicious. To this point a teacher testified intelligently during the hotly-contested election in Mississippi:

"The result of the election seems any thing but flattering to the Freedmen. The constitution is probably defeated. Such a result a month ago was thought impossible. It was believed the Freedmen would stand by the constitution which gives them equal rights with white citizens, as one man; and so they would, had no unfair influence been brought to bear upon them.

FLATTERY AND INTIMIDATION.

"Early in the canvass rebel Democracy began its course of deception and violence. Large barbecues (public dinners) and public speaking were constantly in vogue; and when those failed to secure the desired end, violence of every character was inaugurated. In some instances men were actually murdered, others severely whipped, and threatened with death if they voted against them.

"Thus hundreds who would not vote down their own rights remained at home through fear, and large numbers of those who attended the election, especially at those points destitute of military protection, dared not vote. The large number who voted with the Democrats did it through fear or flattery. Democracy said, 'Give us your votes, or we give you no labor or patronage'—which meant starvation. 'If you vote with us, you shall not want; we will make you our friends, our equals, our brothers,' etc.

"Thus the sad result was brought about; and, though it may seem to you, their distant friends, that they manifested cowardice unpardonable, we find it not in our hearts thus to judge them. History furnishes few records of the unlettered, with neither organization nor means of defense, and whose leaders and candidates have been robbed and driven from their homes, (as is the case with the Freedmen,) who were willing to face starvation or violent death in defense of even the dearest rights. The surprise to us is, not that some forsook their cause, but that the majority stood firm in opposition to the machinations and cruelty of a well-organized and determined foe.

A STRIKING FACT DEVELOPED.

"Though these political reverses seem discouraging, yet they have developed a fact interesting and encouraging to those interested in the education of this people. It is noticeable that at all those points where schools have been kept up, and where missionary teaching has been furnished, the people hold fast to their principles, while in other localities they were easily turned from them."

The only point in Alabama belonging to the Western Department is the city of Mobile and its vicinity.

The removal of the military hospital and refugee camp from Red River, where a good work was done last year, ended the employ of our teachers there and transferred them to the city. The failure of suitable school room and living accommodations at White's Landing, over the bay, retired to the city also, about the same time, the excellent teachers who had done a good work there. Abundant work was found for all willing hands, however, and when EMERSON INSTITUTE was opened, the laborers were found quite too few.

The opening of this Institute, upon premises owned by the American Missionary Association, marked an era in the work heretofore carried on under considerable embarrassments. A letter published in January gives some account of the property in this wise:

"The educational enterprises undertaken in Alabama by the American Missionary Association have been generously fostered by General Swayne. Besides promising and permanent foundations secured by the Association at Selma, Talladega, and Montgomery, a crowning and extraordinary success has been consummated here within the last few days. Generously assisted by General Howard, upon the intelligent and earnest recommendation of Major James Gillette, the sub-assistant Commissioner of the Bureau for this part of the State, warmly seconded by General Swayne, the Association has come into the possession of a college property, worth all of its original cost, which was upward of sixty thousand dollars. Two gentlemen of Illinois, who have, for two years past, contributed largely toward the current expenses of the schools here, made a handsome special contribution toward the necessary purchase-money, and the college will bear a name long honorably distinguished among Christian educators.

"The building is of brick, four stories in height, and surrounded by four acres of garden, fronting upon the most aristocratic street in the city, and situate in the

"The building is of brick, four stories in height, and surrounded by four acres of garden, fronting upon the most aristocratic street in the city, and situate in the most aristocratic of its neighborhoods. It affords accommodations for 300 pupils upon the main floor, and by inexpensive changes can be made to accommodate 700 to 800 within its substantial walls. The school-rooms are supplied with modern furniture and apparatus throughout, and the system of education now afforded the colored children of Mobile is in nothing inferior to the best advantages within the reach of the whites.

"The Association is fortunate in the employment here of a are corps of teachers, who now daily instruct upward of 500 pupils. I was a guest in the mission family for a few days, and have seldom seen, North or South, so amiable, orderly, and Christian a household."

The impulse felt by teachers and pupils is graphically described in a private letter from a teacher, written about the same time:

A NEW ERA.

"As soon after the first of January as practicable, the schools were transferred to the new building, and that day is certainly an epoch in the history of the freed people of Mobile.

"Early on the morning of the day announced for the opening of the school, a steady stream of colored children set in up Government street, causing great amazement and consternation to the residents along the route. 'What stre the niggers going to do?' was the anxious inquiry addressed by the unreconstructed citizens to each other. Doubtless they indulged in many private maledictions on being informed that they were going to be educated.

being informed that they were going to be educated.

"The enthusiasm of the children themselves was unbounded; they rushed into the building and grounds as if they had at last come into their inheritance, and meant to enjoy it in the fullest.

"I think the most implacable enemy of these people would have experienced a mitigation of his harsh feelings had he witnessed the three hundred children, their faces expressing the most eager delight, shouting with joy over the playground and around the building, which to them impersonated the idea of all that is noble and lofty in future cultivation and civilization. All through the busy day of entering names and organizing classes, my heart was swelling with thanksgiving for God's mercy in changing the dark past of slavery to the luminous present.

PROPERTY A POWER.

"The purchase of this property fairly determined the success of the educational work in Mobile. The school is already a power in the community. The Times newspaper of this city knows us by the designation, 'Nigger College.' So be it. With the blessing of a gracious Providence we hope to make the institution thus alluded to, one of the greatest instrumentalities for good in the land. The ownership of the college gives great prominence to our work, and attracts to it very general attention."

Mr. Putnam (our Superintendent) has recently been appointed Superintendent of Public Instruction for Mobile city and county, and hopes to secure State aid for our schools during the coming year.

The Lone Star State escaped, for the most part, the severities of the war, and seems equally to have missed its most valuable lessons. Anarchy, almost Mexican in its sway, has continued from the beginning of the war until now, and continues still. The patience, prudence, and fortitude of the Freedmen have been tried to the verge, and often beyond the verge, of human endurance.

At Galveston, Miss Barnes and Miss Skinner have labored with exemplary fidelity, wisdom, and patience. In addition to the work of the school-room, in itself more than sufficient, their Good Samaritan visits among the people at their homes have been constant and effective; while on the Sabbath they have performed a surprising amount of admirably-arranged missionary labor, much of which might properly be called apostolic, if not ministerial. School-room accommodations being of the scantiest measure and poorest quality, the freed people have begun to build at their own cost a modest structure, which it is hoped the Assistant Commissioner of the Bureau will generously complete.

At Port Lavaca our heroic missionary teacher, Mr. John O. Stevenson, has labored with a courage not easily overpraised. He was hemmed in by the enforced blockade during the fearful prevalence of the yellow fever; was himself prostrated and lay long at the grave's mouth, with only dusky hands to minister to his necessities. For sixteen months he continued at his post, with unfaltering courage and unflinching fidelity. During the last few weeks of his stay, prior to the summer vacation, he dared not sleep in the same house for two successive nights, lest the boasted purpose of the Ku-Klux should be consummated in his assassination.

He is about to be ordained a minister of the Gospel, that he may return to his much-loved people fully authorized to minister as he may be able to all their spiritual necessities.

At Port Lavaca, as at Galveston, the freed people are building a school-house, with generous self-denials, at their own cost. At Houston our schools have greatly prospered, and our teachers have proved themselves in a noble sense "honorable women."

During the latter part of the year Miss Barnes discharged acceptably the duties of superintendent, demitted by Mr. Allen after a protracted and exceedingly satisfactory tenure of office.

The Roman Catholic missionaries, backed by ample offerings of the "faithful," are rapidly gaining ground in Texas. Miss Dunlavy wrote from Houston in February:

"It is not strange that the Catholics gain such an influence over these ignorant ones; for, aside from the glitter and ceremony of the service, which attracts them, they gain a stronger hold upon them in another way; while other white churches in the South refuse them admittance, excepting in some cases, when they are allowed a seat in the 'nigger pews,' the Romanists open wide their doors and receive them into full communion. With this power to be met, together with other evils abroad in the land, you see how much those engaged in this work need to be 'wise as serpents and harmless as doves,'"

At Hempstead a most excellent work was accomplished by Mrs. and Miss Dickinson. The former wrote in June:

"There have been changes for the better in individual and general feeling. Some of the worst vices of the people are becoming unpopular. Especially is this true of the school-children. Last year the boy who could steal the dinner of his school-fellow, or tear the name from his book, appropriate it, and escape detection by the teacher, was considered smart, and punishment in school was no particular dishonor. Now, such an one is marked and shamed, the scholars with a sneer saying, 'That nigger never was no 'count no how.' So he stands alone on the playground till public indignation subsides.

GAINING FAVOR WITH THE WHITES.

"The work has gained much in respectability among the white people. Last year no white person appeared at our picnic; this year several leading merchants, formerly slaveholders, and some young ladies were present, and took dinner with us, and one of the gentlemen made a most courteous speech, expressing their kindly feelings toward the people and the work, saying they were highly pleased with the order and quiet that prevailed, and with the singing, recitations, and calisthenics of the children.

"In view of the changes wrought in public sentiment, and the good accomplished by your twelve humble laborers the past year in the Lone Star State, I am led to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!' 'This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes.' Twelve for half a million! May the number next year be increased tenfold! What are these among so many?"

The improvement of the people is not only constant, but deep and comprehensive. An incident reported by a teacher, and, after publication in the American Missionary, reprinted in hundreds of journals North and South, seems representatively valuable enough for preservation in this place:

"Concerning 'hollering' in meeting, Aunt Judy, an old colored woman, said to one of her sisters: ''Tan't de true grace, honey; 'tan't de sure glory. You hollers too loud. When you gits de dove in your heart and de lamb in your bosom, you'll feel as ef you was in dat stable in Bethl'em, and de blessed Virgin had lent you de sleepin' baby to hold.'"

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

THE Foreign Missions of the Association are six in number; with thirty missionaries and assistant missionaries, 11 of whom are ordained; and 11 churches having an aggregate membership of 668, of whom 61 have been added during the year. No missionary has died in that time; but four, all from the Mendi Mission, West-Africa, have been obliged to leave the mission on account of ill-health.

OJIBUE AND OTTOWA MISSION.

NORTHPORT, MICHIGAN.

Missionaries. - Rev. Geo. N. Smith, Mrs. Smith.

This mission, situated on the frontier in the north-western part of Michigan, takes its name from two bands of Indians gathered there, but extends its labors to the whites of the neighborhood, a portion of whom are also members of its church; on this account Br. Smith has been strongly urged to seek support from the "American Home Missionary Society," to whose field of labor it may be considered as properly belonging. For this or other reasons Mr. Smith has not given any final report of his year's labors; but the letters received from him during the year indicate continued encouragement in his work.

* Restored.

Brainerd.—The condition of this station in May last was reported as encouraging; every thing was harmonious. The Holy Spirit seemed present, and eight young people had been received into the church. At the close of the year, August 1st, John Thompson, pastor, wrote:

"We have done a little more than keep our ground. Ten members have been received into the church, and seven removed by death and other causes. The old members of the church, who were gathered by brethren first in the field, are fast passing away, and we have quite a number of children and young persons.

"We greatly regret that the income of the church should be so little as £12.

. . . It is to be feared that this matter is not upon our hearts and minds as it ought to be; a very moderate effort on the part of every member would have given quite a different result."

Three of the additions to the church were from the day-school, (Martin Harris, teacher.) The school numbered 68 in all.

Brandon Hill and Providence Churches are both under the care of Rev. S. B. Wilson. In reviewing the year's labors and results, Mr. Wilson says:

"On the whole, I feel quite gratified in reviewing my labors of the past year, and I feel that God has blessed them, both here and at Providence. There has been an eagerness to learn the word of God, and an interest in it quite as great if not greater than in any year heretofore. The people of both places have seemed really to enjoy the preaching of the word, and I think it has not been without its good results, both in the hearts of believers and unbelievers. We have added six members to the church here, and five to the church at Providence. Our people are becoming more intelligent and more active and useful. There has been no year when I have put so much on them as during the past, and at no time have they done what they had to do so well. I feel that our churches are quite different in character from what they were a few years ago. The conversions are clearer and more decided than they have formerly been. Our Sabbath services, and our Sabbath-schools at both places, have been well attended and interesting.

"It has been a sad year in one respect, to the little church at Providence. There have been six deaths among its members. I know, however, that God has blessed these afflictions to the spiritual good of the survivors."

The day-school at Brandon Hill has been larger than last year. The teacher Mr. Aaron Black, a native of the Island, is becoming skillful and efficient.

CHESTERFIELD.—Rev. C. B. Venning, the excellent pastor of this church, has been severely ill, during a large part of the year; yet the congregation, Sabbath-school and prayer-meetings, were for the most part well attended. The Sabbath-school numbered 100 members. The church has, however, decreased in number, only two members having been received, and six removed.

ELIOT.—Rev. C. C. Starbuck, in his report of this station, Aug. 1st, says that five members were added to the church on profession during the year.

"This has been the most promising band of young people I have yet received to communion in the Island, at least in point of religious knowledge and previous correctness of conduct.

"The higher tone of family life, which has been sedulously cultivated for years, is beginning at last distinctly to show itself, giving signs that the Gospel is passing into the second stage of organic growth.

"The community outside of Christian influences, is, as is natural, worse than ever before, especially in its disposition to revert to the old African diabolism of Obeah, or African witchcraft, which has a wider spread and stronger hold, it is thought, than in a generation previous. But the large gathering of children into the Sunday-school would seem to indicate that, with the young, the kingdom of light is encroaching on the kingdom of darkness."

RICHMOND.—The church here was formed about eighteen months ago, consisting of five members; seven have since been added. The attendance at the Sabbath services is increasing. Two weekly prayermeetings are sustained and the Sabbath-school is thriving.

The general condition of Jamaica is reported as increasingly prosperous. It is said that almost every acre of land owned by the blacks is in a state of excellent cultivation, and does credit to the industry of the people.

The Jamaica Mission are anxious to have the means of enlarging their operations there, especially by giving young men the opportunity of securing a comfortable support by entering upon missionary labor. They are confident that, if the means were furnished them to thus encourage young men of promise, the result would speedily justify the measure.

AFRICA.-MENDI MISSION.

STATIONS AND OUT-STATIONS.

Good Hope, (Sherbro,) Avery, Läwäna.

MISSIONARIES.

Rev. G. P. Claffin, Mr. D. W. Burton, Rev. John White, Mrs. Claffin, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Mair: Rev. G. W. Gibson, Monrovia.

NATIVE ASSISTANTS: Rev. G. N. Jewett, Daniel During.

The Executive Committee regret to be compelled to report the return of Mr. White from Africa in close connection with the announcement of his rejoining the Mendi Mission. Mr. White went out but a few months since, buoyant with hope, and rejoicing in being permitted once more to engage in his chosen work; but his hopes were suddenly prostrated. The development of a latent disease was so rapid that his physicians decided he could not live in that climate.

Mr. and Mrs. Claffin had been but a short time before compelled to come to the United States to recruit. They hope to return again to the Mission.

The following copious extracts are from Mr. White's report, after his return. After describing the condition of the country at the time the Mission was commenced, the hinderances from the frightful commotions and petty wars, the jealousy of mercenary traders, the bitter fruits of the slave-trade, and the avowed position of the Mission against slavery, intemperance, and war, Mr. White adds:

RESULTS OF CHRISTIAN EFFORT.

"Among the fruits and results of Christian effort, the following may be noticed. The war spirit which was once so prevalent has been greatly subdued. Many of the strongholds of superstition have been broken down. Increased and general attention is given to trade and the arts of peace. Under British rule, the revenue of the Sherbro alone now amounts to more than $50,000 annually.

Thousands of the people, in all parts of the country, have heard something of the Gospel. Many a savage warrior from the interior, who has come to the coast to trade, has been told of the one, only Saviour, and gone home wondering at the new and strange truths which he has heard. Many a casual traveler has gone to a native Christian, Nicodemus like, and sat for hours listening to the sweet story of the Cross, and then returned home to repeat the wonderful news to his people.

The ultimate results, the revealments of eternity alone will declare. In more than one or two instances, aged chiefs on their death-beds have struggled amid the darkness for some rays of light, and, at last, discarding their 'country fashions.' have tried to lift their dying eye to Jesus.

"But to speak of more tangible results. Between three and four thousand have received the elements of a Christian education. The Mendi language has been reduced to a written form, so that now the people are beginning to have religious truth in their own tongue.

, "Concerning the number of those whom we have reason to hope have been truly converted, we can not positively speak. A comparatively large number, in connection with the different mission churches, have at different times been received. Some of these have died giving evidence of their faith and love; others, and by far the largest number, are scattered in different parts of the country, and little is known concerning them. It is to be hoped that some of them, however, are trying to go forward, despite the peculiar and powerful temptations to which they are exposed. The number of members in the church, at Good Hope, the only church organization in the Mission at present, is somewhat less than forty.

"Before the breaking out of the late rebellion, the aspect of the Mission was most encouraging. Nine out stations were established, and schools planted at some of the larger towns. Incipient steps were taken to train students for the mission work, and plans discussed for an exploration of the interior. But since then, in consequence of repeated removals by sickness, death, and other causes, and the failure of the churches at home to make up the loss, the cause has suffered immeasurably. Splendid opportunities for occupying important points in the country have been lost; schools and stations once established have been suspended; little bands of Christians gathered have become scattered; and while the calls for help have been loud on every hand, the strength to meet them has been growing less and less. The faithful few who have struggled on to keep the 'Mission up' have done what they could; but the churches at home have left them unsupported, like the out-posts of an army, struggling with superior

THE SPIRIT'S PRESENCE.

"Amid so much weakness and trial, it is cheering to note the evidence of the Saviour's special presence at the principal station—Good Hope. During quiet yet blessed seasons of refreshing, enjoyed some months since, a few young men were blessed seasons of Feiresning, enjoyed some months since, a tew young men were happily converted, and during the months of July and August there were evident tokens of the Holy Spirit's presence. The congregations were larger than ever before, the prayer-meetings were of deep and tender interest, and the inquiry-meetings were largely attended by old and young, many of whom, with tearful eyes, besought the missionary to tell them 'what they should do to be saved.' In several instances, old hardened backsliders publicly confessed their sins, and seemed to give evidence of being truly penitent. The last communion season, held the first Sabbath of September, was a day never to be forgotten by the good people at Good Hope. Six young persons, two young women and four young men, were publicly baptized and received into the little church. Others are expected to join at the next communion season. But here, again, the saddening fact comes up—that this little church, these precious lambs, need a missionary's care. Who shall lead them on in the green pastures and by the still waters? God of missions, plead thine own cause, and raise up faithful laborers! The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. O friends! pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest."

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT.

The health of the two American missionaries remaining at the Mendi Mission is very precarious, thus creating a strong demand for a reënforcement.

It would be exceedingly unhappy to suffer any disaster to befall the work in Africa, from want of a vigorous support, just at the time when God seems to be preparing multitudes of colored men and women, in this country, for a future supply of laborers.

On this account the Association makes a strong appeal for ordained missionaries for Africa. It is believed that there is a marked future for that continent. Who will go forth to prepare the way of the Lord there?

MONROVIA-WEST-AFRICA.

For the past two years the Association has supported a missionary at Monrovia, West-Africa, from a fund bequeathed to the Association for missions in that country. Mr. Gibson is an Episcopalian, as are the executors through whom this bequest came, and by whom his work was commended to the Association.

The Mission has been thus far a successful one. Within the last year, ten converts are reported to have been received into the Mission Church, and a few young men are in training for the ministry. Some of the reported cases of conversion have been very interesting. "One of them, an intelligent man of about thirty-three years, seems not only truly penitent and devout himself, but is also anxious to make known the truth to his people. He comes to me daily for instruction, and is now reading the Gospel of John. There are several men of his age, and younger, who are learning to read. I have also opened an interesting day-school for native children in a Kroo town, near this place, which I teach at present, devoting about two hours to it daily. My plan is, to go to the town at the stated hour, with a hand-bell, which I give to the first one I see, to ring around the place. In a little time they are seen coming from various quarters, with their books and cards, to the appointed house, where I instruct them first in their letters, spelling, and reading, and then in religious truth. My plan is, after teaching these children awhile in this way, until they shall become more earnest in their desire to learn, to induce their parents to send them to our school, where they may be instructed with our civilized children. A number of them already attend on the Sabbath.

"Of our Sunday-school, which numbers a hundred and five pupils, over thirty are native children, most of whom are in regular attendance."

Mr. Gibson is gathering natives in considerable numbers into his congregation of civilized people, and, after his English sermon, preaches to them through an interpreter. The voluntary attendance of this kind is increasing. He strives to lead them to say, "Let us go up to the house of the Lord," rather than expect to have the Gospel brought to their own doors.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Our mission in the Sandwich Islands consists of but one station with several out-stations, or places for preaching. Communion services are held at Makawao, Huelo, and Keokea, where formerly were separate churches.

We make extracts from the report of Rev. J. S. Green.

ENCOURAGEMENT IN OUR WORK.

"1. As to labors in this field. The female seminary is so connected with the station, the congregation, and the church, that it is eminently proper that it should be noticed in the report. The pupils are regular attendants on the worship of God, with the native congregation. They compose the majority of the Sabbathschool, and those of them who are pious united with the native church at Makawao. The teachers are all helpers with me in the work of the Lord. The laborers at the station have all been spared, and are the same as reported last year, with the exception of Miss Mary H. Parker, who has returned to Oahu. Her place is supplied by Miss Frances A. Johnson, and as the number of pupils increased, Miss Sarah E. Rodgers was added to the list of teachers. Both of these young ladies are the daughters of deceased missionaries.

Sarah E. Rodgers was added to the list of teachers. Both of these young ladies are the daughters of deceased missionaries.

"2. The health of the mission this year has been uniformly good. No Sabbath labors were interrupted from sickness. The pupils of the seminary, about sixty in number, are generally well. No better place for an institution of this kind could be selected on the Islands. The climate of Makawao has no equal.

"3. The labors of the station have been much as in former years—public worship on the Lord's day, and the Gospel preached, both in English and in Hawalian; Sabbath-schools and Bible classes; occasional meetings in different neighborhoods, monthly concerts, meetings preparatory to quarterly communions at Markawao, Huelo, and Keokea; Wednesday meetings, visitations of the sick, funeral addresses at the graves of foreigners and natives.

"4. STATE OF THE CONGREGATION AND OF THE CHURCH.—Our congregations are as attentive and as intelligent as any on the Islands, and seem to be growing in knowledge. So, in the native church, a portion of the members adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things, grow in grace, are a comfort to me, while living, and, dying, leave a savor of godliness behind. Some of these good men I have followed to the grave during the year, and though I mourned their loss, yet I felt that for them to die was infinite gain.

DISCOURAGEMENTS

"1. I scarcely need repeat that one of our greatest discouragements is the waning of the population, of the Hawaiian race. This goes on, disease is gnawing at the very heart of the nation. There is no bope but in God, and in his power at mercy we might still trust, were all patient, and humble, and prayerful. But all are not so. Indeed it may be said as it was in the time of Jeremiah, when the Jewish nation was tottering on the brink of ruin, 'Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, the king nor any of his servants.' Precisely so here; the king and his advisers know what is destroying the race, and what alone can save it; yet so far from applying the remedy, they are doing all in their power to aggravate the disease.

"2. Another discouragement I see in the fact that the work of the Gospel, and building up the churches from one end of the Islands to the other, is going into native hands, to the exclusion, for the most part, of their foreign teachers and their sons. A large majority of the pastors of churches gathered by American mission aries, are now native Hawaiians, and such pastors are rapidly increasing. Were they able and worthy men, (as I hope some of them are,) the danger would be less. But I have little confidence in many of them. They have no established Christian character.

"The state of things with us during the year has been much as usual. Several members of the church have gone to give up their account to God. Of some of these I cherish the hope that it is well with them, that in their case to die was gain—eternal gain. I have little confidence in numbers, as a test of the strength of a church, anywhere—less here, I am sorry to say. Of the numbers whom I admitted at Wailuku and Makawao, some 1500, probably, in all, how many will be approved in the great day, as genuine followers of the Lamb, will be seen. I have been more cautious in admitting to the church than many of my brethren of the mission, and, were I to begin my missionary work again, I should be still more careful. During the year I am now reporting, I admitted twelve, eleven of them pupils of the seminary. I could have admitted many more, but had my fears respecting them, and declined."

SIAM MISSION.

Missionaries. Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D., Mrs. S. B. Bradley, Mr. George Graham, Assistant.

The intelligence received from this Mission during the year, has not been encouraging. In his review of the year's labors, Dr. Bradley says:

"I must frankly say, that I feel very sad when I think of making any report of my missionary operations, because they are so barren. Our Zion mourns over these desolations, and our only hope is in God, who, we trust, will ere long come and build us up.

"I continue my Sabbath-day preaching in Siamese to small audiences, and go out in temple courts and by the highways several times a week, and talk the Gospel to the people, and sometimes give them a few tracts. I have persons calling upon me from all parts of the land, coming to purchase books, and to them I endeavor to be faithful as a missionary of the Cross, by conversation and gifts of tracts and portions of the Bible."

Siam has proved itself emphatically a hard missionary field, and the apparent fruits of labor have been few, but happily the providence of God has enabled our Mission to be nearly self-sustaining, and the missionaries still abide strong in faith that they shall yet see a harvest to the glory of God.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Once more we wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to the American Bible Society, for its prompt and liberal response to our call for Bibles and Testaments for the Freedmen. Its contributions to us for this purpose have amounted to $2129.30, during the past year. As we are sure that no recipients welcome the Divine word with more eagerness, or make more earnest efforts to become acquainted with its sacred instructions than the Freedmen, we take this occasion to render thanks on their account as well as our own, for the timely donations of this noble Christian society.

To the Freedmen's Bureau, as administered by its judicious, impartial, and efficient Chief Commissioner, General O. O. Howard, and his excellent assistants, we would also tender our warmest thanks for the protection it has extended to our schools, teachers, and pupils, for the assistance rendered the people in facilitating their industries, and encouraging their zeal for education, and especially for the substantial aid rendered in preparing buildings for school-houses.

Our obligations to benevolent friends abroad have been given in general terms, in the historical sketch in the body of this report; but we take pleasure here in making mention of the warm interest in our work manifested during the past year by the people of Scotland. Their cordial welcome to our representatives, Revs. Thome and Martin; their large and enthusiastic meetings; the able papers adopted at those meetings, so just in the appreciation of affairs on this side of the water, and so full of sympathy with us and our country in the great work devolved upon us by emancipation; together with the liberal and substantial aid contributed, have greatly cheered and helped us in our labors, and have furnished another proof of the unbroken cordiality of two Christian peoples.

DEATHS.

By the Divine favor, the executive officers of the Association are spared, in life and health, through another year; but one of our honored Vice-Presidents, Rev. Geo. Shepard, D.D., of Bangor Theological Seminary, has been called to his reward above. Death has also been busy among Life Members and teachers. Twelve of the former are reported as having died during the year, and of the latter, Miss Mary J. Armstrong, Miss Elizabeth Hill, Miss Lydia G. Stinson, Miss S. J. Foster, and Miss Ellen S. Hill, have been taken from us, some of them closing life on the field of labor, and others taking their departure from amid their friends at the North.

LIFE MEMBERS.

The list of Life Members increases rapidly, 856 having been added during the last year. The total number is 6897.

Our monthly Magazine and Paper, with this title, continue to be important means of communication with the public in relation to our work at home and abroad. Its reports from the South are commended to the friends of the Freedmen, as presenting reliable sketches of passing events there; and its views of the work to be done for the South and for Africa, we venture to say, are taken from a stand-point entitling them to candid attention. Of the Magazine 162,171 copies were printed last year, and 217,800 copies of the Paper.

conclusion.

God and his church have intrusted a large work to this Association. How well it has been done, thus far, this Report will show, in part; and only in part, for it can not reveal the influence exerted outside of its schools, its mission-homes, and its churches; it can not give the untold encouragement to labor, to learning, and to hope which its pupils, teachers, missionary-visitors, and ministers have exerted in the hearts and homes of the Freedmen.

But much as has been done, its work is only begun. These people are not yet out of the wilderness; and to leave them where they are, is to jeopardize the results of the war, of emancipation, and of all that has been done since for the South. God is not wont to prepare his instruments, and to be satisfied when they do their work only in part—when they heal the hurt slightly. His voice to us is, and we would reach it through the land, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

America must have a large share in the grand moral struggle that is to give the world to Christ. Hither are gathering the elements of the conflict-all nationalities and all religious beliefs and errors. The pagan Indian was here. The pagan African was compelled to come. Pagan Chinamen are coming. The Jews throng the marts of trade. The Papists came early and are gathering strength, fortifying themselves in vast churches and cathedrals, by alliance with party politics, and by the increase of their numbers by immigration from the old world. But the last grand movement of this subtle power is to gain the colored people. Intemperance, infidelity, prejudice, and flattery will be great foes to the Freedmen; but if the Papacy can ensnare them, it becomes dangerous to the nation as well as to them. How can its power be resisted, if it adds these to its already formidable masses? This is a danger not to be met by armies, but by education and the Gospel. Schools are needed, but religious truth must accompany them, carrying knowledge down into the cabin, into domestic life, into the social circle; it must reach the toilers in shop and field, ing the conscience, and developing manhood and Christian character; and it must culminate in the organization of churches marked by purity of morals as well as general intelligence. The Freedmen are now a loose mass in the body politic, useless and dangerous if they gravitate toward the other masses of ignorance, superstition, and vice, already so large, but valuable if crystallized around the centres of patriotism, morality, and religion. A few years will decide which way they will drift. But the decision must not be left to chance. Vice always gets the benefit of chance and neglect. Nothing but the utmost activity will secure to the country and to Christ the wealth of industry, intelligence, and piety that may be developed in this people. This Association ought to double its resources and its activities if it would meet adequately the responsibilities of the present emergency. It is ready to employ the activities if it can be supplied with the resources.

But the work of the Association is not limited to this emergency. As clearly as it was called to labor for the Freedmen in this land, is it beckened onward to a future and still wider field in Africa. The advancing tides of exploration and commerce sweep toward that continent. Christianity has too long neglected it. The feeble efforts made have been paralyzed by an unhealthy climate and by the blight of the slave-trade. To the Freedmen the climate will be more congenial, and the slave-trade will not long hinder. By the vast movements of Providence in America, preparation has been made for the civilization of Africa, and the Association, recognizing the call, works for the Freedmen with its eye on the ultimate and greater achievements to be wrought for Christ in the land of their fathers.

ADDRESS

PRARMING HALL

ON

OPENING THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, IN SPRINGFIELD, MASS., OCTOBER 28, 1868.

BY REV. E. N. KIRK, D.D.

DEAR BRETHEEN: Let us understand our position in the world's great history. It betrays a want of modesty in any man to think that God needs him. It is a false modesty in any one to believe that God will not employ him to some important end, if he is willing to do God's work.

A man and his actions are elevated in proportion to the elevation of his point of view. If he regards his fellow-men simply as gold-mines which he is to work to his own advantage, his course will be groveling, his end ignoble, his account fearful. If, with Mr. Buckle, he regards events in human history as mechanical effects of mechanical causes, he will become, himself, a block of wood, shaped by saw and chisel, and floated blindly by some current, to the sand-beach, where he will lie and rot with other drift-wood.

If he sees in great revolutions only the play of human passions, the intrigues of demagogues, and the failure or success of ambitious schemes, he must fail to reach the noble position of an intelligent and intentional instrument in accomplishing the designs of Providence. Pilate and Herod, Caiaphas and Ananias were very shrewd men. But their power was wasted, their lives were a failure, because they knew not the signs of the times. Their own end was not secured: God's ends were secured by using them, and restraining them, and thwarting them. "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."

Let us see to it that we get God's point of view. The question was proposed to me years ago, "What makes a great man?" I have found no better answer since than that then given—Sympathy with God.

We are now in the midst of great events. Events so wonderful have followed each other in such rapid succession, that we have almost lost the sentiment of wonder. We are now at the beginning of one of the world's great epochs. The King has made another grand movement to prepare the highway through the desert. Mountains are leveled, valleys are rising, crooked ways are made straight. The last Bourbon crown has fallen. There is trembling in Babylon. Spain is free, politically, religiously. Prussia is taking the lead of southern and middle Europe. Austria is entering on the course of a liberal policy. Italy opens her doors to the Gospel. Slavery is dead in the Republic, destroyed by the mercy of God through the agency of its defenders, bound and barred in its sepulchre by that very constitution which slaveholders designed to be its bulwark, but which, in the circumstances, empowered our Chief Magistrate, by a stroke of his pen, to terminate the bloody history of oppression. It is indispensable for every citizen of this Republic, who would see the grandest results from the mighty movements of the last decade of years, and who would make his powers and his life more conclusive to these results, first, to

I. Recognize the hand of God in these sublime movements. They are sublime by the almost visibility of the Almighty hand in them, at each successive stage; by the almost audibleness of the Divine voice, calling man to give a higher place to moral considerations in his statesmanship, his diplomacy, and his legislation.

Recently I inquired of a Southern gentleman, formerly a despiser of the Puritans, and a vindicator of slavery, "How came you to change your views of slavery?"

His reply resembled the answer given by candidates for admission to the church. In some portions you would have found it difficult to suppress the tears. In others it would fill you with religious awe. I was brought, in listening to the narration, to the plains of Damascus. The proud cavalier seemed to lie prostrate on the earth. Every lofty imagination was prostrated, pride lay confounded in the dust. Awe, conviction, repentance, submission seemed to have entered that spirit as he heard the voice from heaven, "Why persecutest thou me?" I know not but another Saul of Tarsus is to "preach the faith he once destroyed."

His reply may be summed in one sentence: "I saw that our peculiar institution was against God; and God was against us, our institutions, our notions, and our policy. The Most High had tolerated them, until he could bear them no longer." Through the baptism of blood, this man and many others have been initiated into new doctrines, and consecrated to a new service.

Let us with them see the going forth of Him who maketh the clouds his chariots. Let us observe the King of kings on cherubim and seraphim riding forth "full royally." Let us observe with reverence the mighty wheels of Ezekiel's vision, full of eyes, instinct with the wisdom, righteousness, and power of the Divine Will, moving straight forward; crushing institutions, men, and hearts, that have placed themselves to obstruct its path.

But we must see more than the intervention; we must perceive also,

II. The design of God in all this. The people of the Northern States generally look upon the overthrow of slavery as the great end accomplished by the war; some regard the triumph of the Republican party as the great benefit secured by it. But if the mere change of the political relations of the African race, and the mere triumph of a political party be all we see, we have not understood Him who has wrought the merciful changes.

Nor are they of the South at the right point of view who recognize only "the detestable Yankee," and the "accidents of war," in all these events. No, brethren of the sunny land, you should see more than that. Your consolation must be derived from higher views than those. You must see God in these great changes; you must see the hand, not of an arraigning judge alone; not at all of a providence partial to us because we are better than our brethren, but of a God who designs to make us one happy people, whose purposes of mercy are ripening, giving first the bitter bud, then bringing at last the joyful harvest to all. God has in all this but staid the awful tide that was sweeping those States to destruction. The check was a shock; but the deadly waters are retiring, to leave the South to be what its Creator formed it to be, as the garden of the Lord.

And if we do thus recognize God as dealing with us, it will produce a softening of those asperities, and a removal of those prejudices, which, so long as they continue, must make us two peoples under one government.

Our brethren are suffering, have suffered more, perhaps, than any civilized people of modern day. They and we have alike mourned our prematurely dead. But famine and the palmer worm, drought, and flood have followed in the track of war over this glorious land.

Let us share their sorrows, let us go and mingle our tears over their dead; forgetting why they died, only remembering we are brethren, unless they persevere in the purpose to destroy this government, and despoil us of the territory that belongs to the country and not to a section.

We have done with fighting, if they have done with secession. We know their antipathy to us. Let us then mutually please God, by our desire to ascertain his will, submit to it, and do it.

England, France, and other nations, with a mock philanthropy, dispossessed themselves of negro slavery, as we have of Indian tribes, putting them where they must "die out." But this will not answer with the negro race. God has permitted us to work him so thoroughly into the industrial interests of the nation, and his race to grow into such enormous magnitude among us, that he can not be pushed aside, sent to Africa, or assigned a graveyard for his future residence, where he may rot into non-existence. Your Roman priests may pledge the negro-hater to keep him submissive under their ghostly despotism; your Wade Hamptons may hope to establish a semi-feudal serfdom over them; your Ku Klux Klans may ostracize the negro's friend, and murder the negro; but their schemes are shallow. He that sits in the heavens laughs at them. The negro is here to be disposed of by us, either to our great benefit, or our immeasurable loss-perhaps our ruin. God has put him here through man's wicked agency. And now the white man is on probation. God is watching his treatment of his brother, holding up to our view the terrible period of the war as a warning. As my friend observes, "The sufferings of us Southrons are not your work; no, nor our own-God has done it. The South was, one day, a family filled with pride, with power, with wealth and beautiful young life. Into this family suddenly came the angel of death, riding on his pale horse." Yes, this is a just and terrible picture. We can see the terrible riders, War and Death. With the fell swoop of their merciless scythes, they cut down beauty, wealth, and power. They trample King Cotton and his crown into the dust. They send swaying armies of both friend and foe across the smiling fields, leaving in their track a barren wilderness, whose only monuments are dreary chimney-stacks, showing the hearths whose fires are quenched, around which the storm may howl, but the song upriseth and the greetings of affection are witnessed no longer.

Yes, God has done it, and, like other afflictions, he sent it for our national and personal benefit.

The religious use of the war is the duty of the hour. Let the government regulate our political relations, and we will stand by them in all that is wise. We, as Christians, can, nay, must go beyond that, and labor to bring about Christian relations and restore Christian feeling in our brethren toward us. If, however, they do not yet understand that God has proclaimed the African a man, and an American citizen, we shall be compelled to defer our fraternal approaches to them. For we understand a part of God's design to be, to remove national prejudice and injustice, and place men of every race on the footing of political equality. Full citizenship is the unqualified right of every one born or naturalized on our soil.

III. The right of suffrage conceded to him is now a sacred duty, as well as sound policy, and we mean the right of voting without dictation from his employer. But this will require in practice one other reform. The negro must be—

IV. A land-owner. This society, indeed, has no immediate connection with this point. Nor do I introduce it for the purpose of suggesting any action appropriate to this Association. Yet I do wish to show you that we have in this question a profound interest as a Missionary Society. Industry lies at the moral and national basis of civilization and society. We never can elevate the colored man by our schools until he becomes a free laborer, and he never can become a laborer fit for citizenship until he recognizes himself an owner of the soil he cultivates, and feels the stimulus of improving the land for the benefit of his descendants.

If the Africo-Americans, as a class, are mere hirelings, excluded from every prospect of ever owning the land they cultivate, and the house that makes their home, you insure to them an inferior form of citizenship, a limited self-respect, and a qualified form of respect from their neighbors.

Then, again, the negro citizen remains to-day under the power of the white man to such an extent that he may say to us, You keep the word of promise to my ears, but break it to my hope.

The disfranchised rebel, without citizenship, with no right to choose the officers of the government, or hold an office in the State, can, to-day, control the vote of the negro or mulatto, who, though he is a citizen, a voter, and eligible to the presidency, has no foothold, no power; he is in the hands of his former master, no longer a slave, but still a serf—a mere implement of agriculture. Why, how? In one word, the white man owns the soil. The negro must then become a land-holder. A little farm not only makes him free, but an independent citizen. Then he has something to love, to defend, to lean upon for support when not voting the Southern ticket; then he goes to the polls to choose his rulers, independent of dictation, without by that act robbing his children of their bread.

V. The intellectual wants of that people are now by God intrusted to Christians of the non-slaveholding States. The appeal is both to our piety and our patriotism; to our piety and philanthropy, for the negro is born as the white man is born, an undeveloped spirit. Nothing but a judicious education will ever develop this race. The faculties of an immortal spirit are more precious to their owner than the ownership of the material universe. Shall they lie and rot like seed in an unfavoring soil; or shall they grow into immortal vigor and beauty?

The appeal is also to our patriotism and selfishness. Shall we have four million human animals among us endowed with the rights of citizenship; but these either fraudulently withheld or blindly exercised? Shall they remain a mass of ignorant, full grown-children, or become an intelligent portion of our country, advancing every social interest; artisans, artists, farmers, scholars, men of science, probably excelling the average of us in refinement, in manners, and in attainment in the fine arts?

The colored race must be educated—educated in every department of knowledge that we deem necessary for the perfection of our civilization.

The Southern States either can not yet do it, or will not.

VI. Their spiritual wants we recognize, to be, however, of chief importance. But that point has, perhaps, been sufficiently explained, as it has been the very spring of all our movements as a society.

I then insist on another point.

Our unchristian, inhuman prejudice against this and every class of men, whether springing from our own injustice to them, or any of their physical peculiarities, must be abandoned by us, more even for our own sake than for the sake of those whom we despise.

The brotherhood of man is as much a doctrine of Christianity as the existence of God. Drive them to Africa!—a scheme as preposterous as it is impolitic. Why not send me to Scotland because my father was born there; and all the descendants of Elder Brewster back to England?

And now one other point claims our attention. Circumstances have directed our sympathies chiefly to the African race among us But it is time to turn our thoughts to another class:

The Poor Whites of the Southern States.

Thousands of orphans, the children of slaughtered Union men, now rove over the mountains of Northern Georgia, uneducated, half fed, half clothed. Let their misery touch our hearts; let us atone for the injustice of the rebel chiefs. Let us take their thousands of the future mothers of America, and educate them as our daughters are educated.

OF THE

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING.

THE Twenty-third Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association was held in the First Congregational church of Mount Vernon, Ohio, commencing Wednesday, October 27th, 1869, at three o'clock P.M.

The audience having assembled some time previous to the hour of meeting, a season was spent in devotional exercises.

In the absence of the President, Rev. E. N. Kirk, D.D., of Boston, the meeting was called to order by the Hon. F. D. Parish, of Ohio, one of the Vice-Presidents. At his request the Rev. J. H. Sturtevant, D.D., of Illinois, another Vice-President, took the chair.

The congregation united in singing the hymn commencing, "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun," etc., after which President Sturtevant read the thirty-fifth chapter of Isaiah, and offered prayer.

The minutes of last year were read by the Recording Secretary, Rev. Henry Belden, of New-York.

Secretary Strieby read an abstract of the Annual Report, which was referred to a committee of four, namely, Prof. J. M. Ellis, Rev. J. E. Twichell, Rev. H. Cowles, D.D., and Rev. D. K. Flickinger.

The Chair appointed a Business Committee, consisting of Rev. T. E. Monroe, Rev. E. M. Cravath, Rev. T. K. Noble, Messrs. Sperry and White.

Committee on Nominations: Rev. J. Blanchard, Rev. L. S. Parker, Rev. C. L. Woodworth, and Rev. G. D. Pike.

Addresses were made by Mr. Allen, President Blanchard, and Rev. H. W. Cobb.

Recess till seven o'clock P.M.

Prayer-meeting was appointed for half-past six.

EVENING SESSION.—A prayer meeting was held at half-past six, in the lecture-room.

President Sturtevant opened the evening session by reading the third chapter of the Gospel of Matthew.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Cowles. The hymn, "Triumphant Zion, lift thy head," was sung.

President Sturtevant then preached a discourse from Matt. 3: 10: "And now, also, the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire."

The hymn beginning, "When shall the voice of singing," was then sung. The service was closed with the benediction.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock. Prayer-meeting to be held in the lecture-room, at eight o'clock.

THURSDAY MORNING.—A prayer-meeting was held in the lectureroom, at eight o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. E. Twitchell, of Mansfield.

At nine o'clock, the Association convened for business in the church. Rev. J. M. Ellis offered prayer.

Mr. George Kinney, of Oberlin, was appointed Assistant Secretary. The Treasurer's Report was read by Secretary Whipple, and referred to a committee, consisting of Messrs. F. D. Parish, A. L. Grimes, John Cooper, and Rev. H. Cowles, D.D.

Prof. Ellis, from the Committee on the Annual Report, presented the following:

"The Committee to whom was referred the Report of the Executive Committee, having examined it in detail, recommend the following expression of opinion by the Association:

"The review of what has been already accomplished shows an aggregate of results achieved, in proportion to the means expended, seldom, if ever, equaled in any Christian enterprise.

"It furnishes most satisfactory evidence that the work is of God. and that his blessing has been upon it from the beginning, and calls for devout thanksgiving for what he has wrought.

"It is also an evidence of the fidelity and wisdom with which the officers and Executive Committee have applied the means intrusted to them, and planned and executed the difficult and rapidly growing work of the Association.

"They have a claim upon all the friends of the cause, of gratitude for their past labors, and of unswerving confidence and increased cooperation for the future.

"This retrospect is full of encouragement and of incitement to go forward in this great work with stronger faith and redoubled energy.

"The considerations presented by the committee for continuing and enlarging the operations of the Association are of the most solemn import, and deserve the careful attention of this meeting, and of every lover of humanity and of our common country.

"Never has the demand for effort and self-sacrifice in this cause been more urgent or more vital than now. The fruit of our great struggle, the salvation of the liberated race, the value of what this Association has already done, the peace and safety of our land, all seem to depend upon the zeal and fidelity with which this work is prosecuted in the immediate future.

"God grant that we may not fail to know, in this our time, the things which belong to our peace."

The report was accepted, laid on the table for discussion, and afterward adopted.

Rev. T. E. Monroe presented the Report of the Business Committee, in a series of resolutions.

The first resolution was taken up.

Addresses were made by Rev. M. E. Strieby and President Sturtevant. Resolution adopted:

Resolved, That we joyfully acknowledge our renewed obligations to the Father of all mercies for the blessings of another year on our labors at home and abroad.

The second resolution was read, supported by Rev. T. K. Noble and Rev. E. A. Ware, of Atlanta, and, after amendment, adopted:

Resolved, That a system of common school education is essential to the welfare of the people of the South; that the disposition manifested at the South to repudinte that system calls for continued efforts on the part of the friends of education and humanity to sustain public schools, and especially normal schools, open to all persons, without respect to previous condition or color.

Secretary Whipple, Rev. H. Cowles, D.D., President Sturtevant, Rev. John G. Fee, President Blanchard, Rev. H. W. Cobb, and Hon. F. D. Parish supported the third resolution, and, after amendment, it was adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the organizations of new churches under enlightened pastors, without caste, and composed of persons of practical piety, as an essential means of the spiritual regeneration of the South.

President Blanchard offered a resolution, which was referred to the Business Committee.

The fourth resolution was read; it was advocated by Rev. Mr. Twichell, Rev. George Whipple, and Rev. C. L. Woodworth. Resolution adopted:

Resolved, That much as has been done for the Freedmen, they can not now be abandoned with justice to them, safety to the nation, or loyalty to Christ.

President Blanchard presented the report of the Nominating Committee, which was adopted, as follows:

J. O. BENNETT, New-York.

The fifth resolution was supported by Rev. H. Cowles, and adopted:

Resolved, That this Association should hold itself in readiness to follow with Christian labors the soon-coming emancipation in Cuba.

Recess till half-past one.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON .- Association met at half-past one. Prayer by Rev. M. French.

The sixth resolution was read, and Rev. D. K. Flickinger addressed the meeting in its support. The resolution was then laid upon the table till after the administration of the sacrament.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. Rev. Prof. Ellis and Rev. Prof. Godman officiated at the service.

The Association resumed business.

President Sturtevant being under the necessity of leaving, made a brief address, in which he expressed his gratification in having been enabled to attend this meeting, and his great satisfaction in the proceedings. It was

Resolved. That the thanks of the Association be presented to President Sturtevant for the sermon preached last evening, and a copy be requested for publication.

President Sturtevant then retired, and Hon. F. D. Parish took the

The consideration of the sixth resolution was resumed.

Rev. G. Whipple, Rev. T. E. Monroe, Rev. H. W. Cobb, and Rev. M. French spoke in its favor. It was then adopted:

Resolved. That the missions of the Association in Africa should be speedily and effectually reënforced.

The seventh resolution was then taken up. Rev. C. L. Woodworth read a paper prepared by him on the subject. He was followed by President Blanchard and Gen. O. O. Howard. The resolution was adopted: * *

Resolved. That it is the duty of this Association to inaugurate and prosecute a vigorous missionary work among the Chinese in the United States.

Secretary Whipple reported an amendment to the second article of the constitution, as recommended by the Executive Committee. It was adopted, and is as follows:

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

Rev. Mr. Monroe, from the Business Committee, to which was referred the resolution of President Blanchard, reported as follows:

^{*}Dr. Patton accepts no compensation for his services.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING.

Whereas, The Freedmen are at this time specially exposed to be attracted by the secrecy, ceremonies, and showy parade of Popery and the secret orders, we affectionately advise the members and ministers of our churches not to unite with

The Committee on the Treasurer's report moved that it be approved and published. This was agreed to.

Recess till half-past seven.

THURSDAY EVENING .- A large congregation assembled in the church.

Rev. L. S. Parker read the one hundred and third psalm and offered

The hymn, "Jesus, Lover of my soul," was sung.

Addresses were made by Rev. John G. Fee, of Kentucky, and Major General O. O. Howard.

The hymn, "We are living, we are living in a grand and awful time," was sung.

Rev. Mr. Cravath offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association are respectfully tendered to the Baltimore and Ohio, the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, the Pennsylvania, and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis railroads for reduced fares; this church for the use of its edifice; to the people of Mount Vernon for their pleasant and abundant hospitality, and to the choir for its aid in the service of song in the sanctuary.

The minutes of the meeting were referred to the members of the Executive Committee present, for revision and publication.

Adjourned to meet next year at the call of the Executive Committee.

A prayer-meeting of great interest was held Friday morning, which continued until the time for taking the cars.

REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

WE meet to celebrate our twenty-third anniversary. The Divine blessing has rested for another year on our labors, especially among the Freedmen, demanding profoundest gratitude, theirs and ours. These people are beginning to enjoy the protection of law, a bountiful harvest has rewarded their industry, and success has attended all our efforts for their intellectual and religious advancement.

GENERAL SURVEY.

Turning to a general survey of the field of our toil, we are filled with gratitude for the progress and blessings that God has granted.

RETROSPECT.

Ten years ago, this Association met while slavery ruled supreme in the land, holding its victims with a firm grasp, and swaying authority over an abject nation and a cowering church. The raid of John Brown had then just startled the astonished "lords of the lash;" but the surprise was followed by swift vengeance, and a demand for greater concessions,

Three years later, the scene was changed: civil war convulsed the nation; a gloomy hour had come; defeat had attended our armies, and the popular elections had gone against the Administration. Some rays of light gleamed athwart the darkness. Emancipation was promised; the slaves were escaping; they were protected by our armies, and the nation had been aroused to care for them. This Association was active in its efforts for their relief and instruction, and other societies formed for the same purpose were in operation. But still a deep gloom of uncertainty hung over all—the result of the war, and the fate of the blacks and of the country.

PRESENT ASPECTS.

To-day, after seven years from that gloomy hour, peace prevails, not a slave breathes in the land, and the Freedmen are voters! They are gaining lands and houses, and are acquiring the knowledge that will make freedom and the franchise valuable, and home and the heart holy and happy.

THE WORK OF THE A. M. A.

Figures can never adequately represent the achievements for the relief, education, and elevation of the Freedmen. This is true of the work under our own eyes and hands. We know indeed that the physical supplies we have sent have saved some from perishing with cold and hunger; have inspired many with hope and stimulated them to self-support, and to buy land and erect homes for themselves; that thousands have been taught to read and write, and hundreds led further in learning, and that the Christian teacher and missionary have extended their influence beyond the school into homes, fields, voting precincts, and the house of God. But much of the labor was incidental and not recorded; many gifts of clothing, prompted by our appeals, were sent directly, and hence were never entered on our books, and a vast momentum was given to industry, economy, to learning, virtue, and piety, that can be found only on the "books" which will be opened at the last day.

As far as our records will guide us, the following are the figures:

- 1. CLOTHING AND SUPPLIES which we sent from July, 1864, to July, 1869, (5 years,) amount to $350,894.40. Prior to the first date named, no accurate account was kept.
- 2. Teachers, Missionaries, and Schools.—The number of teachers and missionaries sent from 1861-2 to 1868-9 was 2628. It is impossible to ascertain the number of different scholars taught. The amount of teaching may be reached proximately. The pupils in the day-schools will equal fifty scholars to each teacher and missionary, (for these taught usually,) making 131,400, while the night and Sunday-schools have had at least as many, making a total number equal to 262,800 pupils for one school year.

That these schools were appreciated and had an encouraging effect, is evident from the fact that the Freedmen have, out of their poverty, contributed to our treasury, in aid of the schools, $7756 in 1866-7, $13,056 in 1867-8, and $21,500 in 1868-9.

What an evidence these figures give of increased ability and liberality.

3. Schools and School Buildings.—The progress of the Freedmen is seen in the advanced schools they have needed. The Association has under its care two incipient universities, two colleges, with pupils already in the regular classes, eight normal schools already sending out teachers, and twelve high-schools, some of them with normal classes. These institutions are provided with excellent locations and buildings, whose total valuation is three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

4. Churches and Church Edifices.—Twenty-one churches are under the care of the Association, and, with possibly a few exceptions, are composed of members who, on the score of intelligence and piety, would find admission to any churches in the North. These churches have houses of worship of an aggregate valuation of fifty thousand dollars.

THE FUTURE.

It may be thought that, having given the colored man freedom, the ballot, and so many advantages, physical, educational, and religious, no more need be done. We enter our earnest protest against such an inference; it is neither just to him nor safe to the nation. His wrongs as a slave, his destitution as a Freedman, and the strength and cunning of his foes, entitle him to something more than help to roll his burden nearly to the summit, but which then leaves him to the inevitable rebound. Moreover, the country is not safe if the Freedman is left in ignorance and vice. "A great sum," in blood and treasure, has been paid for his freedom, and much money and labor have been expended on him since; but all will be well-nigh lost unless more is done. His welfare is our welfare, and at our peril we may not desert him till he has reached the point of safety.

That he has not yet reached that point, a glance at his situation will suffice to show.

1. The mass of the old aristocracy of the South do not desire his advancement, and will thwart it if they can. Violence and flattery will both be used, but the most fatal device will be to hinder popular education among the blacks.

In most of the reconstructed States common schools are required by the new constitutions, and in some instances this is confirmed by legislative enactment; but in only three of the States has any thing further been done, and in them the effort has been both partial and unstable. A striking illustration of this is just now transpiring in Tennessee. This was the most forward of the three States in maintaining colored schools by taxation, and under the energetic efforts of Gen. Eaton, State Superintendent of Education, one hundred and ninety thousand scholars were gathered into the schools. But the recent election has jeopardized all. The new Superintendent of Education is understood to be hostile or at least indifferent to public education, and the Legislature had but just convened when a bill was introduced to abolish the school system, and keep in the treasury all money due for teachers' wages! It is yet to be hoped that this impolitic and unjust effort will fail; but the animus of the South is revealed, and the fact clearly shown that Northern benevolence must maintain schools at a sufficient number of points to encourage the Freedmen and accustom the whites to witness, and at length tolerate and welcome, what they will see is so beneficial. This the North owes to the Freedmen.

But it is clearly impossible to do this wholly by sending teachers from the North; they must be raised up among the colored people themselves; and hence the indispensable necessity of sustaining good Normal Schools in all the important centres of population at the South. These schools will furnish an ever-increasing number of teachers, and will be a fortress of moral strength to the Freedmen, giving leaders, defense, and courage.

2. The efforts of the Romanists to win the Freedmen are avowed and energetic. The avowal was made in the Romish Council held in Baltimore in 1866, and the energy of the effort is attested by the million of dollars then voted; by the collections since taken in Catholic churches; by the many priests now employed in the South; by the education of one hundred colored young men at Rome, most of them designed for this field; and by extensive educational efforts in the South, not only in common schools, but (as is the case elsewhere) by schools of so high an order as to attract many of the most talented of the colored youth!

Here, then, is danger to the spiritual welfare of the Freedmen, and with it a peril to the nation. If the papacy can add the voters of the four millions of blacks to the solid and obedient masses which it controls at the North, its ascendency in American politics is well-nigh assured. Must things be suffered to drift into this abyss? Neither as patriots nor as Protestants can we permit it with safety, nor even without guilt.

3. The special vices of the Freedmen are another and grave source of apprehension.

If they were strong in an enlightened and practical piety, they might cope with their foes; but here is their weakness. In former Reports we have alluded to their danger from intemperance and from a mere religion of excitement; but we wish to refer now to a point of greater importance—the condition of the colored women in the South. The position of woman is the test of the moral state of any people; if she is refined and pure, they are exalted; if she is ignorant and unchaste, they are degraded. There can be no exception to this statement, and it has a fearful significancy in reference to the Africo-American woman. Slavery systematically attempted, and with terrible success, to obliterate from her mind the instinct of chastity. But slavery had a method in its wickedness. Its policy was dietated not merely by lust, but self-interest; it placed barriers to night-rambling; it furnished homes, such as they were, to the families; it gave regular supplies of food, such as it was, to the people. But since emancipation, comparatively few of the negroes have homes; there is no restraint on their wandering; the destitution of the women tempts to licentiousness as a means of support. The bitter results are seen in the increased facilities for vice and a less rapid growth of population.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

America has debased the virtue of the colored woman; shall the only atonement be a liberty that will give a more fatal license? No! the wrongs of herself and race have cried out to God, and the land has been bathed in blood. Let us see to it that the neglect which follows those wrongs shall not call for a sterner retribution. Christian women of the North! let the cry of your colored sister's woe come into your pleasant homes, into your circles of prayer, and into your secret devotions, and lend your sympathy and help, ere it be too late. The work of the nation for the colored woman is not finished, but it must be done quickly!

This survey reveals the vast educational, patriotic, and religious duty that America yet owes to the Freedmen. If we neglect it till they are crushed beneath these difficulties and dangers, we may hereafter be compelled to begin anew, in shame and in self-defense, the work of saving them and ourselves too. But if we press right on, under the prestige and momentum already acquired, we can, with the help of God, push the work to a triumphant success. The facilities now in the hands of this Association, if employed to their utmost capacity, are a vast power to this end. Our corps of teachers; our tens of thousands of scholars, gathered into day, night, normal, and Sunday-schools; our well-appointed buildings for schools, colleges, and churches; and our churches themselves, composed so largely of the more educated and pious among the people, are the very instrumentalities needed, if ever the Freedmen are saved. Is it wise to leave these to a partial use, when all these motives impel to a vast enlargement?

But we feel that the providential preparation of this Association, its experience and facilities for work, fit it to meet other calls that now, or soon will, press upon the attention of Christian America.

THE CHINESE.

The over-crowded populations of China are pressing to our shores by thousands; they may soon come by hundreds of thousands. The people of America are startled; some would deny entrance to the immigrant, others would prohibit his idolatry by law. But, however much we'may hesitate, the Chinese will probably continue to come, and there can be no question as to the duty of Christians to meet them with the Gospel. Some Christian denominations are already engaged in the work. The churches cooperating with this Association (as, for example, the Congregationalists) have no agencies in operation for reaching this people. It seems equally undesirable to form new organizations for this purpose, or to leave these churches to mere incidental efforts. This Association is ready to consider its duty toward the Chinese in America. They may soon be in great numbers, laboring side by side with the Freedman of the South, and they now suffer with him the bitter prejudice against color. The Executive Committee ask the instructions of the Annual Meeting on this subject. We trust that in wise deliberation and in earnest prayer it will be considered, and if it be decided to go forward, and the churches will approve, and God will bless, we shall enter upon the work with prudence at first, but with zeal and enthusiasm.

CUBA-BRAZIL-AFRICA.

But other, and perhaps more strictly germane work awaits us in the coming future. Before we meet at our next annual gathering, the slaves in Cuba may be free. Brazil can not much longer hold her bondmen; and Africa pleads that some of her sons and daughters may be returned to her as missionaries and teachers, to aid in the regeneration which she yet waits to see,

In view of these pressing and prospective labors, your Committee can see no excuse for limiting the work, but imperative motives for enlargement. If God and his churches will bear us up, we will not be dismayed at the vastness of the undertakings, but will prosecute them joyfully, and to the utmost of our ability.

Before passing to details, we wish to mention, with gratitude and commendation, several institutions that have been helpful to us or to the Freedmen.

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

During the past year, the Freedmen, and those who have been laboring for them, have been laid under renewed obligations to this valuable office. We take this occasion to express our thanks for these benefits, and also our appreciation of the great utility of the Bureau throughout its history. Under the administration of its conscientious, Christian chief, it has, since its organization, saved from actual starvation thousands of people, white and colored; it has stood as a rampart of defense between the Freedmen and their foes; and by its wise disposal of funds to this Association, and to others, for the erection of school buildings, it has given a firm basis to some of the most promising efforts that have yet been made to promote education at the South.

The Bureau now exists only in its educational department, and it has but a limited amount of funds at its disposal. If the views we have expressed respecting the work still to be done among the Freedmen are correct, the Bureau should be continued, either on its present educational basis or united with the proposed Department of Education, with such further appropriations of funds by Congress as to secure its utmost efficiency; and if renewed under either of these forms, the government will meet the popular demand, and benefit the Freedmen and the country, by continuing at its head the scholar and the Christian hero, Major-General O. O. Howard.

THE FREEDMEN'S BANK.

Though not directly beneficial to this Association, this bank has been a great help, and a strong testimony to the progress of the Freedmen. Originating in an earnest desire to benefit this people, and fostered by the Bureau, it has been a vast power in promoting their industry and economy, while the amount and continued increase in its deposits are proof of their growing prosperity.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY,

This noble institution has continued its liberal assistance to us. The amount received in grants of Bibles and Testaments, during the year, is $2319.65.

We take this opportunity to express our obligations to the Board of Managers for their prompt responses to our calls, and to them and to the officers at the Bible House for their cordial, Christian sympathy with us in our work among the Freedmen.

THE SCOTCH STUDENTS' MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Among the pleasant and cheering episodes of the past year has been the liberal aid given to us by the Missionary Society of the United Presenterian Divinity Hall, Edinburgh, Scotland.

During the winter of 1867-8, Mr. David Macrae, an intelligent Scotch gentleman, a student in the Hall, and a member of its Missionary Society, traveled extensively in this country. He made a discriminating yet sympathizing survey of the wants of the Freedmen, and on his return home secured the adoption of our cause among his people, as the "scheme" of the Missionary Society for the year. It was voted to raise money enough to purchase ten thousand Scriptures, or parts of them, for the Freedmen; but the enthusiasm of Mr. Macrea, so readily caught and so efficiently seconded by the others, led to so thorough a canvass of the United Presbyterian churches that nearly double the number of Scriptures were secured, and, in addition to this, free transportation was obtained, and the remission of duty by the United States government. But this is not all; the Society has already sent us a little more than twenty-five hundred dollars in cash, and will probably soon send us nearly twice as much more. All honor to the Scotch divinity students! May they be as wise and successful in winning souls as they have been earnest in giving the bread of life to the Freedmen!

SURVEY OF THE FIELD.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

MISSIONARY AND TEACHERS.

Rev. George N. Marden, Miss Ella A. Cole.

Fifteen additional teachers in the night and industrial schools are connected with the Lincoln Mission in Washington.

The last Annual Report mentioned with satisfaction that the Public School Board had adopted the colored schools. Mention was also made of the intended transfer of our Sunday-school to the Lincoln Industrial Mission building as soon as completed. That has been done, and the school, and its history and prospects, are so interesting that we present a full sketch, for which we are indebted to Rev. J. W. Alvord:

THE LINCOLN INDUSTRIAL MISSION-SCHOOL OPENED.

"In 1866, one of the buildings of Wisewell Barracks was fitted up for school purposes, and on the 1st of July, four day-schools were opened by the American Missionary Association, with devoted teachers, who, after having labored for a year at Campbell Barracks, consented to stay and teach through the hot season, in connection with this mission.

A NIGHT-SCHOOL

for adults was also commenced, managed, and taught by those of us on the ground, and at the same time a familiar lecture or Sabbath afternoon meeting was started, attended by all ages. This was the embryo of what became the WISEWELL BARRACKS SABBATH-SCHOOL.

"Improvement was soon apparent. Civilizing influences slowly overcame imbruted habits, filth and rags were exchanged for barely decent garments, and when in the autumn some organization appeared under the missionary, Rev. John Marsh, sent by the Association, the first crude form of a Sabbath-school was seen.

"In the fall of 1867, a wider call for teachers was at once made and responded to The school began to attract public attention, and in the course of the following year it filled our large room to overflowing; reaching at one time an average of about 300.

SEWING-SCHOOL.

"During the winter season, pupils suffered much for want of warm garments, and in November, 1867, a sewing-school was organized by a few of the lady teachers, which at its first meeting had 22 pupils. This school rapidly increased in importance and interest, until 225 names were enrolled, with 13 teachers. The colored children under instruction made with their own hands 350 yards of cloth into garments, in general with surprising neatness.

"The lady officers have personally visited the homes of the poor, and given relief to many suffering people during the cold weather.

LINCOLN INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

"Other branches soon sprang from this fruitful vine. At a meeting of teachers, held November 7th, 1867, a missionary society was formed to sustain the school in the instruction of the ignorant, and clothing of the needy, which, on May 28th, 1868, adopted a constitution, organizing the Industrial Mission, the object of which is to sustain industrial and mission schools, composed of poor white and colored children, and other missionary operations.

A NEW BUILDING.

"The need of a suitable building soon became apparent. The barracks were becoming dilapidated, and we were notified that they were soon to be removed.

"The great interest which General Howard had manifested from the first in this movement encouraged the trustees to apply to him for a building, to be placed on land which they had procured, and the convenient edifice in which we are now assembled has been the result.

"A pleasant-toned bell, a melodeon, and other articles of furniture are the gifts of the American Missionary Association, who make this building their headquarters for missionary operations for the Freedmen in this part of the city."

In January, Rev. George N. Marden assumed charge of the religious work in connection with the chapel. His labor has been abundant, if not apparently fruitful. It is not found easy to maintain for the colored people a quiet, intelligent, religious service, in competition with the three noisy, wild and almost barbarous colored churchgatherings within three squares of this chapel.

The Sabbath-school rapidly grew, till it numbered nearly one thousand before the winter closed; the night-school, taught mostly by students from Howard University; and the Industrial School, under Miss Cole, were marked features of the work of Lincoln Mission.

Rev. Mr. Marden writes of the poverty and struggles of the people about him:

"Most of them are poor, and for their shelter mushroom shanties, some of them not much better than Jonah's gourd, have sprung up. Imagine

'A building long and low, With windows all in a row, Like the port-holes of a hulk,' and divided into twelve rooms, each room having one door, and that leading out of doors. Many of these structures are not even plastered. Rarely does a family get a single room for less than three dollars a month rent. You ask why don't they buy? 'The destruction of the poor is their poverty.' Besides, if they could buy it, they would have to pay two or three dollars a month land-rent.

'RECEPTIONS' AMONG THE POOREST OF THE POOR.

"An important part of my labors during the past month has been among the poorest of the poor. From nine till eleven A.M., we have 'receptions' at our office. Motley crowds. 'Some in rags, some in tags, and none in velvet gowns.' It would make your heart ache to see them.

'KIND O' USED' TO BEING HUNGRY.

"Two or three cases I have recorded in my note-book. Mary Rideout, an old woman of sixty, had to borrow a pair of shoes to come to the office in.
"'What do you have to eat?'

"'Just what I can pick up. Sometimes a lady that I used to live with sends me a little tea and sugar.

"'Do you eat three times a day?'

"'No. Sometimes twice, when I can get it; and when I can't, then once. Haven't had a mouthful yet to-day,' (eleven o'clock.)

"'How do you live without eating?' "'Oh! I gets kind o' used to it.'

'PERISH DEAD' BEFORE HE'D STEAL.

"'Mary's husband, an old man, quite infirm, says, 'Sometimes I goes twentyfour hours, and has nothing but water. Sometimes my daughter earns a little, and goes out and brings ten cents' worth o' meal, and we has a corn-cake; or she picks up rags and bones, an' so earns a little. Any way to get along honestly, for I think I'd perish dead afore I'd steal."

The principal work of the Association in Virginia is in the Normal and Agricultural School at Hampton. A recent article in The Independent gives this sketch of the school:

^{*} Laboring under the direction, and supported by the Free-Will Baptist Home Miss. Society

"The fundamental principle of the Normal School is the combination of study with practical work—closely, indeed, resembling in its way the system of the Cornell University. The charges for board and tuition are so low as to be actually surprising; indeed, the charge for tuition is justly described as nominal—one dollar a month for the whole range of instruction, which rises from the most elementary to quite a high class of studies. In the farm-work, the male students learn the theory and practice of the best methods of agriculture; the female students learn the theory and practice of the best methods of agriculture; the female students learn the theory and practice of the loss work of the boarding department and make clothes. Many of the male students have earned, during certain parts of the year, more than the amount of their expenses. The farm or mechanical labor is from three to five hours a day. There are now about seventy pupils in attendance; and, as the accommodation afforded by the present house is not enough, another large building, suitable, and even to some extent handsome, is about to be immediately erected. The great object aimed at in the plan of this institution is, that the students are to have an opportunity of learning "the three great lessons of life—two to live, how to labor, and how to teach others." For the pupils of this institute are trained there in order that they may themselves become teachers. Already, for instance, the pupils of this Normal School do the principal work of teaching the 220 children in the Butler School—which latter school may be said to have been the parent of the whole institution—and in the Lincoln School in the village of Hampton."

The large temporary accommodations for school-rooms and dormitories are already too strait for the students who are daily applying for the benefits of this school. Gen. Howard has made an appropriation for the first permanent structure, and before another year we hope to report a fine three-story brick building in the form of a Greek cross, seventy by eighty feet, completed, furnished and filled with male students.

There have been sixty-seven students in the Normal Department, many of them from a distance in Virginia, West-Virginia, and South-Carolina.

But the event of the year to Hampton was a visit from a company of gentlemen, of whom, and of their report, the same article in The Independent thus speaks:

"The Normal School has just been visited and inspected by a distinguished delegation. The Rev. Mark Hopkins, D.D., the venerable president of Williams College, Mass.; Alexander Hyde, of the Board of Agriculture, Mass.; Rev. B. G. Northrup, Secretary of the Connecticut Board of Education; and the Hon. James A. Garfield, the distinguished member of Congress from Ohio, went over the place, inspected it, tested the system of education, and have made a very valuable report, full of encouragement, approval, and hope. They testify that 'the closing examination and exercises of the school indicated a thoroughness and faithfulness on the part of the teachers that nothing but missionary zeal could have inspired: and that 'on the part of the scholars there was indicated a diligence and proficiency quite remarkable, and that would have done credit to students similarly situated of any race or color.' There was great correctness in reading and spelling. Nearly all wrote a good hand; and the blackboard exercises in map-drawing, with the new method of triangulation, would have been creditable to the pupils in any normal school at the North.' Alexander Hyde, one of the delegation, has written, for his own part, a letter on the subject to the Springfield Republican, in which he says, in a measure, yielded to the stubborn array of facts presented by the Hampton Normal School. This institution has proved that the negro can learn, and can work. I have been somewhat conversant with the schools and farms of Massachusetts; but it has seldom been my privilege to listen to better recitations or to see better arming than the negroes furnished at Hampton.

"This, then, is the war-monument raised in sight of Hampton Roads. The smoke of battle clears away, and there stands a school to educate the free children of slavery, that they may go forth and teach in their turn. Nothing could be more fitly in the principles which animated the most magnificent war for an idea ever waged among men. No words of ours are needed to bespeak for such an institution the sympathy of all who love freedom and light."

In other parts of Virginia, our laborers report their successes and discouragements:

EASTVILLE, (EASTERN SHORE.)

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

Miss R. G. C. Patten:

"Our adult temperance society is rapidly increasing. We have now eighty members, and our meetings are quite spirited. At the outset we feared that few would have sufficient strength of purpose to abstain from the use of tobacco, hardly to leave off whisky, but to our joy and surprise both have been given up. The children are instructed in the reform.

REFORMED LIQUOR-DEALERS.

"A year ago, over four men were engaged in selling whisky. After many entreaties, when we were almost in despair, they yielded, and are now our boldest champions. One of them was won over by Miss Doxey. He was formerly a member of the church, respected by all, both white and colored. When offered $500 to stump for the Democrats, he refused to do so unless they would go for the constitution formed by the friends of the slave.

ANXIOUS FOR LEARNING.

"All are anxious to learn. Some take turns with their mothers and sisters, so that they each can learn something. One woman said to me, that her children should have education if she had no dress to her back. One poor man brought me ten cents, saying, 'I don't get money for any work now, but I guess I can raise ten cents for one of my children.' Another said, 'Oh! yes, I will pay for this one; and as soon as I can get money for shoes for John, I will bring him in too.'"

NORFOLK.

Miss H. M. Buss, of Norfolk, writes:

"Several of my scholars last week requested me to have no vacation during the holidays, except the one Christmas day. I have partly complied with their request, by having a morning session each day this week for those who wish to come and attend only to arithmetic and reading. From twelve to fifteen are present each morning.

SCHOLARS VOLUNTEERING TO TEACH.

"Some eight or ten of my day-scholars are ready to assist in my night-school, and they do nicely. They are generally prompt and constant in their attendance, and manifest quite an interest in their work, and some of them evince considerable tact for teaching."

STAUNTON.

Mr. John Scott writes :

"A ship, if not valued for its cargo, sometimes does good service by clearing the channel for others bearing more precious freight; in this way, our school has been useful, if in no other. But some fruit of our labors is already apparent. Fifty children have been taught to read, as many to write, and many have learned enough of figures to keep their own accounts.

"A little boy of seven is capable of passing ever so severe an examination in Davies's Mental Arithmetic. Nearly the whole school have studied geography, and some have become quite proficient therein. A small class in grammar, who began the study three months since, now parse easy sentences, containing all parts of speech, quite readily. The school has been taught anatomy to some extent.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

"The children have improved morally. We found the Sabbath-school almost disorganized, and without books, teachers, or system. These evils have been remedied. Our Bible-class was never more interesting than now. The children have also been taught singing.

"In the work for temperance we have encountered great obstacles, but have done something. Our temperance band has increased to 125 members.

"The distribution of 100 copies of the New Testament, 25 of the Bible, and thousands of the best religious newspapers can not fail to do good.

"There is no State in the South more influential than Virginia, no part of Virginia more beautiful than the Shenandoah Valley, no town in the valley more desirable than Staunton, no pupils more intelligent than ours, and we may add no organization as well adapted to carry on the work among the Freedmen as the American Missionary Association.

"One little boy about eight years old, who had not paid for a month, and who began to think I was going to send him home, after hearing me urge the children to bring their ten cents, came next morning with forty cents, which he handed to me with more pride than a Wall street broker has with his millions. 'Well,' said I, 'how did you get this money?' 'I made it dis mornin' down town holdin' horses for ge'm'an.' And sure enough, I found he had been out on the street ever since sunrise to watch for jobs, lest he should lose his place in the school-room. Indeed, the interest manifested on the part of those who still attend school is greater than at any time previous. Neither rain, darkness, nor any thing else prevents them from coming, though many are compelled to come late, being hired out to those who care more for their labor than their education.

"The old minister who commenced his alphabet last December is still poring over the primers, but now begins to read short words quite readily. Last Monday night, when I called to hear him recite, I found him studying with the greatest enthusiasm. 'Oh!' said he, 'if I could only read a chapter in the Bible, or give out a hymn to be sung, I would give all that I am worth;' and that is perhaps $2000, which he has saved since his freedom. The day before, he had been out to a neighboring town to preach, and such is his memory of Scripture that several of the white people who were present declared that he must have been able to read; yet his only means of getting information from the Bible, as yet, is by having his little boy read to him. He declares he will succeed."

Warner, Miss C. Anthony, Miss H. L. Fitts, Miss H. H. Grosvenor, Miss Martha Nixon, Miss Josephine Holmes, Mr. Elisha McKuller.

The labors of the Association have been continued with success during the year, as the subjoined reports will show.

BEAUFORT.

Brother H. S. Beals, the former superintendent, says:

"No brief report can do justice to this school, with its rapid progress and growing interest in education. Many of the pupils were working in advanced rules of arithmetic, such as 'progression' and the 'roots,' with good proficiency. Three entered the Normal School at Hampton, and ten or twelve more were ready and anxious to go.

SCHOOL FOR MARRIED WOMEN.

"The afternoon school for married women was no less interesting and successful; mothers leaving their little ones and catching an hour for study. The class taught by Mrs. Beals was composed of representative women. Neat in person, chaste in their language, Christian in their deportment, and intensely earnest in their studies, they could not fail to ingratiate themselves in the affections of their teachers. The Friday lesson of this class was devoted to Bible-reading and study, interspersed with prayer, in which the pupils often led with great fervor and ability.

SCHOOL OF HARD-WORKING MEN AND WOMEN.

"The night-school of one hundred and twenty adults was made up of hard-working men and women, coming often without their supper, and anxious to consume even the 'midnight oil' in the acquisition of knowledge. I have seen these efforts continued for months, under great difficulties, and with a tenacity unknown before.

SUCCESS.

"Perhaps it is enough to say that, in a population of twelve hundred and sixty Freedmen, more than seven hundred of them are now able to read, and most of these to write and transact the common business of life. To see such a rapid progress in useful arts and the endowments of science, to see such well-directed effort and steady purpose, to witness abodes of filth and disorder converted into neat, beautiful homes, to hear the voice of earnest, intelligent prayer from thousands of cabins once filled with noisy, often senseless jargon—this is heaven indeed."

Mr. Francis Horton writes:

"We have had under instruction during the year at Beaufort, Morehead, and Hull Swamp no less than six hundred persons from sixty to eighty years of age.

"Our teachers have labored in season and out of season, going from house to house, and visiting the prisoner in his cell. Yet with the utmost we have been ableged to leave much want unrelieved. At the best, this is a hard place to live in; business is stagnant, wages low, and payments are still lower; so that, were it not for the abundance of fish, oysters, and sweet potatoes, many would starve.

"While there is so much poverty at present, there is prospect still of a bright reversion in the plan of land-ownership for the Freedmen. A fair beginning has been made, allotting ten actes apiece to certain families, which we hope will show the capacity of these men for respectable self-support, "Forty or fifty in this district may have been able to read some before the war, whereas there are now twenty times that number. Morally and religiously we have seen progress. A few appear to have entered upon the Christian life, who will be ready ere long to be incorporated with a new church."

SMITHFIELD.

AN INTERESTING SABBATH-SCHOOL.

A teacher writes from Smithfield:

"The first morning of our Sabbath-school, (March 1st.) there were sixty present; but each Sabbath the number kept increasing, until it was one hundred and seventy-five. Old men and women, with gray hairs and tottering steps, came bringing their children and children's children, many of them walking five or six miles; and they don't stay at home for a little cloud or a few drops of rain. I often see old men sitting down outside the door; and when I ask them if they are not coming in, and they say, 'No, ma'am; we doesn't know enough; we can't read, but just ome to listen,' I tell them they are just the ones we want; so we can teach them to read; and after a few words of encouragement, they come in, and become regular attendants. The young men take a great interest in the Sabbath-school, and think a great deal of being present every Sabbath. I often hear them say, 'they can not miss their Sunday-school.'"

WILMINGTON.

Brother Beals, who has been transferred to this place during the year, thus writes of

THE MAN WHO "TOTED" HIS BIBLE.

"You asked me to put on paper a few incidents in the life of Moses Fisher, the Freedman referred to in one of my former letters as 'toting' his Bible through all the long years of the war, sleeping with it under his head, guarding it with constant vigilance, till his little son, from our school, taught him to read its glorious truths.

TEN MILES TO AND FROM SCHOOL.

"I first became acquainted with this man in November, 1865. He lived five miles from our school, to which his little son and daughter came regularly, walking ten miles each day.

PLEASANT WALK AND TALK.

"It was on Saturday, at eight o'clock, when the children came to show me the way to their cabin. It was three miles on the traveled road, and two miles through the pine forests, to the spot where the father had commenced the labors of a freeman. All the way the song of beautiful birds filled the forests with pleasant music; but sweeter were the prattling voices of the two children walking by my side, telling me of leaving their master the year previous, creeping with stealthy tread forty miles through the pine woods, avoiding every human face lest they should be hurried back into slavery; relating with artiess simplicity how they stole away by night, toting every article of household goods they possessed on their heads—beds, pots, dishes, etc., and leading their sightless grand-mother all the way, creeping into our lines by night, where they first breathed the air of freedom.

FARMING.

"The father had come here in advance of his family, agreeing with a white man to clear a dense, almost impenetrable swamp, for the use of the land three years. Here, the Christmas previous, the man had commenced ditching and cutting away the brush, and grubbing the soil, assisted by his faithful wife and his dear, dutiful children. They came hither empty-handed, with the exception of their rags and kettles. Now, three acres of the land had lost their dense masses of brush and undergrowth, a log barn had been built on the border of the swamp, and in it were between ninety and a hundred bushels of shining corn.

THE PRICELESS BIBLE.

"The father drew from a shattered box the priceless Bible he had carried so long and loved so well. 'I knowed,' said he, 'that a heap of good was in it, and good would come out of it to me; and now my little boy is teaching me the heavenly message.'

"The father and mother have plied the busy hands, though poor crops and a grasping landholder have poorly repaid the toil. The blind grandmother has gone to her rest in the world of light.

"This is but one out of hundreds of instances of such wonderful energy and patient purpose to secure a home."

From the same pen we have the following pleasing evidences of the power of the Gospel:

"We try carefully to bring the weapons of truth to bear upon the legions of slavery, theft, intemperance, licentiousness, idleness, filth, and confusion; and who is surprised if their struggles are severe? Long and weary months have we labored with families where vice and ignorance reigned, and just as we were ready to despair, the change came—a change often as marked as that of Saul of Tarsus.

QUIET POWER.

"Our young people since the week of prayer have evinced a very subdued and hopeful spirit. There is a quiet work of grace going on in the colored Baptist church. I say quiet, because it is unlike, in many respects, any thing that ever occurred here before. Many of their own members look on amazed. Conversions frequently occur at home without noise or tumult, and the subjects of these changes go forth with the evident smile of God in their hearts. Fourteen have been added to the church. Oh! it is good to be here.

ANNA AND BRISTO.

"We have some signal instances of the new and better way by which God is leading this people. Just back of our first mission home at Beaufort lived Anna and Bristo. Disorder reigned in their cabin. Occasional brawls, fumes of tobacco and snuff, and oaths were mingled together. The kindness of our teachers won the heart of Anna. Mrs. B. taught her the alphabet, and she began to spell out the precious message, 'I am the resurrection and the life.' To our talks on the sinfulness of sin and the love of Jesus, Bristo would assent with an occasional grunt. But Anna, as time wore on, became absorbed in the precious, precious Bible. By a slow, painful process snuff and tobacco were banished from their home. The cabin lost the dirt from its corners. The table was transformed. The very air of the room in which they lived told us the millennium had come to one home. The rent was paid, hard earnings were laid aside, and at last the house was purchased by the industry of the wife. Anna found time for player and daily Bible reading. She had now a new mission, to visit the sick, carrying little papers of tea and sugar, and speaking pleasant words of comfort to all she met. Nearly four years have past. If you go to Beaufort, call at a neat little cabin in the middle of a beautiful garden, owned by the industrious pair. You will find Anna with the smile of heaven on her face, and not unlikely with a large Testament spread upon her lap.

THE ORPHAN ASYLUM.

"A Thanksgiving dinner, consisting of chicken, Irish potatoes, wheat bread, plum-pudding, and apples, provided by kind friends in Massachusetts, made the day long to be remembered by the children. On Christmas, they had a jolly time over a Christmas-tree, loaded down with presents from the same warm hearts and open hands, closing off with three hearty cheers for the American Missionary Association, and three more for the donors. A colored man furnished his best turkey for the Christmas dinner."

CHARLESTON AVERY INSTITUTE.

•Mr. M. A. Warren, Superintendent of the Institute, gathers up the results of the year in his closing report:

"I arrived in this city on the 26th of January last, and assumed charge of the school at once.

"I desire to acknowledge the faithful, painstaking work of the teachers associated with me. Whatever success the school has attained is due largely to them. Our present number of pupils is about 300, equally divided between the sexes. Nearly half of them were free before the war. By far the greater number are in needy circumstances. About forty are over sixteen years of age; the average age is fourteen and a half. Our school will grade as intermediate, grammar, and high or normal. We lack a primary department, which I much regret. Scholars receiving their early education at the hands of ignorant colored teachers, who know as little of primary schools as they do of Greek, form the worst habits, which it is almost impossible to correct.

"Owing to extra cares, I have not deemed it wise to form a normal class as such. Instruction upon teaching has been incidental. We have, however, twenty advanced pupils, who may form such a class at the beginning of another year.

"The improvement in scholarship and deportment during the year has been decided, and the progress in some instances remarkable. The highest class in No. 10 has nearly completed Davies's Practical Arithmetic for the second time. They began the book at fractions the middle of last November. How much of it was then a review, I do not know. I only know that they have worked like heroes. One boy told me that he had studied till twelve and arisen at five, to get his lessons; and I presume others are as ambitious.

"I have also taught a class of fifteen in algebra, who have made excellent progress. They understand algebra as well as any class of whites I ever saw; are as quick in solving and as apt in explaining problems.

"Two pupils who began the study of Latin with Mr. Cardozo are now teaching in this city. Teachers and pupils are both delighted with Guyot's texts, recently introduced into the school, and the new plan of map-drawing, in which some of them are quite successful. The progress of the school in geography since using these books has equaled that in arithmetic. Grammar is taught in schools Nos. 9 and 10. Success in teaching reading depends on the thoroughness of the primary teacher; and here we have had great obstacles to overcome; yet in some of the rooms I can report astonishing excellence in this branch. Since the receipt of our piano from Massachusetts friends, March 1st, we have had good singing setts friends, March 1st, we have had good singing.

"Three rooms have had practice in drawing. The success is decided but not so much so as I had anticipated. Drawing is to a decided, but not so much so as I had anticipated. Drawing is to a certain extent imitative in its character, and the blacks are fabled for imitative faculty. But I find they differ among themselves with respect to a facile pencil as much as do the whites.

"The school meets in the chapel for prayers every morning, except Friday, when the teachers conduct devotional exercises in their own rooms, that they may have opportunity to illustrate and impress moral truth. The result has been satisfactory. Some desultory instruction in history and physiology has been given. Composition-writing has been taught in one room. I have a plan for a more extensive and thorough course for another year. Indeed, I am looking to the formation of a three years' course of study, and a diploma at its completion.

"I love promptness in a school; but I want it born of hunger for knowledge and ambition to get higher, and not a military precision forced by fear. If our school has not the showy appearance of some, yet the enthusiasm and progress of our pupils compensate for the lack of that drilled exactness which would be so beautiful were it not so costly. I name my plan of government the democratic. Its corner-stones are vigilance and free agency. Give the pupil freedom to do as he pleases, and hold him to a strict account for what he pleases. I do not forget that these people are to cast ballots. After trying my plan, I find the pupils no more untruthful than whites. In this, as in other things, I am daily learning to see more differences between individuals, and less between races. This plan of government yields the happiest results. The great evil of tardiness has been reduced to a minimum.

"I have longed to minister to this shepherdless little flock—to be able to do a pastor's work among them. Perhaps at a distance it might seem that the two offices might be united, and so they might if one could be content with indifferent success in either. The best welfare of both demands the best energies of the two best men you can find."

PLYMOUTH CHURCH.

"Unexpected discouragements have hindered the growth of the church. Rev. G. Pease, the missionary, was called home by the fatal illness of his wife in the early spring, and the church was left to get on without a pastor, with the help the teachers could give, and the preaching of one of their own number.

"With the return of the teachers this autumn, the people have taken new courage, and, in the hope of receiving a faithful pastor, have pledged themselves to raise out of their poverty fifty dollars per month toward his support. They are also making weekly contributions to a fund for the purchase of land for a church edifice."

Georgia continues to call for a larger number of our teachers than any other State. The results of their labors may be seen in part by the extracts which follow:

ANDERSONVILLE.

This name, so deeply engraven on the sad hearts of loyal men, invites attention to whatever is done to change its character and our horrible associations with it.

* Deceased.

EMANCIPATION DAY.

"We doubt if 'New Year's' has had a more fitting celebration in America than that with which the colored people and our teachers observed 'Emancipation Day' at Andersonville. The chapel services of Scripture-reading, prayers, Emancipation Proclamation, address, and Whittier's 'Song of Freedom,'

O praise and tanks, The Lord he come;

the long, orderly procession, marching with hymns to the country, and bringing wreaths of magnolia, holly, and cedar, with which they crowned the cruciform tablets in the principal avenues of this city of the nation's dead; the cheers, and song and chorns,

'See the Flag, the dear old Flag.'

as they stood under the floating banner; and the quick dispersion after prayer and the benediction, make a pleasant picture, which we would gladly transcribe for our readers, especially for those who mourn, each for some one of the 13,716 brave men sleeping in those martyr graves."

CLOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

The same teacher writes later:

"Yesterday, school closed in Andersonville, with pleasant examination exercises from eight till half-past eleven o'clock A.M., and in the afternoon the young men's debating society discussed the question whether 'the Legislature of Georgia had a right to expel its colored members.'

"Thus, briefly told, ends our work in Andersonville for 1868-69. What has been accomplished during that time is not easily told. We see an advancement in the studies and character of the people which encourages us to feel our labor has not been in vain. We know it has not if it has been pursued in the spirit of our Master. There has been some religious interest and a few conversions—not what we wished or hoped. One member has been added to the church on profession, and several are hoping to unite soon. We have not been urgent for any large addition to the church from the older portion of the community—we may have erred in that—but have felt the necessity of preparing for intelligent conversion and consistent Christian character by instructing rather than exhorting. The standard of piety in the Congregational church is high, and we desire to have it remain so."

A NOBLE EFFORT.

"The people of Andersonville have done nobly in supporting the school. They formed an Educational Association, to regulate the school-fees and see that the teachers were provided with means to live upon. They agreed to raise $30 a month for the teachers' board, and have done so. They have given in all—in money, $210.59, and in presents of provisions not accounted for, $30. Besides this, they have raised $16 to assist in defraying our traveling expenses."

ALBANY.

A teacher gives these interesting items:

SCHOOLS-HOW TO WARM A HOUSE.

"ALBANY, January 9, 1869.

"Our schools are in a flourishing condition, and the people profess much interest

"The two schools grew so large that we were obliged to open a third. We have been waiting some time for another church to be finished, but have at last gone into it as it is. It is only a frame with the clapboards nailed on, having ten great windows with only poor, loose shutters. In the morning I have the east shutters open, and in the afternoon the west ones; in this way the sun keeps us comfortably warm.

"The seats are high, box-like settees, among which I almost lose the little dark faces, while the steps of the large pulpit serve as the teacher's platform.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL-SOUTHERN TARDINESS.

"In this same church I recently organized a new Sunday-school. The first Sabbath about thirty gathered together, who received me with radiant faces and hearty welcomes. The second Sabbath was very cold for this latitude, and of course few thought of going out. At the appointed hour I found only the sexton and one little girl : but we sat in the sun, on the church steps, till enough had gathered to make a school.

A SERMON.

"A few Sabbaths since, all the Sunday-schools gathered in one church to hear a children's sermon from one of the colored preachers. The children occupied the centre of the church, and every other part of the house was packed.

"Never will that scene be erased from my memory. The children sang with enthusiasm the songs they had learned at school, while the faces of the proud and gratified parents glowed with unutterable delight.

A DEVOUT CHRISTIAN.

"Still another is in my Sunday-school class, and near fifty years of age. She is a devout Christian; her home presents an appearance of neatness and comfort surpassing that of many I have entered, and it is really refreshing to go there. She can read, but very imperfectly, and spells out her Bible lessons with great diligence. I have been to see her, and read to her the story of Elijah in connection with the lessons on the transfiguration, in which she was much interested. She has seemed troubled that she could not read the Bible any better, and grasps at all my proffered help with an cagerness that is delightful to behold. 'There is one passage,' said she, 'that made de tears come to my eyes when I read it, and I shut the book and did not want then to read any more.'

"It was, 'Suffer little children to come unto me,' etc.
"Said she, 'I have buried three little children, and I know what it means. I know they are in heaven."

MINISTER ORDAINED FOR MACON.

Mr. E. E. Rogers, of the senior class in the Yale Theological Seminary, was ordained an evangelist on the 12th of May, by a council called by the Congregational church at Orange, Ct., and entered at once upon his labor in the "Norwich Chapel" at Macon, and such other missionary work as the region round about may furnish.

Mr. John A. Rockwell, under whose wise, patient, and systematic labors the mission work at Macon has been prosecuted so pleasantly and successfully for the past three years, has been so prostrated by severe toil as to be obliged to resign his field and seek rest abroad. The church at Macon has had a slow but steady growth through the year, and now numbers thirty-four.

BEACH INSTITUTE, AT SAVANNAH, has maintained its graded schools during the year. Rev. C. W. Sharp, the Superintendent, and Rev. Robert Carter have labored with marked success in the organization of a church of twenty members, which has grown to the number of sixty.

BAINBRIDGE.

FAITH AMID DISCOURAGEMENT.

A teacher in Georgia reports the following sketch of the losses. discouragements, and peculiar experience of a Freedman, whose honest industry and sturdy faith are worthy of admiration:

CROPPING WITHOUT PROFIT.

"A Freedman has just left the office—a man fifty years old, stout, broad-shouldered, heavy, and muscular, worth, in his prime, on the block, about $2000. Since freedom came out, he has been cropping with white men without profit. He has worked hard, lived upon bread and bacon, been prudent, and now has not a dollar in his pocket. This year he has been farming, and raised enough corn and potatoes to last him through the coming season, and two bags of cotton, worth $250, to sell. His employer shipped it to Savannah for him, and in a few days died. The Freedman had no receipt, the heirs 'knew nothing about it,' and he stands a fair chance of losing all.

"'Well, what do you want to day?'

"'I want to see if there's gwine to be a school in our precinct. I'se got three little ones dat I wan ter hev a gwine to school. I never specs to learn nothin' "'What do you do yourself?'
"'I crops it.'

"Tops io.
"Do you make a good living?"
"No, boss; I makes a sorry livin'. But I never frets. I knows the good Lord is over all, and I hev always lived, and I believe I shall now. I got no money, but I has corn and hogs. If white man takes them from me, I shall get more; and one thing is sartin, nobody gets a livin' by frettin'.'

"'Have you laid up no money for a rainy day?'

"' Haint hed the chance, boss.

"'What if you are taken sick? Do you think the Bureau will take care of you?' "'Spec not. I truss de Lord for dat.'

CHRISTMAS IN BAINBRIDGE.

"Christmas has been a cold day for us. Shall I tell you how we spent it? "General Lewis, Assistant Commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau, has, within a few days, sent us forty-eight suits of clothing, all for men. There are woolen pants, bound with elastic or stretchy stuff, that we have made answer for men, women, boys and girls of twelve or fourteen years, and soldiers' pants, men's size, not elastic, but capable of being taken in and turned up; hats fresh from 'Paris,' but not very French-looking; shoes, stockings, and warm woolen shirts."

BORROWING NOT SORROWING.

One of the teachers said to a would-be recipient:

- "'Why, uncle, you do not want new shoes; those are very good you have on."
- "'Borry'd, missus, borry'd, as shuah's yer live.'
 "'O uncle!'

"''S tha truth! I heerd that you had governor's close to give away, so I borry'd dese yere to keep my feet warm, poor me!'

"He received a new pair, No. 10.
"'Well, your hat is good?'

"'Missus, dis is not my hat-I borry'd dis too."

"A hat is tried on, which is too small, owing to a great quantity of hair.

"'When did you comb your hair?'
"'Long time ago. Can't get no comb.'
"'Why don't you cut it off? It is all matted together.'

"'No scissers. Dey hasn't any out where I live, nor on all de plantation.'
"This man is bowed double. He may be seventy years old. His eye-sight is going, his face is furrowed with care and suffering. He is thankful for all he receives—'proud,' as he calls it—and he goes off with more sunshine in his heart than has warmed it for many a day. "Oh! the blessedness of giving. Would there were more Christians who could thus testify."

MACON.

Miss Barnes, the missionary visitor, writes of CHRISTMAS EVE.

"You will allow me to tell you what a pleasant time we had Christmas eve.
"We had the chapel very tastefully decorated with evergreens, in wreaths, festoons, crosses, etc.; the flag of our country draped back of the stand, our Sunday-school banner above, the Christmas-tree on one side, and the song-roll and organ with pretty decorations on the other. It was the coldest night of the season, but the chapel was well filled, many from other schools being present.

"The exercises of singing and recitations by various members of our own Sunday-school occupied the first hour or more; then followed the distribution of presents.

"Our tree was not filled with expensive presents. Still it looked beautiful, and held a gift for every member of our school, old and young. Biblee, Testaments, and other books, or various articles of personal use or adornment, were given by our teachers to the Bible-classes, while toys, picture-books and cards made the eyes of the little folks to sparkle with delight—each one receiving an illuminated scripture card, if nothing more—so that their name was 'called out,' which by them was considered quite an honor. After the tree was dismantled of its treasures, apples and cornucopias of candies and nuts were distributed through the assembly.

SCENES OF SORROW.

"You have no idea what scenes of degradation we witness, nor how crushing the life of a missionary must be. We write you oftentimes but the brighter side of the picture, and we are glad to give you that; for when we have found it, it is very bright indeed to us, and to you—brighter to us though, because seen in contrast with so much that is dark and fearful that we are often compelled to cry out, 'Who is sufficient for these things?'

"Again I went out, and found a poor woman—the mother of twelve children, living in a house neat and comfortable but poor—serving God in the society of her household. The father here was also a carpenter, honest but poor. She said, 'I often do not know where the next meal is coming from, and I have no other way to do but to trust in the Lord. I always trusts in him, and he does provide.' She had been very sick, but was still trustful and happy, uttering no complaints, though I well know what a lack of comforts her home presented."

TEACHER WELCOMED.

"My advent here was hailed with joy. When I met the trustees, one said 'It looks encouraging to see people from the North coming to educate us. There are a great many men who feel the need of schooling, and will attend if you have a night-school.' While schools have been opened and carried on in other places, this has never had a white teacher. The school building erected by the Bureau is nearly filled with pupils, and I am told 'heaps and heaps' are coming after Christmas.

A WORTHY JUDGE.

"Upon my arrival, an earnest effort was made by Judge Greenwell, formerly Bureau officer, to have the colored people meet en masse to devise some means by which this school should be aided by them.

* Deceased

"The judge had repeatedly tried to secure a teacher for them, gave a personal care to the building of the house, and now, unasked, has procured a nice stove for the school—laboring in every way to benefit the people."

CLOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

OVERCOMING DISCOURAGEMENTS.

"It is just two weeks since I thought it possible for me to give an exhibition at the close of my school, my own health being feeble; but in that time I have continued the regular recitations, taught most of the children their pieces to sing or recite; becoming discouraged sometimes, as this or that one found his part too hard, and although some of the choice pieces had to be given up, we succeeded so well, that I was able to announce an exhibition of the Howard School, to be held on the evening of the 18th, in the school buildings."

DECORATIONS.

"In the morning the children entered enthusiastically into the work of decorating the room, and seats from the church, lights, wreaths, festoons, crosses, trailing vines, and a carpet lent us for the platform, soon transformed our plain little room into a really beautiful place."

"THE EXERCISES were opened with prayer, followed by the repeating of the 146th Psalm in concert by the whole school. Then they sang 'Happy Greeting,' and Miss Taylor, a young woman of our school, addressed the audience with an original welcome, afterward spoken of as being 'very good and appropriate' by one who has taught several years in the public school for the county, held at Monticello. Several songs, 'The Echo,' 'Trundle-bed Song,' 'Farmer's Boy,' and 'Ba Be Bi took well. An original composition read by the author 'evinced pluck.' Others were highly spoken of."

CONGRATULATIONS.

9 About fifteen white people were present, who unanimously expressed themselves 'surprised and highly pleased at the efforts of the children.' They 'did not think the nigger could do so well.' Judge Greenwell came up at the close with congratulations, saying 'he was proud to see our school so flourishing.' The county clerk was kind enough to announce the programme, the sheriff volunteered to attend the door, and the State Board of Public Instruction was represented by one of its members; the 140 children behaved admirably, and I came home with a light heart, thanking the Lord that his promise is sure, 'They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.'

SAN AUGUSTINE.

Of the influence of Romanism a teacher writes:

"Its power is as absolute over the hearts and actions of the people of San Augustine—both white and colored—as it is or ever has been under the papal rule.

"It requires a great amount of courage and strength of purpose for the colored people, timid and yielding as they are, to break away from Romish influences in school and church. During the first few days of the term, some children from people, timid and yielding as they are, to break away from Romish influences in school and church. During the first few days of the term, some children from their school came into ours; but as soon as the fact became known to the Sisters, they were taken from us, severely beaten, and warned with dreadful threatenings not to come near our school again. We are told that the Catholics have a larger colored school than our own, and the scholars appear to be from the better class of colored people here. As yet we have made but few calls upon these families, hardly knowing how far our duty lay in that direction, and having been very coolly received by the most of them, except when we called on account of sickness. Then we were thanked for coming. Although I confess to an unpleasant shrinking from coming in contact with them, still I mean, as opportunities offer, to call and converse with them on the subject of religion.

"Already there are some Catholics in our night and day schools, and we hope, by making our schools as attractive and interesting as possible, to win others."

MIDDLE-WEST DEPARTMENT

AND

WESTERN FREEDMAN'S AID COMMISSION.

OFFICE, 176 ELM STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Secretary and Treasurer.

Rev. E. M. CRAVATH.

General Agent.

LEVI COFFIN.

Advisory Board.

Hon. WILLIAM PENN NIXON, Rev. GEORGE M. MAXWELL, Rev. HENRY D. MOORE, EDWARD HARWOOD, Esq., JAMES W. SIBLEY, Esq.

The Middle-West Department of the American Missionary Association was created in October, 1865, and became cooperative with the "Western Freedman's Aid Commission" in October, 1866.

At the time the Department was organized, the Association had, in the States embraced in it, but four mission stations. It may, therefore, be said that the work of the A. M. A., in these States, began with the establishment of peace in 1865.

The four years that have since passed constitute the period of foundation-laying, and this Annual Report presents the results that have been secured during that period.

The value of real estate, now held in fee simple by the Association, or by corporations it has helped to create, for the use of its mission work in this department, is over $300,000.

This permanent capital, with the exception of some land in Berea, Ky., has all been secured within the past four years.

The number of schools and missions has increased from four to sixty, the number of persons under commission from eight to one hundred and sixty-nine, and the number of churches from one to seven.

The income of the department, from all sources, for the present fiscal year, has been $120,457.71. Of this sum $3618.57 were received for W. F. A. C. from England.

The following details will better present the work of the Association in this Department:

I. CHURCHES.

 The Church of Christ, Berea, Ky. Rev. John G. Fee, Pastor.

This church was organized in 1847, with nine members, on a dis tinctively anti-slavery basis. At the outbreak of the rebellion the school and church at Berea were broken up, and those connected with them were exiled from the State.

The church was reorganized in 1865, and the present membership is 124, of whom 103 united on profession of their faith. The number of pupils in the Sabbath-school is 160. The church helps to maintain in the region of Berea six mission Sabbath-schools. Five preaching-stations are supplied regularly by members of this church, and many places throughout the country are supplied occasionally. The amount of money raised during the year is $140; the number of conversions, 16.

Rev. George Candee, who labored several years before the war under the commission of the Association, in the mountain region east of Berea, has again been appointed to this field of labor. We hope to organize about Berea a group of churches, in sympathy with the earnest yet liberal spirit that prevails in the church and college of that place.

The Church of Christ, Camp Nelson, Ky. Rev. Gabriel Burdett, Pastor.

This church was organized September 25th, 1864, with 15 members. The present membership is 185—18 having been added during the year on profession of faith; the average congregation is 200. The Sabbath-school numbers 75 members. The number of hopeful conversions the past year was 25. The money raised for all purposes was $150.

The people are mostly poor, and quite a number have purchased homesteads, which they are trying to pay for, and so can, of course, do but little for the support of the church and school. There seems to be an earnest, working spirit among the members, and the pastor reports the church in a very healthy spiritual state.

3. The Union Church, Nashville, Tenn. Rev. Henry S. Bennett, Pastor.

This church was organized March 22d, 1863, with 24 members. The present membership is 38, of whom 35 united on profession of their faith.

The church worships in the chapel of the Fisk University, and exerts a marked religious influence over the pupils of that institution. The number of hopeful conversions in the church and school during the year was 30. The congregations are increasing, and the church promises to grow more rapidly in numbers and usefulness.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

37

4. The Second Congregational Union Church, Memphis, Tenn.

Rev. W. W. Mallory, Pastor.

This church was organized February 2d, 1868, with 21 members. The present membership is 57, of whom 36 united on profession of their faith. The services of the church are held in Lincoln Chapel, and a flourishing Sabbath-school of 400 members is connected with it. The amount raised during the year was $125.

5. The Union Congregational Church, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Rev. E. O. Tade, Pastor.

It was organized June 9th, 1867, with 14 members. The present membership is 37, of whom 27 are under twenty-five years of age. The number of pupils in the Sabbath-school is 150. There are also five mission schools connected with the church. The amount raised during the year for the various purposes of the church and benevolence was $400. The number of hopeful conversions was 10.

Brother Tade writes:

"The church begins to work. The sisters go out, two by two, read to the sick and pray with them, and gather in the children and the people to church. Our lot is paid for, is centrally located, 100 by 200 feet, and worth to-day $100 more than we paid for it. It is proposed by the brethren to dig out a basement. I wish you would send us a plan for a nice, cheap chapel, with basement, say 40 by 60 or 70 feet. We think we can build of brick nearly as cheap as of wood."

6. The Union Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. C. W. Francis, Pastor.

This church was organized May 26th, 1867, with 10 members. Its present number is 63, of whom 40 are under 25 years of age, and 44 have united on profession of their faith.

Sabbath services are held in the chapel of the Storrs School house. The Sabbath-school numbers 320, and is highly prosperous. A mission school is also sustained by the church. The church has contributed $310 during the year, of which $53.65 was for the American Board of Foreign Missions.

The first installation of a pastor in connection with a church in the South, under the care of the Association, occurred at Atlanta in March last. Rev. C. W. Francis, who had been laboring for two years with the church at "Storrs Chapel," was installed pastor after the usual manner in Congregational churches. The following account of the installation, and of the ordination of E. B. Bingham, is taken from The Missionary of June:

A CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL INSTALLS A PASTOR OVER A FREEDMEN'S CHURCH, AND ORDAINS AN EVANGELIST.—YALE COLLEGE IN GEORGIA.

ATLANTA.

"The council, which was small, owing chiefly to the great distances which separated the 'neighboring churches,' assembled in this city, March 29th, and organized by electing Rev. E. O. Tade, of Chattanooga, Moderator, and Rev. E. M. Cravath, of Cincinnati, District Secretary of the A. M. A., Scribe. From the documents submitted to the council, it appeared that the call to the pastor was unanimous, and the church united and hopeful. The number of members had increased from eleven to fifty-eight during fourteen months, and there had been additions at each monthly communion season during that period, save one. The people had raised, out of their deep poverty, $265 within a year, for religious purposes, besides nearly an equal amount for the support of schools. Of this sum nearly $200 were given to the A. M. A., and $50.50 were sent to the American Board, being the only donation the Board received from the State."

A DOUBLE EXAMINATION.

"The council had also been requested to advise in regard to ordaining Mr. E. B. Bingham to the work of an evangelist. Mr. Bingham was a college classmate of Mr. Francis, and a graduate of the last class from Yale Theological Seminary, and is now acting as a superintendent of schools in Augusta. Ga.

"The examination was satisfactory, and the council voted unanimously to proceed to the public services of ordination and installation the same evening."

THE PUBLIC EXERCISES.

"The proceedings of the council had been closely watched by a large audience, to whom they were an entire novelty, and at the evening service the house was filled. The introductory services were conducted by Rev. E. A. Ware, of Atlanta, a classmate of the candidates at Yale. The sermon was preached by Rev. M. E. Strieby, of New-York, one of the secretaries of the A. M. A. It was founded upon Psalm 44:1, and was an exposition of the principles and history of Puritanism, appropriate, as the speaker remarked, to an occasion when two sons of the Puritans were, under these peculiar circumstances, to be set apart to the work of the ministry. The charge to the pastor and the church was given by Rev. Mr. Cravath; the installing prayer and right hand of fellowship to the pastor by Rev. Mr. Tade; the ordaining prayer by Rev. Mr. Strieby; the right hand of fellowship to the evangelist [one of the happiest and most touching exercises of the occasion—Ed. Am. Miss.] and concluding services by Rev. Mr. Francis; benediction by Rev. Mr. Bingham. All the exercises were appropriate, pointed, and well appreciated by the large audience who witnessed them."

7. The Union Church, Talladega, Ala.

Rev. H. E. Brown, Pastor.

It was organized May 17th, 1868, with 18 members. The present number is 38, of whom 15 united on profession of their faith. The Sabbath-school numbers 200, and is very efficient. Sabbath evening the church holds twelve "Bible prayer-meetings" in different neighborhoods, in addition to which the church and school sustain, during a portion of the year, from fifteen to twenty mission Sabbath-schools in the surrounding country. The number of conversions reported for the year is twenty.

About $100 has been raised by the church. The pastor writes:

"The subject of giving tithes is just now agitating the church quite deeply. Some are already pledged to it, while others are gradually coming up to the point. At the formation of the church quite a large portion of the male members were addicted to the use of tobacco, and a few to whisky also. Now, I am not aware that either is used by any one in the church, except medicinally. Several of our young men are preparing themselves for the ministry."

The way has been prepared at several other important points for the organization of churches. Our first endeavor has been, however, to promote Christian education in the South, and thus churches of whatever denomination have been benefited. New churches have been organized only as the necessity clearly arose in the prosecution of this catholic work. Our churches at present, therefore, are neither numerous nor large. They are composed mostly, however, of young people, from the development of whose religious characters we expect much fruit in the future. Our schools have been preparing the material, so that we may anticipate that the growth of these churches, in numbers and power, will hereafter be much more vigorous and rapid.

II. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES.

1. Berea College, Madison Co., Ky.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.—Rev. John G. Fee, President; Rev. E. H. Fairchild, Vice-President; Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, John G. Hanson, Morgan Burdett, Elisha Harrison, Rev. Gabriel Burdett, W. W. Wheeler, Wm. N. Embree, A. J. Henderson, Dr. S. J. Marshall, Arthur J. Hanson, Rev. E. M. Cravath, Rev. George Candee; Rev. A. B. Pratt, Secretary and Treasurer.

Instructors.—Rev. E. H. Fairchild, President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy; Rev. John G. Fee, Lecturer on Biblical Antiquities and Evidences of Christianity; Rev. John A. R. Rogers, Professor of Greek; Henry F. Clark, Professor of Latin; Dr. S. J. Marshall, Teacher of Music; Mrs. Woodrow, Principal, Ladies' Department; Miss Eliza M. Snedaker, Mrs. Louisa Marshall, Miss Harriet A. Pratt; Matron, Charlotte Blake.

SUMMARY OF STUDENTS.—College Students, 5; College Preparatory, 18; Academic Department, 60; Intermediate, 97; Primary, 106. Total, 286.

Berea has the honor of being the first of the institutions founded by the Association in the South, to enter a regular college class. We give the names of the members of the class, all of whom have their homes in Kentucky:

FRESHMEN.—Burritt H. Fee, Berea; Wayne Cole, Barbourville; George Pigg, Blue Lick; John Roberts, Mt. Vernon; Belle Pratt, Berea.

Rev. E. H. Fairchild, for many years Principal of the Preparatory Department of Oberlin College, has accepted the Presidency of Berea College. He moved to Kentucky with his family in April last. No better man could have been found for this responsible place. Henry F. Clark, A.B., who taught during the year with great success, was, at the annual meeting of Board of Trustees, elected Professor of Latin. The Professorship of Mathematics is as yet unfilled.

A large and beautiful dormitory for boys has been erected during the year at a cost of $17,000; and a similar building for girls is very much needed.

The results of the past year confirm the faith of its friends in the fact that Berea College is a vine of God's own planting.

2. Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

This institution was chartered in August, 1867. The average number in attendance for the first two years has been 384. The following statistics are taken from the second annual catalogue:

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.—Rev. George Whipple, New-York; Rev. E. M. Cravath, Cincinnati; Rev. H. S. Bennett, Nashville; Professor J. H. Barnum, Memphis; Judge John Lawrence, Nashville; Enos Hopkins, Esq., Nashville; Hon. John Eaton, Jr., Nashville; John J. Cary, Esq., Nashville; Professor John Ogden, Nashville.

OFFICERS OF THE BOARD.—Professor John Ogden, President; Rev. H. S. Bennett, Secretary; John J. Cary, Esq., Treasurer.

BOARD OF INSTRUCTION.—John Ogden, A.M., Principal, Professor of Science of Education and Art of Teaching; Misses H. M. Swallow and C. M. Semple, Associate Principals in High School; Misse Ruth A. Kemp, Preceptress and Assistant in High School; Misses Mary E. Day and Georgiana Smith, Principals in Department. A," Model School; Miss Leonora E. Avey, Principal in Department B," Model School; Mrs. L. S. Bennett, Principal of Night-School; Rev. H. S. Bennett, Teacher in Latin; Mr. George L. White, Teacher of Vocal Music and Penmanship.

During the year the extensive government buildings have been transferred to the Association, and permanent foundations placed under them, with such other repairs and improvements as will render them durable and convenient. There has also been erected a new dormitory building, ample for the accommodation of fifty young ladies, which is now supplied with new and substantial furniture. A beautiful Gothic chapel, of brick, forty by eighty feet, has been built, having a vestibule and gallery in front, and staging, sixteen by forty feet, in the rear, where a school of seventy pupils may be seated for examination. The audience-room of this chapel is used daily for the opening services of the school, also for Sabbath-school, preaching, and other religious exercises, both on the Sabbath and during the week. A quotation from an article furnished by Professor Ogden for the October number of The American Missionary will give some idea of the religious culture which is fostered at this institution:

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

RELIGIOUS CULTURE.

"Another peculiar object of this school is to illustrate, in practice, what most educators are willing to admit in theory, that conversion is the proper door into the kingdom of science, as well as into the kingdom of heaven; that those who climb up some other way add to their weakness or wickedness more frequently than they do to their power or goodness; that religion can be taught without teaching sectarianism; that science and religion were made to go hand in hand; that the two joined are the heaven-appointed means of lifting humanity to its proper standing and true dignity.

"Whether we shall be able to realize our expectations in this reform in education remains to be seen. We are, however, making the attempt now in the beginnings of the educational career of a very susceptible race of people. We do not believe any thing will be gained, but that much must necessarily be lost by deferring this effort.

"To show how far we have been able to carry out these principles, and to realize their significance in a very short time, we beg leave to submit the following statements, written by an attentive, interested, and honest observer, for another purpose, it is true, but which have a pertinence here:

" NASHVILLE, June 24.

"The boarding department of the school has been opened to young colored people for two years. During the first year about thirty, and during the year just closed fifty pupils availed themselves of its privileges, and of the influences of the

"The fifty were gathered from the ordinary homes of colored people as they are in Tennessee. They represent the average of that class of the young people of the State who are interested in securing for themselves the blessings of an education; they had had no previous culture. Such was the material upon which the work of polishing was to be performed.

"The influences of the 'Home' soon told surprisingly upon their susceptible natures. Indeed, many visitors have expressed their surprise at the deference they exhibited toward their teachers, and the kindness and courtesy they always manifested toward each other; this good behavior was not confined to two or three, but was characteristic of all. In their intercourse with each other every thing was conducted with the utmost propriety. In no instance, as far as can be ascertained, has any case of gross impropriety been committed. It may be stated, without fear of contradiction, that it would be difficult to find any school in the country which has excelled this school in a careful observance of all the proprie-

"The religious influence of the school upon the pupils must be felt in order to be appreciated. Out of the fifty who have been under the influence of the Home, nearly all have become Christians since they entered the school.

"It may be stated that, during the year, there has been almost constantly a deep religious interest. Several times during the term of school the interest has been such that from six to ten of the young people have been brought to Christ at once. We hope to send out each year from thirty to seventy teachers who shall do much toward lifting the darkness that now prevails over the South.

"The young people are very poor; they are without means; nor would it be advisable for them to engage in the labor necessary to secure the means for prosecuting their studies. Yet they are willing to work and to suffer self-denial. Give them cultivated minds, skilled hands, and right purposes, and we may hope the best things of them.

" Pastor of the Union Church, Fisk University."

The annual appropriation of $800 by the trustees of the "Peabody Fund" was continued this year, and greatly aided in sustaining the Normal Department. The fall term opened October 13th, with increased attendance and most cheering prospects.

3. Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga.

The charter of this institution was secured October 17th, 1867.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES .- E. A. Ware, President; William Jennings, Secretary; James M. Willis, Treasurer; George Whipple, E. P. Smith, E. M. Cravath, James Atkins, J. B. Fuller, Charles H. Morgan, Joseph Wood, John A. Rockwell, C. W. Francis.

The property of Atlanta University consists of sixty acres of land, located within the corporate limits of the city, (embracing most of what is known as "Diamond Hill,") and a fine brick building just completed, at a cost of about $25,000. There is needed at once a second building similar to the one just erected.

The Association has sent more teachers to Georgia than to any other State. There are thus under training, in our schools, thousands of children, and many of them will soon be seeking the advantages which this institution was founded to furnish. It will, therefore, be necessary in order to keep pace with the rapid growth of our work in the State, greatly to enlarge the facilities of this University for accommodating students seeking a normal and collegiate education.

WASHBURN ORPHAN ASYLUM.

In 1866, through the liberality of Hon. I. Washburn, a six-acre block of land was purchased, for the purpose of founding an Orphan Asylum and Normal School for the State of Georgia.

The same year, a frame building was erected, and a large number of orphan children were gathered in from the contraband camps and Freedmen's hospitals. These camps and hospitals were being closed by the government, and, unless the Association had taken care of these scores of wretched and diseased children, it would seem that they must have perished. A great and humane work has been done for them by this asylum. With the restoration of social order came a demand for these children, so that homes were readily provided for them, after they were restored to health and soundness.

For the past year, there have been no pressing applications for admission, and those already received having been provided with homes, the work of the asylum seems accomplished. The original design in purchasing the land was to found a Normal School as well as an Orphan Asylum, and the present building was constructed so as to be suited for a dormitory, should the necessity of an asylum cease to exist, as it then seemed probable that it would, in a few years.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

The surprising development of the work of the Association in the State, however, soon made it evident that the Normal School should be simply a department of a university, to be founded at Atlanta. The founding of this university created the necessity for more land, and fifty acres were purchased on "Diamond Hill," to which ten acres have since been added.

It is now recommended that the asylum property be sold, and the money applied toward erecting the second permanent university building, to be called "Washburn Hall." Thus will the name be perpetuated, and the benefaction applied to the real purpose for which it was made.

In April last, the Normal department of the university was organized, and the first session was held in the asylum building.

The completion of the large building on "Diamond Hill" provided for the opening of the second session, with enlarged facilities, on the university grounds. The present building will not, however, meet the demands for even the first term of the new year. The asylum property is worth $10,000, and the new building will cost $25,000.

We hope some steward of the Lord, seeking a permanent investment for the Master, will, on reading this, forward to the Association $15,000, to secure the immediate erection of this new hall, and thus secure the best results from the capital already invested by the A. M. A. in Georgia.

4. Talladega College, Talladega, Ala.

BOARD OF INSTRUCTORS.-Rev. H. E. Brown, Oberlin, Ohio; Mrs. H. E. Brown, Oberlin, Ohio; Miss Phebe Bebee, Tipton, Mich.; Miss Sophia Tyler, Chagrin Falls, Ohio; Miss Josephine Pierce, Tallmadge, Ohio.

The Association has secured for the location of this institution forty acres of land in the village of Talladega, one of the healthiest locations in the State of Alabama.

The large college building, purchased with this land, could not now be erected at a less expense than $30,000. A new dormitory building is in process of erection, which will cost about $20,000. It will bear the name of "Foster Hall," in honor of the generous liberality of Rev. L. Foster, of Blue Island, Ill.

The corner-stone was laid August 7th, 1869, and, unless compelled to suspend work on it, for lack of means to complete it, we expect it will be ready for occupation by January, 1870. The laying of the corner-stone was an occasion of special interest, as will be seen by the following letter from Brother Brown:

"TALLADEGA, August 11, 1869.

"How I wish you could have been here at the 'corner-stone' laying! It was far ahead of any thing I have ever before witnessed.

"We failed to get any speakers from abroad, and so called on home men for their every-day thoughts, in the shape of ten-minute speeches. Our county solicitor, circuit judge state treasurer, and a member of State Educational Board, made the speeches from a platform under that noble oak just in front of the new hall.

"The standing masses of people listened intently, as though a new era had come.

The eclipse, which you know was nearly total here, drew off the closest attention less than five minutes.

"The leading editors, doctors, judges, lawyers, merchants, and mechanics, of both political parties, were present, and seemed to rejoice in the new additions to our town which the building and the school are making.

"One speaker made some reference to past political strifes, which troubled a few persons present, and cast a momentary shadow over some of our hearts; but other than this all went so pleasantly, and foretold such a future, that we teachers have decided a particular that many contents of the c decided unanimously that no pen can tell the joy and glory of the occasion.

"After the speeches and simple ceremonies, came the feast prepared by the colored families of the place. Each family that spread a table had sent out tickets to their former masters, and to other friends, to dine with them on that occasion. Four hundred tickets of invitation were issued to friends.

"The large room of Swayne Hall was filled with tables; then its front gallery, then its large school-room, and still more tables were wanted.

"The tables themselves were only new boards from our saw-mill; but when the clean table-cloths, and turkeys and chickens, pies, cakes, and sauces, with here and there a kid or a pig, the jellies and melons, and peaches and pears—when these all, and much more, came by basketfuls on the heads of those that prepared them, and much more, came by basectors on the nears of those that prepared them, and were spread on the tables, it was indeed a sight worth seeing.

"But when the families gathered their children, big and little, around those tables, and then sent one of their children to the lower school-room to escort up the guests, they seemed to be 'rising as a people;' and when those guests, as they took their places at the tables, proved to be the former masters and leading white citizens of the place, as well as colored friends from a distance, all of whom seemed equally rejoiced at sight of the feast, then fit words of rejoicing were wanting, and there was left only a dim vision of years of reconstruction being crowded into a single day. Yours in the work, H. E. Brown."

The following testimony from an old and highly-respected citizen of Talladega, who served as colonel in the Confederate army, is valuable, as showing the estimation in which Mr. Brown's work is held by Southern men. Referring to the success of our work, he says:

"These results are evidenced in the perceptible improvement of the entire colored "These results are evidenced in the perceptible improvement of the entire colored community. Not only the children, whose tender minds he is to train in the paths of knowledge, but their parents also feel the impress of this training, and are benefited by his influence. For sobriety of habits and propriety of conduct, the people of his charge will compare favorably with any other in the broad expanse of the land. We have a partial evidence of the truth of this assertion in the fact that at our recent election, the 5th instant, over 1200 colored votes were polled at this place, and not a single instance of disorderly conduct or of drunkenness occurred during the day. the day. Does not this fact speak volumes for the colored people, and for those who have their training in charge? But it remained for this day, the 7th of August, to complete the measure of Mr. Brown's triumph, and this day, with the occasion it was designed to celebrate, will long be remembered by me as one of the most pleasant of my life."

A company has been formed in Talladega, in the interests of this institution, by means of which an engine, saw, and planing-mill, grist-mill, etc., have been secured, thus furnishing remunerative labor to the students.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

The Normal pupils, during the past three months, have studied half the day, and supported themselves by cutting saw-logs, etc., the other half.

A charter for Talladega College was received, February 17th, 1869.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.—H. E. Brown, President; B. F. Sawyer,

III. GRADED AND HIGH-Schools.

1. Howard School, Lexington, Ky.

TEACHERS.—Mr. John G. Hamilton, New-York City; Miss Mary L. Clark, Cincinnati, Ohio; Miss L. L. Alvord, Ashtabula, Ohio; Miss Mary D. Williams, Greenfield, Mass.; Miss Sarah Hamilton, Greensburg, Ind.; Miss Eugenia Heller, Delaware, Ohio.

Number of pupils enrolled was 998; number of pupils in Sabbath-school, 170; amount received from Freedmen, $438.44. Five hundred and forty dollars were also received from the Public School Fund, toward the support of our teachers, showing the liberal spirit of those having these funds in charge—this being the only instance where such a spirit has been manifested toward our schools in this State. This school has suffered somewhat for lack of a suitable building. We are happy to state, however, that arrangements have been made for the immediate erection of a fine edifice, which will greatly add to its efficiency and insure its permanency.

2. Ely Normal School, Louisville, Ky.

TEACHERS.—Mr. A. H. Robbins, Elmwood, Ill.; Miss Kate Gilbert, North-Brookfield, Mass.; Mrs. Caroline Tuller, Townsend Station, Ohio; Miss S. A. Stevens, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Miss E. E. Cross, Richville, N. Y.; Miss A. A. Sherman, Marshall, Mich.; Miss Jennie Latson, Grass Lake, Mich.; Mrs. Rebecca Haner, Millford, Mich.

Number of pupils enrolled, 400; amount received from Freedmen, $849.65; value of school property, $20,000. This school occupies the new building erected last year, and has been thoroughly graded. The progress among the pupils was good; a Sabbath-school, of two hundred and fifty members, was organized during the year. Rev. J. McKee, pastor of one of the Presbyterian churches in the city, has delivered a sermon to the children of the school, on Monday of each week, with manifest interest and profit.

3. Ariel Academy, Camp Nelson, Ky.

TEACHERS.—Mr. I. M. Newton, Kinsman, Ohio; Mrs. I. M. Newton, Kinsman, Ohio.

Number of pupils enrolled, 110; amount received from patrons for its support, $266.55. This school is in the midst of a community of colored people, who have bought homesteads from the tract of land formerly occupied as Camp Nelson. The grounds and buildings are ample, and a school of at least one hundred pupils can be permanently maintained.

4. Lincoln School, Memphis, Tenn.

TEACHERS.—Prof. Jos. H. Barnum, Oberlin, Ohio; Mr. G. W. Silsby, Oberlin, Ohio; Mr. Edgar Pierce, Austinburg, Ohio; Mr. John Kincaid, Brockport, N. Y.; Mrs. J. H. Barnum, Oberlin, Ohio; Mrs. G. S. Silsby, Oberlin, Ohio; Mrs. L. W. Treat, Oberlin, Ohio; Mrs. G. A. Moody, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. Mary J. Mead, Hillsdale, Mich.; Miss S. Maynard, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Miss M. A. Eamen, Lodi Plains, Mich.; Miss Amanda Trask, Hudson, Mich.; Miss C. E. Hulsart, Romeo, Mich.; Miss Henrietta Matson, Bloomfield, Ohio; Miss Agnes L. Hill, Jackson, Mich.; Miss C. B. Newton, Kinsman, Ohio; Miss Anna M. Lee, Salem, Ohio; Miss Rebecca J. Lee, Salem, Ohio; Miss Kate Anderson, Monroe, Mich.

Number of pupils enrolled, was 2275; amount received from school, $158.20; amount received from Public Funds, $6686.10; value of school property, $8000.

Schools were maintained during the year, not only in Lincoln Chapel, but in Phœnix School-House, Collins Chapel, and the Orphan Asylum.

The field in Memphis is broad. The schools have for the coming year passed entirely under the support of the city. Our Superintendent, J. H. Barnum, and many of the former teachers, have been retained.

5. Howard School, Chattanooga, Tenn.

TEACHERS.—Rev. E. O. Tade, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mrs. A. L. Tade, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Miss Ella F. Wellman, Adrian, Mich.; Miss Nettie M. Pierce, Austinburg, Ohio; Miss Lizzie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, Ohio; Miss M. J. Sherman, Detroit, Mich.

Number of pupils enrolled was 855; amount received from school $22.66; amount received from Public Funds, $1000; value of school property, $3000.

This school has been eminently successful, and has already supplied several teachers for out-lying districts.

6. Storrs and Ayers Schools, Atlanta, Ga.

Teachers .- Mr. E. A. Ware, Norwich, Ct.; Mrs. C. W. Franois, New-Haven, Ct.; Miss M. M. Fitch, Holliston, Mass.; Miss Eliza Mitchell, Oberlin, Ohio; Mr. C. S. Mattison, Laurens, N. Y.; Miss Helen A. Pavne, Hamilton, N. Y.; Miss Hattie Lewis, Tallmadge, Ohio; Miss Carrie Gordon, Norwich, Ct.; Miss Emma C. Ware, Norwich, Ct.; Miss Emeline A. Hawley, Terre Haute, Ind.; Miss Emma Campbell, Ironton, Ohio: Miss Mary G. Humphreys, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Miss S. J. Twitchell, Plantsville, Ct.; Miss Nellie M. Ayres, Worcester, Mass.; Miss Mary N. Withington, Newbury, Mass.; Miss Anna O. Snowdon, Norwalk, Ct.; Miss L. E. Osgood, Fryeburg, Me.; Mrs. Carrie Damon, Worcester, Mass.

Number of pupils enrolled was 1525; amount raised from school, $1853.93; value of school property, $19,000.

At the close of the school year, the Ayers school-house, being situated near the site selected by the M. E. Church for the "Clark University," was sold to the Freedmen's Aid Society of that church, and the money applied toward the erection of a new building on "Diamond Hill."

7. Swayne School, Montgomery, Ala.

TEACHERS .- Mr. G. Stanley Pope, Strongsville, Ohio; Mrs. G. S. Pope, Strongsville, Ohio; Mrs. A. B. Ackley, Granville, Ohio; Miss Matilda Blackmar, Moscow, Mich.; Miss M. L. Santley, New London, Ohio; Miss M. Louisa Porter, Ripley, Ohio; Miss M. V. Adams, Spencerport, N. Y.; Miss L. D. Burnett, Hamburg, Mich.; Mr. I. N. Smock, Southport, Ind.

Number of pupils enrolled was 750; number of pupils in Sabbathschool, 250; amount received from school, $338.30; amount received from Public Funds, $1097; value of school property, $15,000.

This property is owned by a local board of trustees, and leased to the Association for five years, with the privilege of ten, free of

8. Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala.

TEACHERS.—Rev. H. S. Kelsey, East-Charlemont, Mass.; Mrs. H. S. Kelsev, East-Charlemont, Mass.; Mr. G. L. Putnam, Mobile, Ala.; Miss E. J. Etheridge, Dover, Ill.; Miss A. A. Rockfellow, Whitewater, Wis.; Miss Mary A. Cooley, New-London, Ct.; Miss Susie A. Cooley, New-London, Ct.; Miss Ruth A. Allen, Madison, Wis.; Miss Sarah Mahony, Kenosha, Wis.; Miss Nellie Lincoln, Chicago, Ill.; Miss Emma Harris, Ripon, Wis.; Miss L. E. Thayer, South-Lima, N. Y.; Miss Mary E. F. Smith, New-London, Ct.

Number of pupils enrolled was 750; amount received from school, $126; amount received from Public Funds, $3633; value of school property, $30,000.

A Sabbath-school, of two hundred and fifty pupils, was organized during the year, and was successfully maintained.

The unsettled state of school affairs at Mobile, arising from the contest between the old School Board and the appointees under the new school law, has operated against the general interests of the schools. It is hoped that a settlement has now been reached.

9. Burrell School, Selma, Ala.

TEACHERS .- Mr. Joseph H. Sears, Plymouth, Mass.; Miss C. E. Stowe. New-Haven. Ct.: Miss Jessie Little, Oberlin, Ohio; Miss R. Stevens, Louisville, Ky.

Number of pupils enrolled was 518; amount received from school, $300; amount received from Public Funds, $200.

The house in which this school is held was completed during the year, and dedicated. The following account of the exercises connected with its dedication is taken from one of the Selma papers:

THE DEDICATION.

"From an early hour yesterday morning, streams of our young colored population might be seen wending their way to the Broad Street Hotel, the starting point of the grand procession, which was to take part in the inauguration of the new school-house.

"The appearance of the children, dressed in white with blue sashes, was animating and cheerful.

About eleven o'clock, the procession began to move, and the whole arrived and were seated in front of the new school-house by twelve o'clock.

"The edifice, though not yet completed, is one of the handsomest of which Selma can boast, fronting on Bibb street, between North avenue and Selma street, and will be at once an ornament and a credit to our city.

"The procession of children was probably the largest that has ever been in Selma, and their quiet, decorous bearing reflected great credit on all concerned. "After the procession had arrived at its destination, the exercises were opened with prayer by Mr. Cravath, of Cincinnati.

"Mr. Sears, County Superintendent of Education, then followed in a few remarks, in the course of which he stated, that since his first attempt at teaching in this State the feeling had considerably changed, and those who then opposed it were now to be numbered among the warmest friends and supporters of the education of the negroes. He had now seventy schools in operation in the county, and hoped soon to add to their number.

A carol and chorus was then sung by a number of the pupils, which was well and effectively rendered, evincing a degree of training we were utterly unprepared

"Mr. Cravath, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was then introduced, who said that buildings such as this were not erected by the American Missionary Society for the benefit of any particular class, though but one class now took advantage of it. He predicted that this day would mark a new era in the history of Selma. The education of the negro had been, and now was, the soul-inspiring thought of thousands of people, and this, their triumph, was the result of a great thought of God.

At the conclusion of Mr. Cravath's address a song was sung by a little girl, in a

"At the conclusion of Mr. Cravain's address a song was sung by a line of gain, in a highly creditable manner.

"Judge Saffold was then introduced, and made a most effective speech, in which he dwelt on the advantages to be derived from this and kindred institutions, not only to our own people, but to the nation at large, and tendered thanks to the American Missionary Society for the liberality displayed by them in assisting to establish the building dedicated on this occasion. Judge Saffold was followed by "Hom." What who concretulated the assemblaze on this auspicious occasion.

era nor our people from this edifice.

"A pupil then sung very nicely, 'When the swallows homeward fly,'

"Rev. Mr. Strieby, of New-York, made a speech, in which he urged the necessity and desirability of the colored people securing homes for themselves. He demonstrated the things most essential to promote their welfare and add to their welf-being were industry, economy, education, and religion.

"The proceedings were closed by the pronunciation of the Benediction by Rev.

W. J. Lowry, of the Presbyterian Church.

"The school, we understand, is to be named the Burrell School, in honor of Mr. Burrell, of Ohio, one of the liberal subscribers to the Association.'

A great obstacle to the success of this school has been removed by the erection of this building.

10. Lincoln School, Marion, Alabama.

Teachers .- Mr. T. C. Steward, Windham, Ohio; Mrs. T. C. Steward, Windham, Ohio; Mrs. H. F. Treadwell, Mansfield, Mass.; Mr. James E. Cowan, Crawfordsville, Ind.

Number of pupils enrolled, 275; amount received from school, $329.66; amount received from public fund, $330; value of school property, $5000. The new school building at this point was completed during the year. It is owned by a local board of trustees, and leased to the Association for ten years, free of rent.

The following statement is taken from The American Missionary for August:

"The new school building erected for the benefit of the colored people of Marion and vicinity was dedicated last Sabbath afternoon, April 11th.

"The house just completed is a frame building, about fifty feet square, two stories high, well lighted and arranged. There are four good-sized school-rooms, besides a recitation-room intended for the Normal class, which are mostly furnished with the Sherwood patent combination seat and desk. There is ample room for two hundred and fifty pupils, and more can be accommodated.

"The cost of the building is about $4200—$2800 of which was appropriated by the Bureau, and the remainder contributed by the colored people and the American can Missionary Association, whose teachers are employed in the schools here.

"The exercises consisted of singing by the children, prayer, and addresses.
"The opening prayer was made by Mr. Cowan, of Crawfordsville, Ind.

"Addresses were made by Hon. T. C. Stewart, Rev. E. M. Cravath, Rev. J.

11. Trinity School, Athens, Alabama.

TEACHERS .- Miss M. F. Wells, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Miss M. F. Sturgis, Mosherville, Mich.; Miss A. P. Rockman, Ann Arbor, Mich. Number of pupils enrolled was 221; amount received from school, $37.10; amount from public fund, $311.20. The building occupied by this school, for the past four years, with the ample grounds adjacent, has now been purchased by the Association, thus insuring the permanency of this important enterprise.

IV. COMMON SCHOOLS.

Over three hundred teachers have been furnished from the schools in this department alone to the common schools of the South. Thus, for each teacher commissioned by the Association there have been already trained two teachers from the Freedmen themselves. If these results have been secured in four years, commencing with a race just made free, what great hopes may we reasonably cherish for the future! From the children in our schools what an army of teachers we can soon train to complete the work of universal education in the South.

GENERAL SUMMARY.

Churches, 7; membership, 542; chartered colleges and universities, 4; high and graded schools, 11; teachers trained in the South, 314; common schools, (furnished either directly or indirectly with teachers by this office during the year,) 400. At the four collegiate institutions we are able to furnish rooms and board for 500 students. Berea College had a Freshman class of five members. Classes are also under training, so that we confidently expect to enter a Freshman class at each of the other institutions in 1871.

We gratefully acknowledge the favor shown by the following lines of transportation in granting reduced rates of fare to our teachers in going to and from their fields of labor, namely:

RAILROADS.—"Atlanta and West-Point," "Cin., Ham. and Dayton," "Dayton and Mich.," "Rich. and Chicago," "Cleveland, Col., Cin. and Indianapolis," "Little Miami, Columbus and Xenia," "Louisville and Nashville," "Louisville and Memphis," "Nashville and Chattanooga," "Selma, Rome, and Dalton," "Western and Atlantic." KANSAS,

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. Robert Brown, Miss M. Frances Abbott, Rev. J. H. Payne, Rev. J. E. Weir, Rev. L. H. Platt.

Number of pupils taught, 200.

Our work in Kansas consists mainly in assisting colored churches in the support of pastors. At Leavenworth, Mr. Brown has taught a night-school in addition to his pastoral duties. His mission Sabbath-school was particularly promising; but his own church, mostly white, seeming to require all his time, and a colored church having been organized, with Rev. J. E. Weir (colored) as their pastor, Mr. Brown's connection with the A. M. A. ceased with the month of July.

The new church started with 42 members, and, with their pastor, were cordially received into the Congregational Association of the district.

The following extract is from a recent letter of Mr. Weir:

"LEAVENWORTH, Sept. 20, 1869.

"The attendance on preaching is gradually increasing, and the several prayermeetings are very well sustained. One new member was received into the church vesterday on profession of faith, which is the only increase since our present organization.

Besides my labors in the city, I assisted in the organization of a church on Stranger Creek, twelve miles from the city.

"This new church was organized with 37 members at one preaching place, and there are other preaching points connected with this, from which enough will probably be gathered to increase the number to 75 or 100. The members of the church are more encouraged since the change of organization than ever before, and our church has more popularity with the colored people generally. With the blessing of the Master upon us, we hope to prosper and increase."

LITTLE CHILD IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

Extract from a letter from Mrs. Dora T. Beekman, Kansas City, about the colored Congregational church and Sabbath-school at Westport, Mo.:

"The Sabbath afternoon was a very encouraging one as regards our labor with that colored church. More new scholars and adults came in. They crowded the house—could scarcely have room to stand while singing. I had one class of twenty-seven boys and girls, packed closely in a small room.

"Mr. B. had his room full, as usual. Mr. Payne was there, and assisted him.
Still our little girl, Lillie, ten years old, had nine little girls out on the grass, reading to them, and teaching them about Jesus—a beautiful sight! Though so young, may she not break the crumbs of the Bread of Life, and feed these hungry lambs ?"

Mr. Platt, who has for several years labored at Topeka, with evidences of God's favor, has tendered his resignation, to take effect the last of October. It will be difficult to fill his place in the hearts of that people.

Mr. Payne continues, as hitherto, at Lawrence, and has been preaching occasionally, also, for a small colored Congregational church at Westport, Mo., which is wanting a pastor. Rev. James C. Beekman, of Kansas City, has voluntarily ministered to these people during the past summer.

There is promise that, with a little encouragement, other colored churches may be formed in Kansas; but it is difficult to find suitable Inasmuch as the State common-school law makes no discrimination against color, and the white citizens of Kansas do not hinder its execution, it only remains for our Association to aid in the work of church organization, and in sustaining the feeble churches until they shall become self-supporting. They all now pay about one half of the salary of their pastors.

Number of pupils taught, 560; reading, 425; writing, 250; Sabbath-school, 650.

The present public school system of Missouri provides for the colored children; but the schools are to be separate, and as the blacks do not vote nor hold office, the administration of the law is in the hands of the white citizens. The result of this is, that persons unfriendly to the education of the blacks are in office in most places where schools are needed, and neglect or refuse to take action, either to provide a house or a teacuer.

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT.

The State Superintendent, Hon. T. A. Parker, however, is in full sympathy with the education of the colored children, and renders every possible assistance toward the impartial execution of the law.

The Superintendent for the Freedmen's Bureau, Col. T. A. Seely, and his assistants, have also cooperated in the same direction, and have called upon our Association to supply teachers, to be paid from the State funds.

Mr. J. M. Turner, (colored,) the present Assistant Superintendent of the Bureau, holds at the same time an appointment from the State Superintendent and a commission from the A. M. A., and is very active in searching out places where the negligence of the local school officials has prevented the starting of a school.

We hope in this way to introduce into the State many more Christian teachers than we could if dependent upon our treasury alone.

At Troy, Fulton, and Warrensburg, the Association owns good houses, and will thereby be able to exert a controlling influence in favor of good schools, even though the teachers shall be paid by the State.

At Troy and Fulton, the schools have been under the auspices of the Iowa yearly meeting of Friends, who continue to cooperate cordially with the Association.

At Warrensburg, Rev. and Mrs. M. H. Smith are still prosecuting a successful missionary work. At Westport, we have a small house, and hope to keep up a school during a part of the year from the school funds, though the local officers are bitterly opposed to the education of the blacks. At Palmyra, we have had a flourishing school and Sabbath-school.

The following extract from a recent letter of Miss Tucker gives a glimpse of her work at Palmyra:

"The school is moving on as well as can be expected. We have over one hundred scholars; many of them are small, just beginning to read. They are learning nicely. We hope to see them reading before the weather gets cold, as they will have to stay at home then, and their places be filled by large boys and girls that are now at work.

"The influence that is opposed to the colored school is still great. We have to contend against it all the time; but the children are improving, and the people that are so much opposed to their being educated can not avoid seeing the improvement, not only in their books, but in their behavior on the streets. Last week, as a class were out on the playground, with their Geographies in their hands, Mr. D—, one of our prominent lawyers, met them. He began to question them, and was surprised to find that they could tell him the capitals of all the United States, the lakes, rivers, etc. The class were very proud to be able to answer so promptly, and I must say that the teachers felt proud too."

At Jefferson City, the school-work has passed out of the hands of the A. M. A., and is now carried on jointly by the Trustees of Lincoln Institute and the Public School Board. At Ironton, Mr. and Mrs. J. Markham have continued their faithful labors in a day and Sabbath-school throughout the year; but hereafter Mr. Markham, having been appointed County Superintendent of Public Schools, this school will be supported mainly, if not wholly, by public funds.

The educational and missionary work among the Freedmen in Southern Illinois, carried on for several years by the Free-Will Baptists under the auspices of this Association, has been continued with no less vigor during the past year. Their school-house at Cairo was maliciously burned last winter; but by aid of the Freedmen's Bureau, a much better one has been erected, at an expense of some three thousand dollars. The schools and missions last year were at Carbondale, Villa Ridge, Cairo, and Mound City.

They are sustained by the Western Committee of the Free-Will Baptist Churches, whose executive representatives are Rev. A. H. Chase, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Rev. D. L. Rice, of Hillsdale, Michigan.

The Freedmen who escaped into Southern Illinois during the war, and have settled there, are numerous, and need instruction no less than those in the Southern States. We are therefore glad to cooperate in the continued prosecution of these missions.

ARKANSAS.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Miss M. M. Clark, Miss Phebe A. Holmes, Miss D. F. Getman, Miss Pamelia A. Hand, Mr. James O. Lyman, Rev. Thomas E. Hughes, Mrs. Grace J. Hughes, Mrs. Mary B. Stewart, Mrs. F. O. Stith.

Number of pupils taught, 1057; reading, 1010; writing, 285; in Sunday-school, 1200; conversions, 9.

In Arkansas, we have valuable school property at Pine Bluff and Fort Smith. At the latter, our school has been large and promising under Mr. J. O. Lyman as Principal.

* Supported by Free-Will Baptists.

The house at Pine Bluff is large, and as the place is geographically central, and particularly well situated with reference to the colored population of the State, it has been thought best to locate there a Normal school. During the past year, we have had there a successful school taught by two lady teachers. The other points occupied were Helena, Batesville, Washington, and Camden. At the lastnamed place were the acceptable laborers, Rev. Thomas E. Hughes and wife, whose support is provided by the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Synod of Wisconsin. Some aid in this State has been derived from the public school fund, which by the law is to be impartially expended for both races; but in a considerable number of places the Freedmen have as yet received no benefit from this source, owing to the neglect of the officials to execute the law, as in Missouri, through indifference or malice.

The Bureau Superintendent, Captain William M. Colby, the State Superintendent, and the greater number of his circuit superintendents, cooperate heartily in endeavoring to carry out the law; but many of the local school boards are inimical to the education of the children of the Freedmen, and in several instances, by their persistent opposition, have deprived our teachers of pay expected from the public fund, and thereby increased the burden upon our treasury.

The following extract of a letter from Pine Bluff describes our school-house, and the condition of schools at the time of writing:

"I left my home (Detroit, Michigan) about the middle of October; opened school immediately upon my arrival here a week later, in the school building erected last year for the Freedmen by the Bureau. It is large and well furnished, capable of seating one hundred and fifty. We look upon it with some pride as being second to none in the State. I have at present about forty pupils, and as soon as the season for picking cotton is over, the house will probably be filled. The past five years have been hard ones for the Freedmen; but the crop this season promises better prospects for the winter, and they are, in this place, doing well now. We have a very interesting Sabbath-school.

"I close, begging your sympathy and prayers to assist us in this labor of love and duty.

D. F. GETMAN."

LOUISIANA.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Miss Anna M. Beach, Rev. John Turner, Rev. Putney Ward, Rev. James Dutch, Rev. Isaac Williams, Rev. N. Whiting.

Number of pupils taught, 450; reading, 328; writing, 158; in Sunday-school, 1000.

The Association has had no schools in Louisiana for several years past; but the military school fund, raised by General Banks while in command there, having been exhausted soon after the close of the war; and all other local aid having failed except renting of schoolhouses by the Freedmen's Bureau and tuition by the pupils; and the new State system of free schools not having gone into operation, indeed, being in such a shape as probably to require further legislation before any practical benefit can be realized; there seemed to be urgent need that the A. M. A. should come forward to supply the lack. at least temporarily. The new and efficient Bureau Superintendent, Mr. E. W. Mason, reported that there were hundreds of places remote from the large cities where the number of the colored population warranted schools, and where there had never been any. He promised hearty cooperation from the Bureau, and material aid in building houses in these locations. We had only to secure the sites, and guarantee the support of a teacher. Rev. J. W. Healy, pastor of the First Congregational church at New-Orleans, having a keen appreciation of the need, voluntarily gave us the benefit of his judgment, and spent considerable time in the spring of 1869 in the selection of eligible places. The result was, that about twelve schools were planned to open in the fall. A few were started in the spring, and continued during the summer by acclimated teachers. One of these schools is at Baton Rouge, where, by purchasing the site, a good building, constructed by the Bureau, came into our possession.

"The Normal and Collegiate Institute," under supervision of a board of local trustees, and the management of Mr. N. Whiting as Principal, has been in successful operation during the summer.

"Straight University," in New-Orleans, duly chartered, with a board of trustees embracing the governor, lieutenant-governor, and other leading citizens of Louisiana, has secured, with some aid from the A. M. A., a desirable site, and, by the help of the Bureau, is erecting a suitable building, to be ready for use by the first of November next. With our assistance in sustaining a corps of teachers, the trustees expect to start a school of the higher grade as soon as the house is completed. There is to be a Normal department, to supply teachers for the State.

Rev. J. W. Healy has been largely instrumental in the inauguration of this promising enterprise. Mr. Straight, of the Baptist denomination, having been a generous patron, the trustees have most properly given the institution his name. It is hoped some help may be had from the Peabody fund, in conducting the Normal department.

In addition to the valuable services above mentioned, Mr. Healy has assisted in organizing ten churches in Louisiana, a part of them de novo, and a part of them merely remodeled and reconstructed, by excluding the unworthy, and requiring thereafter a higher standard of morality and piety.

Of this latter, the first was a Free-Will Baptist church of New-Orleans. Since that, three others have been formed in New-Orleans, one at Gretna, and one at Algiers, each opposite the city, and six in country places. The Association will sustain schools at all these places, and assist in the support of ministers. Colored ministers have been found in the State adapted, at least approximately, to the present wants of these churches, but the churches ought soon to have pastors of better education. The rising generation, having the advantages of our schools, will demand an educated ministry. We must see that, at least, facilities for the education of ministers are provided.

The following, from a laborer in the field, is but one of many similar testimonials bearing on this subject:

CORRUPTION IN THE OLD COLORED CHURCHES.—IMMORALITY OF THE MINISTERS.

"As for the colored churches, they 'are in all things very religious;' but they have not only lost their purity, but have almost lost the idea that religion is a purifier. The colored people have just closed a meeting of eight days, not far from here. The preacher in charge was a known and acknowledged libertine; and is now, I am told, only just recovered from a sound beating he lately received from one whom he had justly offended by his lewdness. I leave you to judge for yourself of the morals of a people who will tolerate such a man as their spiritual guide. These people go to their big meetings, it appears to me, very much as they would go to a ball. There is, however, this additional attraction to their meetings: they expect their reveilings to please God and fit them in some mysterious way for the joys of heaven."

The importance to the Freedmen of establishing and fostering pure churches, with a competent ministry, can not be overestimated. The old churches formed in the times of slavery, like the old marriages, have been so disregarded and despised by the whites, and have been so indiscriminating in the admission of members—indeed, so utterly destitute of the true influence and offices of a Christian church, that it would seem that the sooner they can be substituted by new ones, or completely reorganized and supplied with a new ministry, the better. The colored ministry is, to a large extent, not only illiterate and incompetent, but, what is incomparably worse, many of them are immoral.

We hail with satisfaction and thankfulness, therefore, the promise of an efficient church-work in our South-Western States. It has been decided to engage for this work, if possible, the services of Mr. Healy.

ALABAMA.

TEACHERS.

George S. Putnam, Superintendent; Miss Ruth A. Allen, Miss Mary A. Cooley, Miss Susie A. Cooley, Miss Eliza J. Etheridge, Miss Mary E. Harris, Miss Nellie Lincoln, Miss Sarah Mahony, Miss Amelia A. Rockfellow.

Number of pupils taught, 530; number of pupils reading, 480; number of pupils writing, 400.

In order to secure greater unity in our work, the schools at Mobile were transferred to the Middle-West Department. Most of the teachers, however, were from the Western Department, and continued to report to their respective churches in Illinois and Wisconsin. Ralph Emerson, Esq., of Rockford, Ill., also continued his generous contributions in support of the "Emerson Institute," at Mobile. For a more detailed account of this institution, and of the present condition of our mission at Mobile, see the report of Secretary Crayath, under whose charge it now is.

INDIAN TERRITORY. -1869

Our Association received a formal proposition, early in the summer of this year, to undertake a mission to the Chickasaw Indians. A paper to this effect, and setting forth that there were some three thousand Freedmen in the Indian Territory, who had received no advantages of education whatever, was sent to our secretaries by Mr. G. D. James, the Superintendent for the Cherokees and Chickasaws, appointed by their legislature.

A personal interview was had with Mr. James, who also proposed that the A. M. A. send teachers for the Indian schools maintained by the Annuity Fund from the U. S. Government. There are two good school buildings, one of stone and one of brick, which, with some small log school-rooms, would meet the wants of the Indians.

The Freedmen's Bureau has engaged to put up two more good school-houses for the Freedmen, who are represented to be in a deplorable state of ignorance, without ministers or teachers.

There are no missionaries among the Chickasaws. At present they spend a considerable portion of the School Fund in sending out of the territory to schools in the States some of the more promising Indian youth; but this is very expensive, and Mr. James is exceedingly desirous that the A. M. A. establish schools in the territory. He guarantees for this purpose such land and buildings as shall be required, and three dollars per month for each Indian pupil. These propositions are favorably considered, and it is hoped that we may be able to open the schools the coming winter.

MISSISSIPPI.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS.

Rev. J. P. Bardwell, Superintendent; J. D. Backenstose, Miss H. C. Bullard, Rev. P. S. Feemster, Miss Anna C. Harwood, Miss Irene Johnson, Miss Clara A. Lewis, Miss Kate G. Slesser, Mrs J. W. Stryker, J. N. Bishop, Miss Nellie Cone, Miss Dora Ford, Miss S. P. Hulburt, A. D. Jones, Miss Anna Keen, Miss H. A. McClelland, Miss Anna M. Somers, Miss M. R. Stull, J. F. Boulden, Mrs. L. S. Dickinson, J. F. Gallaway, Miss M. L. Jarvis, Miss Mary Roberts, T. L. Riggs, Mr. J. W. Stryker, Miss Sarah E. Sweetzer, Miss Rose Trussell, Miss Maria Waterbury.

Number pupils taught, 3300; number pupils taught to read, 2750; number pupils taught to write, 1265; number pupils in Sabbath-school, 3500; number of conversions, 15.

All our schools in Mississippi have been primary, except that at Columbus, which was graded, as far as practicable, with a male principal and six other teachers. With the aid of the Bureau, the house has been greatly improved. A deed of the land has also been obtained. The school has been visited by the mayor of the city, an exgovernor, and other citizens of the State, and its examination was favorably reported in the local newspaper. Indeed, there is evidence from every source that the school, under the management of its present Principal, J. N. Bishop, is a success. Six of the more advanced pupils went out into country places this summer, at the close of the school term, to teach. It is to be hoped that this is but the beginning of an abundant supply of good Christian teachers that may be prepared here, and sent forth to the hundreds of destitute places in this State.

But Columbus, being in the extreme eastern part of the State, almost on the border, it has not been thought desirable to locate there the one Normal school which we purpose to establish in Mississippi. For this a site has been selected at Tugaloo Station, about ten miles north of Jackson, on the railroad, where the Association owns 500 acres of land and a good building. The Bureau has rendered important aid in this enterprise. It is proposed to sell to enterprising heads of families a portion of the land on easy terms of payment, and endeavor to educate their families in all that pertains to Christian homelife. A special effort will be made to benefit the women, which class has hitherto been too much neglected. But the principal feature will be a Normal department to train colored teachers—receiving for this purpose the more promising pupils from the different schools of the State.

At Port Gibson, the Association owns a good building and lot, and has a promising field for a permanent missionary work. At Natchez, we have two houses which are of little intrinsic value, but have served as a nucleus of good schools for three years, the Bureau paying the ground-rent.

At Meridian, Grenada, Brookhaven, and Aberdeen, each, we have had two teachers, but are compelled to relinquish the two latter places for want of funds, though there was no lack of interest among the Freedmen in the education of their children.

At Brookhaven, besides the satisfactory progress of the pupils generally in their studies, the lady teachers reckon since they first went there, two years since, some twenty converts, who attended the weekly prayer-meetings conducted by them, and took part in the Sabbath-school. At Aberdeen, the colored people are so enterprising as to purpose themselves, with some aid from the white citizens, sustaining two male teachers this year.

At Shubuta, the teachers met with no sympathy from the whites, and endured great hardship from the miserable condition of the house, but were encouraged by the devotion of the Freedmen, and cagerness of the children to learn. No teacher will be returned there this coming year. Substantially the same is true of Raymond, as far as relates to difficulties encountered, although the prejudice seems to be wearing away, and with the aid of the Bureau and tuition of the pupils, the school may be opened again.

The success attending the labors of our missionary for Columbus and vicinity, who devoted himself to preaching the Gospel and other direct missionary work, was not such as to warrant his continuance in that field.

Rev. J. P. Bardwell, who has been the State Superintendent of Mississippi and Arkansas for the Association, rendered a faithful and fruitful service. But, as a measure of economy, his services, as well as those of all superintendents, will be dispensed with. The Bureau superintendents are generally able to render great assistance to the Association, and willing to do so as far as consistent with their official duties.

TEXAS.

TEACHERS.

Miss Sarah M. Barnes, Miss Emma Dayton, Miss Jennie R. Foster, Miss Martha E. Green, Miss Barbara Grant, Miss Elizabeth Grant, Mrs. E. C. Porter, Miss Sarah Skinner, Mr. John O. Stewart.

Number of pupils taught, 1150; to read, 750; to write, 560; in Sunday-school, 1300; conversions, 11.

In Texas, last year, we had seven teachers only. This State has been greatly neglected, owing probably to its remoteness, together with the unsettled state of society there.

The District Secretary of the Western Department made a tour through the State in April, and came away feeling that there was a most urgent need of more teachers. He found Superintendent Welch, of the Bureau, ready to coöperate, and was assured by Gen. Reynolds, military commander of the State, that the teachers should be protected. It was therefore determined to send twenty-five or more to Texas this fall. A lot was secured in Galveston, partly by funds of the colored people obtained through the agency of one of our teachers, and partly paid from our treasury, but deeded to a local board of trustees belonging to different religious denominations, and upon it the Bureau is erecting a fine school building. Here we hope to have a Normal School, at least until one can be established in a more central place in the State. . .

SABBATH-SCHOOL WORK .- DILIGENCE OF AN OLD FREEDWOMAN.

Miss Skinner writes from Galveston:

"On our arrival here our way seemed hedged about, as we had no place in which to hold our Sabbath-school, which we have always considered the heart and soul of the work.

"Our patience was sorely tried when to the oft-repeated question of the children. Are we going to have Sabbath-school?' we were again and again compelled to return a doubtful answer. Still we trusted that the Lord would open the way for us, and we have not been disappointed; for we learned that there was, two miles from our home, a small and feeble Sabbath-school connected with the Colored M. E. Church. This seemed a providential opening. Thither we repaired, and our services were gladly accepted. The colored teachers modestly gave way to us, and took their places as learners.

"Aunt Beckey, who gave me her class, is a woman of middle age. She has never received any instruction, yet she reads the Bible understandingly. This is the result of her own patient efforts. During the war, she used to listen to her master's children as they were conning their A, B, C's, until she knew them all. Having progressed thus far, she availed herself of every leisure moment while she was watching with the sick, or performing any duty which admitted of it, to study her book, and now she has the pleasure of reading God's word. Two of our pupils walked four miles to attend Sabbath school."

The Freedmen of Houston also purchased a site, and the Bureau is building there a good school-house, to be completed this fall.

There is more readiness among the Freedmen in Texas to pay tuition than in any other of the South-Western States.

At Brownsville, Rev. Jeremiah Porter, who went there as a chaplain with the army, but with his estimable wife soon became interested in a missionary work for the inhabitants, has, with aid from the A. H. M. Society, succeeded in planting a Congregational church. Mrs. Porter, with the help of two other Christian ladies, all commissioned by A. M. A., has established a successful Protestant school in the midst of Roman Catholic influences. There is good prospect also that a school and church for the Freedmen will be started there this

There are several other places in Texas which hold out great encouragement for permanent educational or church enterprises.

Letter from John O. Stevenson, Port Lavacca, Texas:

PUBLIC SPIRIT OF FREEDMEN.-HELP THOSE WHO HELP THEMSELVES.

"Neither are the Freedmen devoid of public spirit, for I know that some have given five dollars, specie, and some, weeks of labor, to assist in opening a channel from Matagorda Bay up to Lavacca wharf.

from Matagorda Bay up to Lavacca wharf.

"One little boy went to work and made several dollars, which he saved to pay board, books, and schooling. Many were the bright faces and glad hearts the day I got back, and many were the ejaculations of 'Thank God!'

"I will try to open night-school in December, to satisfy the urgent request of the young men. Sabbath-school numbered 65 last Sunday. I was agreeably surprised by a little girl asking what was the reason I never asked a collection from the children to assist the church. I never thought of any such thing, so I joyfully told them to take up a collection; and they raised $4, in dimes and picayunes. I asked them what they wished to do with it. One proposed that a pail and dipper should be bought. Agreed to. Another, a broom. Also agreed to. A little girl proposed a cowhide for bad boys. Motion lost. Another proposed that what was left should be kept until, by future collection, they should raise enough to buy Sunday school papers. Agreed to. And so we go on, poor but happy most of the

RECAPITULATION.

It will have been seen that, in the Western Department, exclusive of Mobile, there is but one graded school-that at Columbus, Miss., and this is the only one having any claim to be called a high-school. But as the foundations have been laid, it is confidently expected that, before the end of another year, with the divine blessing, there will be, at least, one besides this in each of the South-Western States.

Total number taught to read, (approximate,) 12,238; to write, 6186; number of churches gathered or reorganized, and materially aided by A. M. A., in these States, 15; number of converts among the pupils, reported, 35. C. H. HOWARD.

CHURCHES.

The church at Brainerd has been somewhat disturbed by the revival of African superstitions. Rev. John Thompson, its pastor, writes:

"During the last year we have been much annoyed by the frequent visits of Obeah men in this neighborhood, and some in the church have been hurt thereby. By a merciful providence we were able to detect the evil doings of one of those men in the house of one of our own members, just in time to prevent the development of his evil deeds.

"From my long experience of men and things in this land, I am persuaded that the missionary can do no better work than to go from house to house preaching 'Jesus Christ and Him crucified,' and confront the enemy with the Gospel.

"Our chapel and mission-house are undergoing considerable repairs, toward which we have collected and expended about £20, and we shall need a further and larger sum. This accounts for the diminution in the missionary collections this year, which I hope may not occur again.

"In the church we enjoy much harmony and love; our meetings are felt to be good and profitable, particularly the prayer-meetings, yet now and again we have to weep because of some who 'walk disorderly,' whom we 'reprove and rebuke with all long-suffering and doctrine."

In the continued ill-health of Mr. Venning, Mr. Wilson makes a report of three stations, Chesterfield, Brandon Hill, and Providence. Mr. Venning has been more or less ill throughout the year; but has been able to have a general oversight of the work, and for a considerable part of the time to preach. In consequence of his inability to perform the usual amount of pastoral labor, his church has not done as well as he expected. Mr. Wilson says:

"You will observe that a few members have been added to each of the churches reported, and although we have lost some, yet we stand a little ahead of what we were last year; it may not seem much, but to us who have to labor so hard to make it what it is, the little advance is very gratifying.

"I do not think there has been as much activity in our churches this year as usual; perhaps it is because they have had less opposition and have felt less need of exertion to overcome it. But things are springing up about us that must push them into more activity, unless they suffer themselves to be overcome by them. A rum-shop has been opened not very far from us, with other evil influences connected with it, as dancing and gambling, and on the third of August a horse-race (the first I have known in the community) came off, with betting, etc. All these things are making the church feel they must stir themselves to break them up, and to produce something better. The best prayer-meeting we have had was the first one after the horse-race. I was glad to hear the members of the church express themselves so decidedly against these things, and that they seemed so anxious for the welfare of the community. They seemed to feel that Satan was busy, and that they must be busy too.

"Our school here numbers forty on the list, and the average attendance is twenty-one. The school at Chesterfield numbers thirty-nine on the list, but the twenty-one. The school at Chesterheid numbers thirty-nine on the list, but the average is twenty-two. There is a flourishing school at Camberwell, under the care of Brother Venning, and taught by one of his former teachers, John Philips, that averages over fifty. I have just opened a school at Providence. The people seemed very anxious to have the school opened again, and, as we are giving them a male teacher, I hope the school will do well."

Mr. Starbuck writes:

"There is absolutely nothing of interest to report for the past year, except a gradual though not marked increase of the average attendance, and a slight augmentation of the number of members. There has been little to discourage and little to encourage. The Sunday-school is somewhat smaller; but as this is in consequence of removals, it does not indicate decline of interest, and indeed this still remains perhaps the most interesting part of our means of doing good."

STATIONS AND OUT-STATIONS.—Good Hope, (Sherbro Island,) Avery, Läwäna.

MISSIONARIES.-Rev. G. P. Claffin, Mr. D. W. Burton, C. S. Mattison, Mrs. Claffin, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Mair.

NATIVE ASSISTANTS .- Rev. G. N. Jewett, Daniel During.

Rev. Mr. Claffin and wife, who were in this country at the date of the last report, have not yet returned to Africa, although they expect to embark this fall. They hope to be accompanied by a female assistant from Ohio.

Mr. C. S. Mattison, who had been connected with our mission work in the South, sailed for Africa in September. The arrival of the brig in which he sailed to Africa has been reported in the papers, but no letters from him have been received.

Mrs. Mair has been absent (at her former home, Scotland) during the year, and Mrs. Burton returned to this country in June, both leaving the mission on account of impaired health.

This recital shows that the mission has been in a feeble condition throughout the year, and little real progress could be reasonably expected. "Indeed, the hearts of the few laborers on the ground, though occasionally cheered by hope, have been greatly saddened by the defection of some young persons, trained at the mission, who until now have given them much real comfort.

Your committee are encouraged by the fact that some young men and women of piety and of promising talents, now under training at our mission-schools in the South, are fixing their hearts on Africa as their field of labor for their race and for Christ.

We confidently hope that many will follow them; but they will need further training before engaging in this work, and for some years to come it will be impossible to meet the wants of Africa from this class alone. Are there not men now in the ministry, or just prepared to enter it, whose "marching orders," properly understood, direct them to this field?

The great commission includes Africa in its scope. Her doors are thrown wide open; her wailing cry for the Gospel and its institutions is heard. Who will respond to the command of the Master, "Here am I; send me"?

SUPERINTENDENT OF COMMON AND SABBATH-SCHOOLS: P. Niu.

Referring to his account of the Female Seminary, as given last year, Rev. J. S. Green, in his report, dated July 19th, 1869, says:

"With unfeigned sorrow I report the destruction of the seminary buildings, school-house, eating and sleeping-rooms, cook-house, the greater part of the furniture, the piano, melodeons, school and music books, and nearly all the bedding and clothing of the sixty-five pupils belonging to the schools—all destroyed by fire in a few minutes, Sabbath day, June 6th. The loss is little, if any, short of ten thousand dollars.

"While we mourn the loss of property, and more than all, the breaking up of the school for a long time to come, if not permanently, we have occasion for gratitude that none of the children were lost or injured. All but one, and she was slightly ill, sat before me in the house of God. They had just finished reciting their Scripture lessons, and I had risen to commence the exercises of the afternoon, when the cry, 'Fire at the Seminary!' broke upon our ears. The congregation rose en masse, rushed from the house, and hastened to the burning building.

"The fire originated in a small bathing-house, at a little distance from the school building, to the windward, where a fire had never been known to be kindled. The wind being very high, and every thing very dry, in a few moments a blackened mass was all that was lett of our beautiful seminary.

"The loss has awakened a generous sympathy in the island community, and there seems to be a determination to rebuild it without delay. How this will be remains to be seen. That the school was a very popular and a very useful institution can not be doubted.

"Although the Hawaiian language was not entirely neglected, the English was mainly taught, and the girls were successfully and rapidly acquiring a knowledge of it. There is an increasing demand for the study of our noble language. The native race is so rapidly decreasing, and foreigners and half-castes proportionately increasing, that the study and knowledge of English may, ere many years, become well-nigh an absolute necessity."

To show the rapidity with which the native population is decreasing, Mr. Green contrasts the schools of last year with those of 1843-4:

"In May, 1843, we numbered 706 pupils, who appeared at our examination; in September, 729; and in January of the next year, 792. From this date the decrease has been constant, till June 30th of the present year, when 170 only appeared at our public examination. The present is an unusually sickly season, and a few children may have been unable to attend the examination. Still I doubt whether 200 children of suitable age to attend school can be found from Huelo to Keokea."

A school under government auspices has been opened during the year at Mahawao, designed as a boarding and a manual labor school, the pupils of which attend the Sabbath-school of this mission; and until the loss of the seminary building last year, the pupils of these two schools, numbering nearly 700, constituted the most interesting part of the Sabbath afternoon congregation.

Mr. Green states many facts in confirmation of his belief that the policy of substituting native pastors for missionaries was a mistaken one, and is working disastrously, confiding the churches to the care of unsuitable men, laying aside experienced missionaries, and keeping their sons out of the ministry.

He concludes his report as follows:

labors in this department are not in vain. Native congregation has decreased from the loss of the seminary, and the sickness and death of the people. Additions by profession, ten; and two by letter. Several individuals propounded at Huelo.

"We mourn the loss of several of our most promising people, of whom we have hope that they died in the Lord, and have found it their eternal gain. In the bonds of the Gospel, your brother,

J. S. GREEN."

STAM MISSION.

Missionaries: Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D., Mrs. S. B. Bradley; Mr. George Graham, Assistant.

As in a number of previous years, this mission has been nearly self-sustaining in the use of the printer's presses, payment for the medical services of Dr. Bradley, etc. The services of Mr. Graham in the printing-office have contributed to this result.

In the ultimate object of missionary labor, the conversion of men to Christ, no visible results are reported. Dr. Bradley says that in his missionary experience of thirty-four years he has never witnessed such perfect deadness in sin and ruin as now. The Siamese expect innumerable ages of most intense suffering after this life, yet give no heed to the Gospel that offers free and full salvation from all sin and suffering.

It can not be but that the Gospel has been faithfully preached there by the missionaries of the various societies represented in that field; and only a few, a very few, hopeful conversions have yet been witnessed. The harvest is not yet.

Our missionaries say, "It can not be that God is giving us all lively hopes of glorious success, to blast them at last. He will ere long, in due time, come to redeem Siam.

"May he give us more of the faith of the patriarchs, who, though waiting long, faltered not at the word of promise."

CONCLUSION.

We close this report with the deep conviction that our labors during the year have not been in vain.

Not only do we believe that the workers in the field have been faithful and efficient, but that the work itself is vital to the welfare of the country and important to the progress of Christianity in the world. Emancipation cast forth millions of people without homes or help. Justice, humanity, and religion united in an earnest call that they be saved from perishing in body and soul. They immediately came to sustain new and critical relations to the state; and patriotism demanded that they be educated up to their new position. These urgent calls this association has most earnestly endeavored to meet.

[&]quot;Our English congregation is on the increase, and hope is entertained that

But deeply as we feel the importance of the work already done, we feel much more profoundly the need of doing still more. The colored people are toiling hard to get homes and lands; but the mass are yet without either. They are striving diligently and successfully to become educated; but many are still unable to read: and few are competent to the high responsibilities of life and citizenship. They are receiving gladly the knowledge of a better Christian life; but many still imagine that excitement is religion, while vice threatens their ruin! It is still an open question whether they will sink or rise; whether they will be a burden to be increased by the incoming heathen from China, or a power to help win those heathen to Christ.

Trusting in God, we shall go on with our work. Though we are oppressed with a heavy debt, we believe Christians and philanthropists will stand by us. Too much sympathy has been felt; too many prayers offered; too much money given. Too plainly do thoughtful people see the danger of leaving the colored man to be the victim of vice, demagogues, or papists. Too deeply do Christians feel the need of caring for the ignorant masses now with us, and the more dangerous masses coming among us. Too many praying hearts have throbbed with joy at the thought that the freedmen were to bear the Gospel to Africa to suffer any approved instrumentality for these ends to be crippled. We will trust in God, who has hitherto helped us, and go forward.

they be as of those resistance to bedroud South. They immediately

ANNUAL DISCOURSE.

BY REV. J. M. STURTEVANT.

THE CRISIS OF THE HOUR.

"AND now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire."-MATT.

I HAVE given this text in the rendering of our English version. I need not, however, say to this audience, that it falls much short of the vivid expressiveness of the original. These are the words of John the Baptist, addressed to the multitudes who thronged to his preaching, and assign one of the reasons by which he enforced the necessity of a mighty moral reformation, as preparatory to the coming of the promised Messiah. Already even, he meant to say, the ax is lying at the root of the trees. It lies there, ready to the woodman's hand. Every tree, therefore, that at this time does not produce good fruit shall be cut down and cast into the fire. John seems not at all to have taken the view of the coming of the Anointed One so confidently vaunted by many in our day, that it was to be the indiscriminate salvation of all. In that refined philosophy of the nineteenth century this sturdy reformer does not seem to have been schooled. He seems to have thought, with Malachi and the older prophets, that this Desire of all nations would come with mighty discrimination; with mighty saving efficacy, indeed, to the penitent, but with quick and certain destruction to the impenitent. By the consideration of this fearful discrimination, was his own zeal in delivering his message quickened, and by the apprehension of it did he seek to awaken men to the necessity of repentance.

With a like solemn sense of the mighty discriminating power which attends the Gospel, has every true preacher, in every age, delivered his message. With Paul he has seen that he was a savor of life unto life in them that believe, and of death unto death in them that perish.

How speedily were these apprehensions of John the Baptist fulfilled! The Jews, as a people, with their rulers, rejected the promised Messiah, and raised the cry, "Crucify him, crucify him!" The deed was done, and the ruin that followed is a tale of horror, which will re-
